Mr. BLANTON. Especially at Government expense. All these labor unions and chambers of commerce expect their Senators and Representatives to answer their communications and tell them what they expect to do with regard to the legislation referred to. Why, I dare say it would take the services of an extra stenographic clerk to every Member to answer the communications that Members have received within the last week on this particular item.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the gentleman answer one of the telegrams?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I answered one; and if I had time I would like to put my answer in the RECORD.

Mr. EAGAN. Read it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you what I answered, Mr. Chairman. When I received, through Secretary Morrison, a copy of the cablegram from Mr. Samuel Gompers, in France, telling us that it would be well for the Members of Congress not only to uphold this public-service employment amendment that is to be offered, but every other species of legislation that was within the labor program, otherwise we could expect a revolution in this country from the returned soldier boys later on, I answered a paper in my district and told them that it was not the returned soldier boys that we had to fear in that respect; that it was not the returned soldier boys from France who caused 6,000 strikes to occur within the United States by organized labor between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, during this war. I have a statement from the Department of Labor here in my pocket showing that within that time, during this war, there were 6,000 strikes in this country by labor organizations, of an average duration of 18 days each. I told this same paper that it was not the returned soldier boys who, when this Congress spoke in no uncertain terms on what is known as the Borland amendment, which was a good piece of legislation, providing that the 240,000 clerks and employees of this Government should in war time work eight hours a day to be entitled to the $120 blanket raise in salary—I told them it was not the returned soldier boys who came to the President of the United States the next day and to the papers of Washington and said, "If that bill is not vetoed we will march on the Capitol and walk out and quit our positions and cripple every department of this Government."

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Surely the gentleman from Texas does not want to leave the impression that organized labor during the period of the war did not try to do its part?

Mr. BLANTON. There were certain members of organized labor who were loyal to the core, who went to France and worked in the trenches at $33 a month without a murmur; but it was some of the members of organized labor who stayed here at home who made the trouble.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I offer this amendment not only to cure abuses in that department but in others. The abuses I refer to are as prevalent in many other departments, and the useless expenditure of Government money is just as great in the other departments.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry that my argument should embarrass the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, when the amendment is offered, as it will be offered later, we will be glad to give the gentleman all the time that the House then has at disposal, and I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa about the amendment. If I understand him correctly, I am very much in sympathy with him. I understand the purpose of his amendment is to prevent any department of the Government from sending out messages suggesting to organizations or individuals that they wire or write touching legislative matters. Is that correct?

Mr. GOOD. The amendment goes that far in some respects and in some respects it does not go that far. The amendment is a limitation only on appropriations contained in this bill, and specifically provides that no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for personal services or advertisement, or sending telegrams, letters, or circulars designed to affect legislation or appropriations, unless the money is specifically appropriated for such purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will prevent, if I understand it, inserting advertisements in the papers from this fund.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In other words, the gentleman is striking, if I understand correctly, at the efforts of departments here to initiate movements.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely, and have it appear to the person receiving the telegram that the movement originated back home, whereas it originated in the department here in Washington. A man in Tennessee receives from some department a telegram to wire his Senator or Representative in Congress to vote for an appropriation. The Member receiving the telegram at first does not know that the telegram really originated here in Washington, but when he commences to receive them by the hundreds he knows then that the whole propaganda originated here, and thousands of dollars and the services of many clerks are used to promote this kind of propaganda. The only objection that gentlemen will have to the amendment is that it only applies to the money appropriated in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, of the Good amendment, after the word "this," insert the words "or any other."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is clearly subject to a point of order. The purpose of the amendment is to extend the provision of this amendment to all appropriations. It will be merely a camouflage amendment if it is inserted here to apply only to this bill, because it will be futile. There is no money, or very little, that can be used for this purpose. Let us make it mean something. The legislative appropriation bill, agreed to in conference, carried a Senate amendment to which I wish to direct special attention, because the abuse sought to be corrected was adverted to yesterday afternoon, and that is to prohibit the publication of all these numerous periodicals and pamphlets that are being issued by the publicity agencies and sent broadcast throughout the country at a tremendous expense to the Treasury. It provides that all publications, periodicals, journals, magazines that are printed by any governmental agency shall be discontinued unless specifically authorized by Congress. There are connected with the Government 47 publicity bureaus, and every one, on occasions, resorts to the practice that is sought to be discontinued by the pending amendment. Recently the Bureau of Education sent out propaganda to the leaders of education advocating the establishment of a department of education and suggesting an appeal to Members of Congress when there is no chance whatever for its consideration. There has been no bill reported, and yet we have been receiving letters by the score already that had their genesis here in the Bureau of Education.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know to what extend this would go in preventing the franking privilege. I presume we do not wish to prevent the Educational Bureau from using the frank for proper purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will it go to the extent of preventing that in any way?

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman refer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa or the provision in the legislative bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am referring to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa as applied to the present law.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; as I read the amendment it would not prevent in any wise the distribution of proper matter, printed matter, circulars concerning their activities, but it would prohibit their sending out circulars under postage or frank at Government expense——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Urging somebody to vote for something, and with that I am in sympathy.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It would stop Members of Congress from sending wires to people to vote for their bills. If it does not, I think the gentleman ought to amend it. It ought to include Members of Congress who telegraph under their frank to other Members asking them to support bills. I received a telegram when at home from a Member of Congress urging me to come back and give them a vote on this or that proposition, and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not go to that extent.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Do not assume for ourselves something that we are not willing to give to the departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. We ought not to be placed upon a parity with them in this respect.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Let us be on the level. I will vote for it if it will include Members of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the telegram is used to get a quorum, and to get people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The case instanced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] is not on all fours with the abuse sought to be corrected. Undoubtedly the gentleman on rare occasions may have received a telegram from the Democratic whip to return to vote on some proposition. That is entirely proper, but the abuse sought to be corrected here is in appropriating money to Government officials to use as a back fire upon Members of Congress.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman say that the Democratic or the Republican whip has the franking privilege when they send telegrams to Members?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for one minute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how much time would that allow to me?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that it would allow anything to the gentleman. The Chair has the power of recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want sufficient time in which to read a telegram—three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman either object or not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then I move that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 71, noes 1.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members present, a quorum.

So the motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin a few moments ago to say that the Democratic whip and the Republican whip in sending telegrams to absent Members have the franking privilege for those telegrams. Is that true?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I was replying to the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]——

Mr. GALLIVAN. I said nothing about whips.

Mr. STAFFORD. He referred to telegrams which he has received urging him to return. Those occasions must have been very rare, because he is generally here.

Mr. KEARNS. Has the Democratic whip or the Republican whip the franking privilege when sending for absent Members?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Of course they have.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. They are performing public business.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They have not the franking privilege on telegrams.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with the practice of the Republican or the Democratic whips in sending telegrams. I know this: That the contingent fund of the House is used for the payment of official telegrams sent by Members of Congress to their constituents or to other persons throughout the country.

Mr. KEARNS. If they have the franking privilege——

Mr. STAFFORD. The franking privilege does not extend to telegrams. It extends only to letters.

Mr. KEARNS. I want to say that I have a protest that I desire to make, because the Republican whip sent me a telegram collect, on which I had to pay 78 cents. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I think the gentleman has a good case against the Republican whip.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The whips send telegrams under the head of official business whenever it is official business and they are paid for by the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At Government rates.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; at Government rates.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts asked me awhile ago if I answered all of these telegrams that I received. I did answer them, and among such answers I sent one by telegram in particular, which, in my time, I want to read.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Before the gentleman begins, will he yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Was this a Government message, charged to the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. I refuse to yield right now. That telegram is as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1919.

SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS,
San Antonio, Tex.:

Kindly permit me to publicly answer a 1,000-word telegram just received from Director J. F. Carl. Sundry civil bill continues Employment Service until July. This service in Texas is beneficial, worthy, and ideal. Not so in many other States. It is not the returning soldier boys who are now demanding that this service be made permanent, adding an extra ten million appropriation for coming year, but it is members of organized labor who didn't enlist or fight, but who claimed industrial exemptions, and who during entire war have drawn higher wages than ever dreamed of before, as high as $11 per day, more than the salary of the governor of Texas, while our fighting boys in trenches were paid only $33 per month. When Gen. Crowder ordered all men to "work or fight," it was Samuel Gompers and this same bunch who threateningly told him that he could not apply the work-or-fight order to organized labor, and thus forced the drafting of boys 18 years old. When Congress required the 240,000 Government clerks, drawing annual salaries up to $2,500, to work eight hours per day during the war, it was this same bunch who forced President Wilson to veto this eight-hour provision by thousands of such employees threatening to march on the Capitol and threatening to quit work and thus crippling every department of Government in war time. Statistics in Labor Bureau show that during war, April 6, 1917, until armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, there were in the United States 6,000 strikes by members of organized labor, lasting an average of 17 days' duration.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I will not yield.

In several Southern States, where farming is absolutely dependent upon negro labor, Government representatives of this Employment Service have induced thousands of negroes to leave farms and have unionized them in cities. The editor of the Employment Service Bulletin here has lately wired the unions and chambers of commerce throughout my district urging them to insist on my supporting this union program, and it takes an extra stenographer to answer such communications from labor unions. Although 45 States have ratified the prohibition amendment, and it is a part of our Constitution, these same labor unions are arranging a strike against the Constitution of the United States on July 1. They also defied law and the courts of California.

Mr. Samuel Gompers has cabled us to support this and other union measures, insinuating that a failure to do so might cause a revolution of the discontented labor members here. It has now reached a point when Congress must decide whether America and its Government is to be run in the interests of its 110,000,000 people or run solely by Samuel Gompers in the selfish interests of 3,000,000 members of labor unions. The success of a doctor, lawyer, preacher, teacher, Congressman, merchant, farmer, and public officer depends entirely upon his ability, efficiency, and class of service given, but the 3,000,000 members of unions depend solely upon Samuel Gompers, union card, power of strike, and revolution——

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. The point of order is that the gentleman can not read a document without the permission of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I am reading in my own time, and I ask that this be not taken out of my time.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman can not read from a document without the consent of the House.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman must make that point before the other gentleman starts reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allotted to the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But three minutes remains of the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert the balance of this telegram.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall object to its going into the RECORD unless everything shows on the telegram; and if it was sent at Government expense, that that goes into the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I will put it in just like it is.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Was it sent at Government expense?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer that if the gentleman will get me time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Oh, that does not take any time; that only takes half a second.

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer if the gentleman will get me two minutes time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Give him the time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object—all right——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will get me the time to answer I will answer.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have asked the question whether that wire was sent at Government expense or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] to proceed for three minutes, being the only time remaining of the allotment upon this subject.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not believe that I can sit still in my seat and listen to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] indicting the union labor men of this country. I have not always agreed with Mr. Samuel Gompers, and on several occasions I have taken issue with him right here on the floor of the House, but when the gentleman from Texas intimates that organized labor of this country caused all of these strikes and did not do their part in the winning of this war, he makes a misstatement which he can not prove by the facts. There is no body of men in this country who lent their heartiest support to the prosecution and winning of this war more than the workingmen of this country. Who was it who made all the ammunition, the arms, and the guns; who was it who kept our railroad trains running section after section to the seacoast towns, so that the docks were piled up with provisions, ammunition, and guns for the soldiers abroad who were fighting our battles? Was it not the workingmen of this country? I want to say to you that no man in this land did more to keep organized labor in line and did more in the prosecution and winning of this war than did Mr. Samuel Gompers. [Applause.] If it had not been for the efforts of Mr. Gompers the Bolsheviki and the I. W. W.'s would have had their way in this country and the wheels of industry would have been clogged and we would not have had——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No, not now; the gentleman would not yield, but wants to talk all the time. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I come from a section that is probably one of the greatest industrial districts of this country. I know how the organized labor men felt regarding the prosecution of this war up in my section, for that great industrial section, the Mahoning Valley, which takes in the cities of Youngstown, Niles, Warren, and the great steel industrial centers there, sent 22,000 men into the service, and a large majority of those men were men who came out of the factories, the mills, and the workshops, and the mines, and it ill becomes the gentleman from Texas to stand here on this floor and charge that organized labor did not do their part during the great crisis which we have passed through. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by having it appear as a new section, section 4, instead of as a new paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in riders upon an appropriation bill. I think they are a mistake, but the House seems to want to legislate on this matter. If they do, I am willing for the House to express its opinion, and I will not make the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who asks leave to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD modifies his amendment so it will read: "Page 49, end of line 3, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for any personal services or to pay for any advertisement, telegram, letter, or circular designed to defeat or enact any proposed legislation by Congress or to influence any Member of Congress in his vote on any appropriation unless specifically authorized."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that on the ground it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no reservation of the point of order. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the House agreed to an amendment which I offered, to pay certain salaries and clerk hire. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment which was agreed to by inserting after the word "amounts" the words "for salary, respectively," so that the deductions which may have been paid to Members of the House who went into the Army shall be from the salary and not from the clerk hire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he offered be modified as indicated. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. MANN: After the word "amounts" insert "for salary, respectively."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I do not know of a more embarrassing proposition that has been thrust upon me during my term of service here than that which was proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago. I am sure it is embarrassing to every Member. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois has been agreed to. As a matter of fact, those gentlemen who left the House of Representatives and accepted commissions in the Army, under all the holdings of the past as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary following an investigation of precedents made in order by a resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] calling upon them for a report, forfeited their seats as Members of the House of Representatives. I say those who accepted commissions. Those who went as privates, of course, occupied a different status.

Now, there is not any doubt about that. There is not any doubt in the mind of any gentleman here. Here, unfortunately, is what, because of our unwillingness to engage in an ungracious act, we are doing: We are providing an entirely different plane for men who left the House of Representatives and went into the Army from those who left other departments of the Government and went into the Army. I have no doubt, so far as I am personally concerned, of the correctness of the report made by the Committee on the Judiciary. I have no doubt that they were correct under the precedents; I have no doubt they were right under the reasoning. I did not make the point of order. It would have been an ungracious thing to do, it would have been an exceedingly objectionable thing to do to the membership of the House, and yet this opportunity having arisen to express myself, I wish to take advantage of it to say that I did not approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole. I understand there was one Member of the House [Mr. JONES] who entered the Army who asked that there be no appropriation made for his salary or clerk hire. I am glad of that. To sacrifice is one thing; to not sacrifice is an entirely different thing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to say. Of course, the amendment is passed now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to speak for five minutes on this subject.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is made that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is there objection to the request I made to modify the amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I reserved the right to object, and I suggest the gentleman from New Jersey can do the same thing and have some time.

Mr. MANN. If there is going to be any objection to it——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is really necessary that this should be discussed for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I am willing for the gentleman to discuss it, but I want to know if there is objection to the modification of the proposition that I just submitted?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to that, the other matter having gone through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the modification and correction being made, and it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to understand the last decision that was had with reference to this matter of Army service of Members of Congress and their pay.

The Constitution of the United States provides that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during the continuance of that office. During the Spanish-American War several Members of this House went into the war, which was a very temporary affair, as officers of Volunteers, and a resolution was offered, which went before the Committee on the Judiciary, inquiring whether they had forfeited their seats. There had been a good deal of contradictory practice in the House of Representatives before that time, during the Civil War, and no one had ever actually been turned out of the House. The provision of the Constitution is different from that of the statute in England. In England, if any member of Parliament accepts any office under the Crown, the statute declares his seat vacant and forfeited, and that a writ of election shall immediately issue. Our Constitution does not say that the seat is forfeited forever. It simply says that no one holding office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during the continuance of his office. When this matter came before the Committee on the Judiciary, then presided over by Mr. Henderson, a resolution was reported by the majority of the committee that each of these Members, of whom Gen. Wheeler was one, had forfeited his seat. I filed a minority report, to protect these officers, suggesting that the Constitution recognized the necessity sometimes of using Members of Congress for temporary employment. The United States had sent Senators over as commissioners to Europe in order to negotiate peace and had sent Mr. Dingley to Canada as commissioner to negotiate a treaty. And while I acknowledged and believed that during the continuance of such office under the United States, such temporary office, the man was not in Congress and could not draw his pay or emoluments here, yet I insisted that if no notice was taken by Congress or by the States of the fact that the vacancy existed, the membership was only suspended and the Member could come back to his seat again.

This matter never came to decision on the merits. When the resolution was moved in the House, a veteran of the Civil War, Mr. Lacey, of Iowa, raised the question of consideration, and under the question of consideration the House refused to consider the fact that these Members had left for this temporary service. At the same time it was ruled by the Speaker, Mr. Reed then being Speaker, that he would sign no warrants for pay while they were away as officers of the Army, and while their offices continued they received Army pay, but no payment was made to any Member of Congress who went into the Army of his salary as Member during his absence. Those who returned retook their seats after discharge from the Army as officers, and went on with their duties and received their salary as Members here, as some of the present Members already have done.

Those were the facts at that time. I am not making any argument. But my theory, as I say, was that under the Constitution during the continuance of this temporary duty they should receive Army pay, but were not Members of the House or entitled to salary as such. I believe that is all I have to say.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the last section, section 4, read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That this act hereafter may be refererd to as the "third deficiency appropriation act, 1919."

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 27, in order to precede the amendment that was offered by Mr. WALSH and adopted by the committee, with the heading "Ores, Metals, and Minerals." He offered an amendment which, if it would appear in the bill without a heading, would seem to make it relate to a matter of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, to which, of course, it has no relation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the committee return to page 27 for the purpose of offering a correcting amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 27, to precede the amendment of Mr. WALSH, insert as a center head the following: "Ores, Metals, and Minerals."

Mr. SHERLEY. That is simply a subhead in the bill to make the amendment relate properly. I ask unanimous consent that "Section 4" be changed to "Section 5."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that "Section 4" be changed to read "Section 5" in the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want this section 4 to remain in the bill as it is—"third deficiency appropriation act"?

Mr. SHERLEY. Personally I have no opinion one way or the other. The reason we adopted the enumeration of deficiency bills was that during the war a bill would come in as a deficiency, and then there would come in another and another deficiency, and it was rather hard always to identify them. There has been in this year 1919 no general deficiency, and I personally do not object to its being designated as the "general deficiency appropriation act, 1919."

Mr. MANN. I really think that officers of the Government would not be misled, and probably that is the most important consideration. But where you say "third deficiency appropriation act, 1919," the ordinary individual would suppose that you meant the calendar year 1919. Of course, what you mean is the fiscal year 1919, because this is not the third deficiency appropriation act of this calendar year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, that could be cleared up by inserting the words "fiscal year" in front of "1919."

Mr. MANN. It could.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that meets with the gentleman's view, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to amend it so as to read, "third deficiency appropriation act, fiscal year 1919." I suggest that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 49, line 5, after the word "act," insert "fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing data in connection with the report on the extension and completion of the Capitol Building.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by making the insertions of which he has spoken. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In connection with the extension of the gentleman's remarks on the proposed commission looking toward the revision of our financial system, does the gentleman intend to incorporate part of the report made by the committee in Great Britain?

Mr. SHERLEY. In regard to the question of the budget, about which the gentleman is asking, I shall be very glad to place in the RECORD, by the permission of the House, in connection with my remarks on the budget, part of the ninth report, I think it is, of a special committee of Parliament on the question of reform of procedure.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman had permission to extend his remarks, and I wanted to know if he would put that in.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope to put in part of that report.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Mann amendment, relative to the payment of salaries to Members of Congress who were in the military service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that a separate vote be had on the Mann amendment. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the other amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Mann amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 37, after line 17, insert:
"To pay ALBERT JOHNSON, for salary, $1,442.98, for clerk hire, $333.32; TOM CONNALLY, for clerk hire, $399.92; CARL HAYDEN, for salary, $1,176.37, for clerk hire, $333.32; FIORELLA H. LAGUARDIA, for salary, $9,486.31, for clerk hire, $1,666.60; VICTOR HEINTZ, for salary, $10,583.90, for clerk sire, $1,992.92; ROYAL C. JOHNSON, for salary, $7,171.23, for clerk hire, $999.92: Provided, That there shall be deducted from such amounts any money received by any of the above-named as compensation for service in the Army during the present emergency, and the affidavits of the above-named persons shall be accepted as proof as to whether or not any such payments have been received by them. In all, $35,593.79."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 29.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays; and, pending that, I make the point of order that there is no quorum of the House present.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to make both of them at once. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 120, answered present 4, not voting 75, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE (H. REPT. NO. 1136, PT. 2).

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill to amend the war-risk insurance act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill to amend the war-risk insurance act. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENTRY OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, presented joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438, H. Rept. 1153) to permit entry of distilled spirits shipped to the United States prior to September 9, 1917, and wines and other nonspirituous alcoholic beverages so shipped prior to January 1, 1919.

DAMS ACROSS NAVIGABLE WATERS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1147).

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up conference report on the bill S. 1419, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this conference report has never been presented in the House for consideration in its entirety and therefore I object.

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report and statement.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal Power Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission), which shall be composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. Two members of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and the commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. The President shall designate the chairman of the commission.

"SEC. 2. That the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and prescribe his duties. The work of the commission shall, in so far as practicable, be performed by and through the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture and their clerical forces.

"All of the expenses of the commission, including rent in the District of Columbia, all necessary expenses for transportation and subsistence, including in the discretion of the commission a per diem of not exceeding $4 per day in lieu of subsistence incurred by the commissioners or by their employees under their orders in making any investigation, or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose; and in order to defray the expenses made necessary by the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as Congress may hereafter determine, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, to be paid out upon warrants drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury upon order of the commission.

"SEC. 3. That the words defined in this section shall have the following meanings when found in this act, to wit:

"'Public lands' means such lands and interest in lands owned by the United States as are subject to private appropriation and disposal under public-land laws. It shall not include 'reservations,' as hereinafter defined.

"'Reservations' means lands and interest in lands owned by the United States and withdrawn, reserved, or withheld from private appropriation and disposal upon the public-land laws and lands and interest in lands acquired and held for any public purpose.

"'Corporation' means a corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States empowered to develop, transmit, distribute, sell, lease, or utilize power in addition to such other powers as it may possess, and authorized to transact in the State or States in which its project is located all business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act. It shall not include 'municipalities' as hereinafter defined.

"'State' means a State admitted to the Union, the District of Columbia, and any organized Territory of the United States.

"'Municipality' means a city, county, irrigation district, drainage district, or other political subdivision or agency of a State competing under the laws thereof to carry on the business of developing, transmitting, utilizing, or distributing power.

"That the term 'navigable waters' as used in this act and as applied to streams shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or which through improvement heretofore or hereafter made have been or shall become usable in such commerce.

"'Municipal purposes' means and includes all purposes within municipal powers as defined by the constitution or laws of the State or by the charter of the municipality.

"'Government dam' means a dam or other work constructed or owned by the United States for Government purposes, with or without contribution from others, from which flows surplus water not needed for Government purposes that may be disposed of under the provisions of this act.

"'Project' means a complete unit of improvement or development, consisting of a power house, all water conduits, all dams and appurtenant works and structures (including navigation structures) which are a part of said unit, and all storage, diverting, or forebay reservoirs directly connected therewith, the primary line or lines transmitting power therefrom to the point of junction with the distribution system or with the interconnected primary transmission system, all miscellaneous structures used and useful in connection with said unit or any part thereof, and all water rights, rights of way, ditches, dams, reservoirs, lands, or interest in lands, the use and occupancy of which are necessary or appropriate in the maintenance and operation of such unit.

"'Project works' means the physical structures of a project.

"'Net investment' in a project means the actual legitimate original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the 'Classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission,' plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for additions or betterments. The term 'cost' shall include, in so far as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others.

"SEC. 4. That the commission is hereby authorized and empowered—

"(a) To make investigations and to collect and record data concerning the power industry and its relation to other industries and to interstate or foreign commerce, and concerning the location, capacity, development costs, and relation to markets of power sites, and whether the power from navigation dams can be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, and what is a fair value of such power, to the extent it may deem necessary or useful for the purposes of this act.

"(b) To cooperate with the executive departments and other agencies of the Government in such investigations; and for such purpose the several departments and agencies are authorized and directed, upon the request of the commission, to furnish such records, papers, and information in their possession as may be requested by the commission, and temporarily to detail to the commission such officers or experts as may be necessary in such investigations.

"(c) To make public from time to time the information secured hereunder, and to provide for the publication of its reports and investigations in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use. The commission, on or before the first Monday in December of each year, shall submit to Congress for the fiscal year preceding a classified report showing the permits and licenses issued under this act, and in each case the parties thereto, the terms prescribed, and the moneys received, if any, on account thereof.

"(d) To issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, or to any State or municipality for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other project works necessary or convenient for the development and improvement of navigation, and for the development, transmission, and utilization of power across, along, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, or upon any part of the public lands and reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or for the purpose of utilizing the surplus water or water power from any Government dam, except as herein provided: Provided, That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the commission that the license will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired, and shall be subject to and contain such conditions as the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls shall deem necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of such reservation: Provided further, That no license affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be issued until the plans of the dam and other navigation structures have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, a finding to that effect shall be made by the commission and shall become a part of the records of the commission: Provided further, That in case the commission shall find that any Government dam may be advantageously used by the United States for public purposes in addition to navigation, no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto, except that this provision shall not apply to any Government dam constructed prior to the passage of this act.

"(e) To issue preliminary permits for the purpose of enabling applicants for a license hereunder to secure the data and to perform the acts required by section 9 hereof: Provided, however, That upon the filing of any application for a preliminary permit by any person or corporation the commission, before granting such application, shall at once give notice of such application in writing to any State or municipality likely to be interested in or affected by such application; and shall also publish notice of such application for eight weeks in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the county or counties in which the project or any part thereof or the lands affected thereby are situated.

"(f) To prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of a system of accounts and for the maintenance thereof by licensees hereunder; to examine all books and accounts of such licensees at any time; to require them to submit at such time or times as the commission may require statements and reports, including full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, cost of project, cost of operation, and the production, transmission, use, and sale of power; and to make adequate provision for currently determining said costs. All such statements and reports shall be made upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and on such blanks as the commission may require. Any person who, for the purpose of deceiving, makes or causes to be made any false entry in the books or the accounts of such licensee, and any person who, for the purpose of deceiving, makes or causes to be made any false statement or report in response to a request or order or direction from the commission for the statements and report herein referred to shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(g) To hold hearings and to order testimony to be taken by deposition at any designated place in connection with the issuance of any permit or license, or the regulation of rates, service, or securities, or the making of any investigation, as provided in this act; and to require by subpœna, signed by any member of the commission, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence from any place in the United States, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence. Any member, expert, or examiner of the commission may, when duly designated by the commission for such purposes, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commission and empowered to administer oaths, shall be reduced to writing by such person or under his direction, and subscribed by the deponent. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"(h) To perform any and all acts, to make such rules and regulations, and to issue such orders not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That each preliminary permit issued under this act shall be for the sole purpose of maintaining priority of application for a license under the terms of this act for such period or periods, not exceeding a total of three years, as in the discretion of the commission may be necessary for making examinations and surveys, for preparing maps, plans, specifications, and estimates, and for making financial arrangements. Each such permit shall set forth the conditions under which priority shall be maintained and a license issued. Such permits shall not be transferable, and may be canceled by order of the commission upon failure of permittees to comply with the conditions thereof.

"SEC. 6. That licenses under this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding 50 years. Each such license shall be conditioned upon acceptance by the licensee of all the terms and conditions of this act and such further conditions, if any, as the commission shall prescribe in conformity with this act, which said terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof shall be expressed in said license. Licenses may be revoked only for the reasons and in the manner prescribed under the provisions of this act, and may be altered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the commission after 90 days' public notice.

"SEC. 7. That in issuing preliminary permits hereunder or licenses where no preliminary permit has been issued the commission shall give preference to applications therefor by States and municipalities provided the plans for the same are deemed by the commission equally well adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region; and as between other applicants, the commission may give preference to the applicant the plans of which it finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region.

"That whenever, in the judgment of the commission, the development of any project should be undertaken by the United States itself, the commission shall not approve any application for such project by any citizen, association, corporation, State, or municipality, but shall cause to be made such examinations, surveys, reports, plans, and estimates of cost of the project as it may deem necessary, and shall submit its findings to Congress with such recommendations as it may deem appropriate concerning the construction of such project or completion of any project upon any Government dam by the United States.

"SEC. 8. That no voluntary transfer of any license, or of the rights thereunder granted, shall be made without the written approval of the commission; and any successor or assign of the rights of such licensee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the license under which such rights are held by such licensee and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original licensee hereunder: Provided, That a mortgage or trust deed or sales made thereunder or under tax sales shall not be deemed voluntary transfers within the meaning of this section.

"SEC. 9. That each applicant for a license hereunder shall submit to the commission—

"(a) Such maps, plans, specifications, and estimates of cost as may be required for a full understanding of the proposed project. Such maps, plans, and specifications when approved by the commission shall be made a part of the license; and thereafter no change shall be made in said maps, plans, or specifications until such changes shall have been approved and made a part of such license by the commission.

"(b) Satisfactory evidence that the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or States within which the proposed project is to be located with respect to bed and banks and to the appropriation, diversion, and use of water for power purposes and with respect to the right to engage in the business of developing, transmitting, and distributing power, and in any other business necessary to effect the purposes of a license under this act.

"(c) Such additional information as the commission may require.

"SEC. 10. That all licenses issued under this act shall be on the following conditions:

"(a) That the project adopted, including the maps, plans, and specifications, shall be such as in the judgment of the commission will be best adapted to a comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purposes of navigation, of water-power development, and of other beneficial public uses; and if necessary in order to secure such scheme the commission shall have authority to require the modification of any project and of the plans and specifications of the project works before approval.

"(b) That except when emergency shall require for the protection of navigation, life, health, or property, no substantial alteration or addition not in conformity with the approved plans shall be made to any dam or other project works constructed hereunder of a capacity in excess of 100 horsepower without the prior approval of the commission; and any emergency alteration or addition so made shall thereafter be subject to such modification and change as the commission may direct.

"(c) That the licensee shall maintain the project works in a condition of repair adequate for the purposes of navigation and for the efficient operation of said works in the development and transmission of power, shall make all necessary renewals and replacements, shall maintain adequate depreciation reserves for such purposes, shall so maintain and operate said works as not to impair navigation, and shall conform to such rules and regulations as the commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of life, health, and property. Each licensee hereunder shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the dam, reservoir, or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, constructed under the license, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor.

"(d) That after the first 20 years of operation out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, accumulated in excess of a specified rate of return upon the net investment of a licensee in any project or projects under license the licensee shall establish and maintain amortization reserves, which reserves shall, in the discretion of the commission, be held until the termination of the license or be applied from time to time in reduction of the net investment. Such specified rate of return and the proportion of such surplus earnings to be paid into and held in such reserves shall be set forth in the license.

"(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission. When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter, in a manner to be described in each license: Provided, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent such power is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes; and that licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or other beneficial use in projects of not more than 50 horsepower capacity may be issued without charge; but in no case shall a license be issued free of charge for the development and utilization of power created by any Government dam and that the amount charged therefor in any license shall be such as determined by the commission.

"(f) That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee or of the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission may in its discretion require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be determined by the commission.

"Whenever such reservoir or other improvement is constructed by the United States the commission shall assess similar charges against any licensee directly benefited thereby, and any amount so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to be reserved and appropriated as a part of the special fund for headwater improvements as provided in section 17 hereof.

"(g) Such further conditions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as the commission may require.

"(h) That combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service are hereby prohibited. In issuing licenses for a part only of a complete project, where the land of the United States required is to be used only for transmission lines, water conduits, or for storage reservoirs, or for a complete project of not more than 50 horsepower capacity, the commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this act as it may deem equitable in the circumstances.

"SEC. 11. That if the dam or other project works are to be constructed across, along, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, the commission may, in so far as it deems the same reasonably necessary to promote the present and future needs of navigation and consistent with a reasonable investment cost to the licensee, include in the license any one or more of the following provisions or requirements:

"(a) That such licensee shall, to the extent necessary to preserve and improve navigation facilities, construct in whole or in part, without expense to the United States, in connection with such dam, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or other structures for navigation purposes, in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War and made part of such license.

"(b) That in case such structures for navigation purposes are not made a part of the original construction at the expense of the licensee, then, whenever the United States shall desire to complete such navigation facilities, the licensee shall convey to the United States, free of cost, such of its land and its rights of way and such right of passage through its dams or other structures, and permit such control of pools as may be required to complete such navigation facilities.

"(c) That such licensee shall furnish free of cost to the United States power for the operation of such navigation facilities, whether constructed by the licensee or by the United States.

"SEC. 12. That whenever application is filed for a project hereunder involving navigable waters of the United States, and the commission shall find upon investigation that the needs of navigation require the construction of a lock or locks or other navigation structures, and that such structures can not, consistent with a reasonable investment cost to the applicant, be provided in the manner specified in section 11, subsection (a) hereof, the commission may, before taking action upon such application, cause a report upon such project to be prepared, with estimates of cost of the power development and of the navigation structures, and shall submit such report to Congress with such recommendations as it deems appropriate concerning the participation of the United States in the cost of construction of such navigation structures.

"SEC. 13. That the licensee shall commence the construction of the project works within the time fixed in the license, shall thereafter in good faith and with due diligence prosecute such construction, and shall within the time fixed in the license complete and put into operation such part of the ultimate development as the commission shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market, and shall from time to time thereafter construct such portion of the balance of such development as the commission may direct, so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such development shall have been completed. The periods for the commencement and completion of construction may be extended by the commission when not incompatible with the public interests. In case the licensee shall not commence actual construction of the project works or of any specified part thereof within the time prescribed in the license or as extended by the commission, then, after due notice given, the license shall, as to such project works or part thereof, be terminated upon written order of the commission. In case the construction of the project works or of any specified part thereof have been begun but not completed within the time prescribed in the license or as extended by the commission, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the commission, shall institute proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States for the district in which any part of the project is situated for the revocation of said license, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 26 hereof.

"SEC. 14. That upon not less than two years' notice in writing from the commission, the United States shall have the right upon or after the expiration of any license to take over and thereafter to maintain and operate any project or projects as defined in section 3 hereof and covered in whole or in part by the license, or the right to take over upon mutual agreement with the licensee all property owned and held by the licensee then valuable and serviceable in the development, transmission, or distribution of power and which is then dependent for its usefulness upon the continuance of the license, together with any lock or locks or other aids to navigation constructed at the expense of the licensee, upon the condition that before taking possession it shall pay the net investment of the licensee in the project or projects taken, not to exceed the fair value of the property taken, plus such reasonable damages, if any, to property of the licensee valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth but not taken, as may be caused by the severance therefrom of property taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the commission. The net investment of the licensee in the project or projects so taken and the amount of such severance damages, if any, shall be determined by agreement between the commission and the licensee, and in case they can not agree, by proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any such property may be located: Provided, That such net investment shall not include or be affected by the value of any lands, rights of way, or other property of the United States licensed by the commission under this act, by the license, or by good will, going value, or prospective revenues: Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands, shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee: Provided, That the right of the United States or any State or municipality to take over, maintain, and operate any project licensed under this act at any time by condemnation proceedings upon payment of just compensation is hereby expressly reserved.

"SEC. 15. That if the United States does not, at the expiration of the original license, exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate any project or projects of the licensee, as provided in section 14 hereof, the commission is authorized to issue a new license to the original licensee upon such terms and conditions as may be authorized or required under the then existing laws and regulations, or to issue a new license under said terms and conditions to a new licensee, which license may cover any project or projects covered by the original license, and shall be issued on the condition that the new licensee shall, before taking possession of such project or projects, pay such amount for the property taken, and assume such contracts as the United States is required to do, in the manner specified in section 14 hereof: Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid.

"SEC. 16. That when in the opinion of the President of the United States, evidenced by a written order addressed to the holder of any license hereunder, the safety of the United States demands it, the United States shall have the right to enter upon and take possession of any project, or part thereof, constructed, maintained, or operated under said license, for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates, explosives, or munitions of war, or for any other purpose involving the safety of the United States, to retain possession, management, and control thereof for such length of time as may appear to the President to be necessary to accomplish said purposes, and then to restore possession and control to the party or parties entitled thereto; and in the event that the United States shall exercise such right, it shall pay to the party or parties entitled thereto just and fair compensation for the use of said property as may be fixed by the commission upon the basis of a reasonable profit in time of peace, and the cost of restoring said property to as good condition as existed at the time of the taking over thereof, less the reasonable value of any improvements that may be made thereto by the United States and which are valuable and serviceable to the licensee.

"SEC. 17. That the charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture in the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within such national forests. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national parks is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the improvement and development of such parks. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands, and of national monuments, and power site or other reserves outside of national forests, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act. All proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States, or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States.

"SEC. 18. That the operation of any navigation facilities which may be constructed as a part of or in connection with any dam or diversion structure built under the provisions of this act, whether at the expense of a licensee hereunder or of the United States, shall at all times be controlled by such reasonable rules and regulations in the interest of navigation, including the control of the level of the pool caused by such dam or diversion structure as may be made from time to time by the Secretary of War. Such rules and regulations may include the maintenance and operation by such licensee at its own expense of such lights and signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War, and such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce; and for willful failure to comply with any such rule or regulation, such licensee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 25 hereof.

"SEC. 19. That as a condition of the license, every licensee hereunder which is a public-service corporation, or a person, association, or corporation owning or operating any project and developing, transmitting, or distributing power for sale or use in public service, shall abide by such reasonable regulation of the services to be rendered to customers or consumers of power, and of rates and charges of payment therefor, as may from time to time be prescribed by any duly constituted agency of the State in which the service is rendered or the rate charged. That in case of the development, transmission, or distribution, or use in public service of power by any licensee hereunder or by its consumer engaged in public service within a State which has not provided a commission or other authority with power to regulate and control the services to be rendered by such licensee or by its consumer engaged in public service, or the rates and charges of payment therefor, or the amount or character of securities to be issued by any of said parties, it is agreed as a condition of such license that jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the commission, upon complaint of any person aggrieved or upon its own initiative, to exercise such regulation and control until such time as the State shall have provided a commission or other authority for such regulation and control: Provided, That the jurisdiction of the commission shall cease and determine as to each specific matter of regulation and control prescribed in this section as soon as the State shall have provided a commission or other authority for the regulation and control of that specific matter.

"SEC. 20. That when said power or any part thereof shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce the rates charged and the service rendered by any such licensee, or by any subsidiary corporation, the stock of which is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such licensee, or by any person, corporation, or association purchasing power from such licensee for sale and distribution or use in public service shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and just to the consumer and all unreasonable discriminatory and unjust rates or services are hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful; and whenever any of the States directly concerned has not provided a commission or other authority to enforce the requirements of this section within such State or to regulate and control the amount and character of securities to be issued by any of such parties or such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the services to be rendered or on the rates or charges of payment therefor, or on the amount or character of securities to be issued by any of said parties, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the commission, upon complaint of any person aggrieved, upon the request of any State concerned, or upon its own initiative to enforce the provisions of this section, to regulate and control so much of the services rendered, and of the rates and charges of payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce and to regulate the issuance of securities by the parties included within this section.

"The administration of the provisions of this section, so far as applicable, shall be according to the procedure and practice in fixing and regulating the rates, charges, and practices of railroad companies as provided in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and that the parties subject to such regulation shall have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases.

"In any valuation of the property of any licensee hereunder for purposes of rate making, no value shall be claimed by the licensee or allowed by the commission, for any project or projects under license in excess of the value or values prescribed in section 14 hereof for the purposes of purchase by the United States but there shall be included the cost to such licensee of the construction of the lock or locks or other aids of navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, and no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights granted by the commission or by this act.

"SEC. 21. That when the licensee is a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public utility or service corporation, and can not acquire by contract or pledges the right to use or damage the lands or property of others necessary to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam, reservoir, diversion structure, or the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, it may acquire the same by the exercise of the right of eminent domain in the district court of the United States for the district in which such land or other property may be located, or in the State courts. The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar action or proceeding in the courts of the State where the property is situated.

"SEC. 22. That whenever the public interest requires or justifies the execution by the licensee of contracts for the sale and delivery of power for periods extending beyond the date of termination of the license, such contracts may be entered into upon the joint approval of the commission and of the public-service commission or other similar authority in the State in which the sale or delivery of power is made, or if sold or delivered in a State which has no such public-service commission, then upon the approval of the commission, and thereafter in the event of failure to issue a new license to the original licensee at the termination of the license, the United States or the new licensee, as the case may be, shall assume and fulfill all such contracts.

"SEC. 23. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed as revoking any permit or valid existing right of way heretofore granted, or as revoking any authority heretofore given pursuant to law, but any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality, holding or possessing such permit, right of way, or authority may retain the same subject to the conditions set forth in the grant thereof and subject to any and all rules and regulations applicable thereto and existing at the date of the approval of this act, or may apply for a license hereunder, and upon such application the commission may issue to any such applicant a license in accordance with the provisions of this act, and in such case the provisions of this act shall apply to such applicant as a licensee hereunder.

"As to all streams or parts of streams, other than streams the use of which is herein authorized to be licensed, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, permission is hereby given to construct dams therein: Provided, That any applicant who proposes to construct a dam in any such last-mentioned stream or part of stream may at his option make application to the commission, and if the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of navigation in interstate or foreign commerce, the applicant may receive a license under the conditions with all of the rights and privileges herein provided for streams or parts of streams used for the transportation of persons or property to interstate or foreign commerce in their ordinary, natural, or improved condition.

"SEC. 24. That any lands of the United States included in any proposed project under the provisions of this act shall from the date of filing of application therefor be reserved from entry, location, or other disposal under the laws of the United States until otherwise directed by the commission or by Congress. Notice that such application has been made, together with the date of filing thereof and a description of the lands of the United States affected thereby, shall be filed in the local land office for the district in which such lands are located. Whenever the commission shall determine that the value of any lands of the United States so applied for, or heretofore or hereafter reserved or classified as power sites, will not be injured or destroyed for the purposes of power development by location, entry, or selection under the public-land laws, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice of such determination, shall declare such lands open to location, entry, or selection, subject to and with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary, in the judgment of the commission, for the purposes of this act, which right shall be expressly reserved in every patent issued for such lands; and no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from the occupation or use of any of said lands for said purposes. The United States or any licensee for any such lands hereunder may enter thereupon for the purposes of this act, upon payment of any damages to crops, buildings, or other improvements caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond to the United States for the use and benefit of the owner to secure the payment of such damages as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond in a court of competent jurisdiction, said bond to be in the form prescribed by the commission: Provided, That locations, entries, selections, or filings heretofore made for lands reserved as water-power sites or in connection with water-power development or electrical transmission may proceed to approval or patent under and subject to the limitations and conditions in this section contained.

"SEC. 25. That any licensee, or any person, who shall willfully fail or who shall refuse to comply with any of the provisions of this act, or with any of the conditions made a part of any license issued hereunder, or with any subpœna of the commission, or with any regulation or lawful order of the commission, or of the Secretary of War, or of the Secretary of Commerce as to fishways, issued or made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall, in the discretion of the court, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed or provided by law; and every month any such licensee or any such person shall remain in default after written notice from the commission, or from the Secretary of War, or from the Secretary of Commerce, shall be deemed a new and separate offense punishable as aforesaid.

"SEC 26. That the Attorney General may, on request of the commission or of the Secretary of War, institute proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States in the district in which any project or part thereof is situated for the purpose of revoking for violation of its terms any license issued hereunder, or for the purpose of remedying or correcting by injunction, mandamus, or other process any act of commission or omission in violation of the provisions of this act or of any lawful regulation or order promulgated hereunder. The district courts shall have jurisdiction over all of the above-mentioned proceedings and shall have power to issue and execute all necessary process and to make and enforce all writs, orders, and decrees to compel compliance with the lawful orders and regulations of the commission and of the Secretary of War, and to compel the performance of any condition imposed under the provisions of this act. In the event a decree revoking a license is entered, the court is empowered to sell the whole or any part of the project or projects under license, to wind up the business of such licensee conducted in connection with such project or projects, to distribute the proceeds to the parties entitled to the same, and to make and enforce such further orders and decrees as equity and justice may require. At such sale or sales the vendee shall take the rights and privileges belonging to the licensee and shall perform the duties of such licensee and assume all outstanding obligations and liabilities of the licensee which the court may deem equitable in the premises; and at such sale or sales the United States may become a purchaser, but it shall not be required to pay a greater amount than it would be required to pay under the provisions of section 14 hereof at the termination of the license.

"SEC. 27. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired therein.

"SEC. 28. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; but no such alteration, amendment, or repeal shall affect any license theretofore issued under the provisions of this act, or the rights of any licensee thereunder.

"SEC. 29. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to modify or repeal any of the provisions of the act of Congress approved December 19, 1913, granting certain rights of way to the city and county of San Francisco."

And the House agree to the same.

I do not concur in the first amendment made by the conferees to subsection (d), section 10.

G. N. HAUGEN.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report.

The conferees adopted as the basis of their report the House amendment. The amendments which were made in conference were made to the House amendment. The references by sections are to the House amendment.

The first amendment is as follows: At the end of section 2 add the words "and their clerical forces." The amendment simply declares that the clerical forces of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture shall so far as practicable perform the work of the Water Power Commission.

The next amendment is in section 3. In the definition of the word "corporation" the words "sell, lease," are inserted after the word "distribute," and after the word "power" the words "in addition to such other powers as it may possess" are inserted. This amendment is an enlargement of the definition of the word "corporation."

The next amendment is the insertion of the definition of the term "navigable waters." There was no corresponding definition in the House amendment, and the definition inserted is exactly as passed by the Senate.

The next amendment is the changing of the word "navigation" in the definition of "navigation dam" to that of "Government," and this change is carried all through the bill. It is thought that "Government dam" is a more comprehensive and clearer expression of what is intended than the expression "navigation dam." In the definition of the term "Government dam" the words "the improvement of navigation" are stricken out and the words "Government purposes" are inserted. In the opinion of the conference committee this is a proper change, as it is thought to be more comprehensive.

The next amendment occurs in section 4, subsection (c). The amendment of the House provides that the commission might make public such portions of the information secured under the authority of this act as it might deem expedient in the public interest. The amendment provides that all information shall be made public, and is as follows: Strike out the words "such portions of" after the word "time" and strike out the words "as it shall deem expedient in the public interest" after the word "hereunder." In the same paragraph the words "and in each case" are inserted, so as to provide that in each license issued the names of the parties thereto, the terms prescribed, and the moneys received shall be made public.

The next amendment is in subsection (d). The words "the majority of the stock of which is owned by citizens of the United States" are stricken out, and the words "organized under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, or to any" are inserted in lieu thereof.

The next amendment is to strike out the word "its" before the word "public," in the third proviso, and after the word "purposes" the insertion of the words "in addition to navigation," so that the proviso will read:

"That in case the commission shall find that any Government dam may be advantageously used by the United States for public purposes in addition to navigation, no license therefor shall be issued until two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto, except that this provision shall not apply to any Government dam constructed prior to the passage of this act."

The next amendment is in section 7. The word "hereunder," which occurs after the word "licenses," is transposed and placed after the word "permits," and after the word "licenses" the words "where no preliminary permit has been issued" are inserted; and in the same paragraph after the word "commission" the words "equally well" are inserted. Your committee thought these changes were in the interest of clarity. In section 7, second paragraph, after the word "project," in the last line, the words "or completion of any project upon any Government dam" are inserted. It is thought that this amendment would prove of benefit to the Government in the protection of its own property.

The next amendment is in section 8, as follows: At the end of the section add the following:

"Provided, That a mortgage or trust deed or sales made thereunder or under tax sales shall not be deemed voluntary transfers within the meaning of this section."

This amendment is put in only for the purpose of making more clear the evident intent of the paragraph and to avoid any confusion thereunder.

The next amendment is in section 10, subsection (c), and is as follows: Strike out of said subsection the words "Each license issued hereunder shall contain an express condition that the licensee shall, before the commencement of the construction of said project works, comply with all laws of the State in which said project works, or any part thereof, are to be situated relative to damages that may be caused, directly or indirectly, by said proposed project works; but the United States shall not be liable for any part of said damages," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Each licensee hereunder shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the dam, reservoir, or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto constructed under the license, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor." The purpose of this amendment is to provide that the licensee shall pay all damages caused to the property of others. It is thought that the proposed amendment accomplishes this more perfectly than the language stricken out.

Section 10, subsection (d), is the so-called amortization section. The bill as passed the House provided that this amortization feature should be incorporated into the license from the beginning of the term of the grant. The House amendment as amended in conference provides that this amortization feature shall not become effective until after the expiration of the first 20 years of operation. There is also stricken from this subsection the last sentence.

The next amendment is in subsection (e) of section 10. The second sentence of that subsection, as passed the House, down to the proviso is as follows:

"When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of navigation dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at periods of not less than 10 years, in a manner to be described in each license."

As amended the sentence reads as follows:

"When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter, in a manner to be described in each license."

The next amendment is in subsection (f) of section 10. The first paragraph of the section, as it passed the House, reads as follows:

"That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction by another licensee of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission may in its discretion require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be set forth in the license, and all amounts so received by any licensee shall be paid into a special amortization reserve, for the retirement of the cost of such reservoir or other improvement."

As amended the paragraph is as follows:

"That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee or of the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission may in its discretion require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be determined by the commission."

In the opinion of your conferees these changes are necessary in order to make the section workable.

The next amendment is in subsection (h), section 10, and is as follows: At the end of the paragraph add:

"In issuing licenses for a part only of a complete project, where the land of the United States required is to be used only for transmission lines, water conduits, or for storage reservoirs, or for a complete project of not more than fifty hosepower capacity, the commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this act as it may deem equitable in the circumstances."

It is thought by your conferees that such discretion should be vested in the commission.

The next amendment is in section 14. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this section with an amendment as follows: After the word "taken" where it first occurs in the section insert the words "not to exceed the fair value of the property taken," and the House agrees to the same.

The next amendment is at the end of section 15, and is as follows:

"Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid."

The next amendment is in the third paragraph of section 20, and is as follows: At the end of the section add the words "but there shall be included the cost to such licensee of the construction of the lock or locks or other aids of navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, and no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights granted by the commission or by this act." It is thought that this amendment should be inserted in order that there might be no misunderstanding that it was the intention and purpose of Congress that the expenditures set forth in the amendment should be included for the purposes of rate making. Some of your conferees were of the opinion that this was clearly set forth in the section as it passed the House, but in order that there be no misunderstanding the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment is at the end of section 21, and is as follows:

"The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar action or proceeding in the courts of the State where the property is situated."

The next amendment is in section 23, and is a new paragraph added to that section, as follows:

"As to all streams or parts of streams other than streams the use of which is herein authorized to be licensed, over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, permission is hereby given to construct dams therein: Provided, That any applicant who proposes to construct a dam in any such last-mentioned stream or part of stream may at his option make application to the commission, and if the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of navigation in interstate or foreign commerce, the applicant may receive a license under the conditions with all of the rights and privileges herein provided for streams or parts of streams used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce in their ordinary, natural, or improved conditions."

This amendment is only an amplification of the Senate definition of "navigable waters." In our opinion the amendment grants no additional jurisdiction or rights.

JOHN J. ESCH.
WM. L. LA FOLLETTE.
G. N. HAUGEN.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I expect to move the previous question before the hour expires. I thought it would be fair to the members of the conference committee that I should retain 20 minutes for members of the Interstate Commerce Committee who are on the conference committee, one-half of that time to be yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], to be yielded by them as they see proper. I will yield this time for Members to discuss the report, but I expect to retain the floor for the purpose of moving the previous question. How will that suit the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman can not get more than one hour for the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. SIMS. The Speaker said he would not recognize anybody to call up a conference report who would not agree to move the previous question at the end of an hour. I promptly agreed to do so.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman will divide the time among the three committees?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; what does the gentleman say to that arrangement?

Mr. MANN. Are all of these gentlemen in favor of the conference report?

Mr. SIMS. I think they are.

Mr. MANN. That would be a pretty situation, to have an hour divided all among gentlemen in favor of the report. What is the use of taking any time at all?

Mr. SIMS. Those gentlemen can yield to whoever they please.

Mr. MANN. That is just it; they can.

Mr. SIMS. I have not heard of any gentleman being against the report.

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. MANN. Several people are against it. I think it would take more than an hour to explain it to me.

Mr. SIMS. The bill was before the House last summer for two or three weeks and very fully discussed.

Mr. MANN. Not this bill. This bill has never been explained to the House. I am not complaining about the time. If the gentleman wants to move the previous question and agree to it without any discussion at all, I am willing to vote against it, but to agree to an hour's time to be wholly used by those in favor of it is of no use.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know of anyone opposed to it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman knows of nobody who is opposed to it, I will ask him how anybody could be opposed to it with time controlled by three gentlemen in favor of it. This bill has been in conference several months.

Mr. SIMS. As far as I know everybody is in favor of it. I will yield time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. People opposed to it ought to have some amount of the time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the gentleman from Tennessee will yield, I think there is a misapprehension as to the division of this time. The gentleman is simply dividing the time between the three committees, 20 minutes to each committee, and the Member representing the committee can yield the time to those opposed to it?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And if they do not want to they can give none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no disposition not to give opponents part of the time.

Mr. SIMS. I assume that gentlemen would not do such a thing as that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not if they were gentlemen.

Mr. SIMS. I would not do such a thing.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is proposing it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I submit this request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not have to ask for unanimous consent; he controls the entire hour. What is the need of unanimous consent?

Mr. SIMS. I am a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], is a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the authority to yield, but he can not do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. The chairmen of these different committees know better to whom to yield than I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the authority to yield, if he pleases, but he can not do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. I only wanted to see if it would meet with unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I reserve one minute at the end of the hour in which to move the previous question within the hour. As I understand it, the time for debate begins now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in as few words as possible, so as to make myself clear, that the bill as agreed to in conference, so far as the fundamental provisions of the bill are concerned, so far as any question of principle is concerned, is practically in all respects just as it passed the House. The difference between the Senate and the House on fundamental matters was on the recapture clause, on the question of the amount to be charged by the Government for power. The charge provisions of the bill are exactly as they passed the House, no change whatever. Section 10, subsection (e) provides that the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission. There is no maximum and no minimum. We simply give the commission the power—and that is exactly as it passed the House—to make reasonable annual charges, so that the commission can control each and every project as to charges with regard to the special conditions that may surround any particular project. On the net investment or recapture clause of the bill, section 14, the Senate recedes from its disagreement to this section, with an amendment as follows:

After the word "taken," where it occurs first in the section, insert the words "not to exceed the fair value of the property taken."

Section 14, as it passed the House, provided for payment to licensee, upon recapture, of the net investment. Gentlemen will remember that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] fought that very bitterly upon the idea that the property might be depreciated in value; that unnecessary expense might have been incurred in the construction; and that the net investment would exceed the fair value or the reasonable value, or even just compensation at the end of the license period, and this amendment which has been agreed to in conference "not to exceed the fair value," retains the net investment provisions as to the cost accounting and everything else; nothing is stricken out of section 14, nothing is taken away from the net investment provisions of the bill, and the only words added are the ones that I just referred to, "not to exceed the fair value of the property taken." That is the only change there is in section 14, which is called the recapture section.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the bill define the meaning of the words "fair value?"

Mr. SIMS. No.

Mr. WALSH. But it does of "net investment."

Mr. SIMS. It does of net investment, and I will say to the gentleman it does not make a definition of "fair value." It does say what the net investment shall be, but from this net investment are to be deducted certain elements of value, such as going concern, good will, increased value of land furnished by the United States, and so on. The fair value, of course, will be limited by these deductions, because these deductions are made to apply to the net investment, as provided in the law. The net investment means what the investor has put in the project, but not to exceed the fair value of the property taken, retaining all the limitations in the bill touching the net investment, although it does not define the words "fair value."

Mr. WALSH. What is added to it by those words?

Mr. SIMS. I will state that the conferees thought that the net investment at the end of the license period on account of loss of markets or the run-down condition of the property or something of that sort, that the exchange or commercial value might be less than the net investment. In other words, the net investment might show $100,000, but the property might not have a commercial value of exceeding $50,000, and that if anybody except the Government or a municipality or a State was going to purchase this property he would not have to pay more than its actual value, whatever that might be, and this amendment is to save the Government or the State or the municipality from having to pay the net investment when the net investment as shown by the books of the company exceeds the exchange or ordinary commercial value of the property. It is to protect the United States Government, the States, and municipalities that may desire to take over the property.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In section 15 of the bill, lines 7 to 13 of the confidential prints, page 24, the conferees added a new proviso to the effect that if the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not enter into a new lease with the original or a new lessee, the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new lease entered into as aforesaid. Is it the purpose to allow the original licensee to continue from year to year just as long as he wants to, or what was the object of that amendment?

Mr. SIMS. That is not the purpose of it. The argument was made in considering this bill by investors and by the bond houses that if the license period should end abruptly and the Government did not take it over and a municipality or State did not take it over, and no new licensee had applied for a new license, that we would abruptly terminate the service of the project, though it might be delivering power to a municipality, a State, or a manufacturing concern, and the Senate conferees were very insistent upon not having a possible hiatus. This provision only provides that until the Government acts or the State or the municipality acts or a new license is granted.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, the original terms granted to the first licensee without any interruption or diminution continues up to its end.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. But if the Government fails to take it over or it can not get a new licensee to the end that the project does not cease, that the public are not inconvenienced, the licensee may continue from year to year at a rental fixed in the original lease to operate the plant.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; that is it. Now, there is another change, but I do not think that is a fundamental change. It was not contrary to any principle in the bill. In the House bill, as it passed, where dams built by the Government were leased the Government retained the right to readjust the rentals in periods of not less than 10 years. Some of the conferees insisted that it would be wiser and better to make the first period 20 years from the beginning of operation and then every 10 years thereafter. It does not change the principle of the right to readjust, but prevents readjustment for that period of time when it is reasonable to suppose the property would not be earning the amount that it would after it had been in operation for some time. These three changes, the one covering the hiatus, the other providing that in recapture the net investment should not exceed the fair value, are all that are material. We have a number of minor changes which the report and statement set out, but those are all that are fundamental or that in any way affect the fundamental principles in the bill. I want to say it is the best all-around water-power bill that has ever been reported in the House or Senate or that has ever passed either House, and it is better now than it was when the Senate passed it or when it passed the House. All kinds of water-power development are provided for—Government water-power development, State water-power development, municipal water-power development, private corporation water-power development, individual water-power development, or development of water powers by associations of individuals. Potentially every kind and character of water-power development can be had under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used nine minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I will have to yield according to what I said to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] secured an amendment to the bill in the House permitting municipalities to take the property before the end of the term by paying just compensation. Is that still in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. It remains in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. SINNOTT. Then in regard to another section.

Mr. SIMS. That meant, as I understood at the time in the House, that the Government has the right to take over a project at any time before the expiration of the license period by paying just compensation.

Mr. SINNOTT. Another question: Is there anything now in the bill or conference report fixing the measure of the fair value or the manner in which the fair value is to be determined?

Mr. SIMS. There is no new legislation in the conference report defining fair value, as I have just said a moment ago in reply to an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used one minute more, making in all 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I will reserve one minute for myself, making 11 minutes, and I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], if he desires to debate or discuss the report for that purpose.

Mr. ESCH. I would like to yield part of the time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMS. That is all right. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] 10 minutes, to be yielded as he sees proper.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed what is known as the Shields bill, which only relates to the construction of dams upon navigable waters, the jurisdiction of which being vested in the Secretary of War. The House bill, recommended by the joint water-power committee, embraces in a single measure the construction of dams upon navigable waters, upon the public domain, and in the forest reserves. In order to do this the bill provides for the creation of a commission consisting of the three secretaries—the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. These differences in the plan and scope of these two measures constituted one of the chief obstacles to the conferees getting together on the pending bill. There was much opposition on the part of the Senate conferees to the plan of a commission of Cabinet officers. The House conferees, however, prevailed in their contention. We maintained the administrative features in the House bill throughout. One of the principal changes made by the conferees in the bill as it left the House relates to the definition of "navigable waters." No definition was contained in the House bill. The House conferees accepted the definition in the Shields bill. Another change made in conference related to the matter of creating amortization reserves. As the bill left the House these amortization reserves were to begin at the beginning of the term. As amended the amortization reserves are not required to be created until 20 years after the time the project goes into operation. The House conferees agreed to the compromise. Another change made by the conferees related to the readjustment of charges on Government dams. As the bill left the House these charges were to be readjusted at intervals of 10 years after the project goes into operation. Under the conferees' agreement this readjustment was changed so that it could not be made until 20 years after the project went into operation and thereafter at 10-year intervals.

The recapture clause was changed by the conferees by the addition of these words, "shall not exceed the fair value of the property taken." I resisted that amendment of the conferees as long as I could, but yielded ultimately. I had been in favor of the net investment as a basis for recapture and the basis for rate making, believing that net investment was a fixed, determined amount and could be ascertained at any day, month, or year. Another change made by the conferees was to take care of the hiatus which under the House bill resulted at the end of the termination of the period of 50 years. As the bill left the House, at the end of the 50-year period the licensee merely became what might be called a tenant at sufferance. That was a doubtful status, and one which would create hesitancy on the part of investors in lending money to the licensee. In conference we adjusted this difficulty in this way: We gave the commission the power, after the termination of the 50 years, to extend the license for periods of one year and until the Government either took over the project itself or found a new licensee. Another change made by the conferees was in reference to the basis for rate making. In the House bill the basis for rate making was practically the net investment, but there was some doubt expressed by the Senate conferees that the terms used would not authorize the commission to allow to the licensee the cost for the construction of locks, aids to navigation, or other capital expenditures. Personally I believe that the net-investment definition covered the matter, but to remove all doubt we provide that for the purpose of rate making the commission shall take in account the cost to the licensee of the construction of lock or locks, aids to navigation, or capital expenditures.

I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees labored long and hard to bring about an agreement between the Houses. For 10 years there has been a conflict between the Houses on the matter of water-power legislation, and the rock upon which the two Houses have split for most of this period is the one which gave to the Government the right to exact a charge for the development of water power. This bill gives the commission the power to demand such charge. The Senate has uniformly denied the right of the Government to exact a charge for the development of water power. This, to my mind, was the crucial question which divided the Houses, and upon this crucial question the Senate has receded and the House has won its contention.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. For just a moment.

Mr. SINNOTT. I notice in section 23 that a permit may be given for a dam on a nonnavigable feeder of a navigable stream.

Mr. ESCH. I will state that amendment was presented by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. My time has about elapsed, and I will suggest that the inquiry be put to him.

Mr. SINNOTT. I wanted to get the gentleman's view. I understand it is not compulsory upon the applicants to apply for that permit. That is optional, and that one building a dam on the nonnavigable stream is not compelled to apply to the commission for permission unless he sees fit?

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used eight minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand the gentleman agrees with me on that?

Mr. ESCH. That is my opinion.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I get two minutes out of this hour. The gentlemen in favor of the bill get the balance of the time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman three minutes out of my time.

Mr. MANN. Then I get five minutes out of the hour. I am much obliged.

I would like to take two or three minutes to express my confidence in the members of the conference committee. I have been working along with them on this subject, some of them, for many years, and I have a great deal of confidence in their judgment. I need not say I have a great deal of confidence in their integrity or purpose and their intelligence, because it would be impossible for one who knows them half as well as I do not to have. And yet here is a conference report upon an extremely important subject presented to Congress in the closing days, when everybody is pressed almost beyond endurance; printed in the RECORD, it is true, with an hour's discussion permitted, of which, so far as I know, those opposed to it get five minutes, and the subject proposed to be disposed of in that way after a controversy lasting 8 or 10 years. Now, just for instance, I want to call attention to one thing in the conference report. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] just suggested it was not necessary to get a permit for the construction of a dam on a stream which was nonnavigable. Of course, the Government has no control whatever over a stream that is nonnavigable unless it be on Government property. There can be no question about that. But it has always been contended by the Government that if a stream which was navigable here, say, and up at the other end of this aisle, it was a navigable stream in the eye of the law all the way. The Government has always maintained and the courts have always held, under the contention of the Government, that a stream that was navigable was navigable, not in parts here and there and elsewhere. Of course, nobody builds a dam as a rule right where a stream is navigable. Here is the Potomac River, a navigable stream, up here where the rapids are and where the falls are. It would take an act of Congress to authorize the construction of a dam there, but under the terms of this conference report it is nonnavigable.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] shakes his head. He is not familiar with it. I call his attention to the definition.

That the term "navigable waters" as used in this act and as applied to streams shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or which, through improvements, heretofore or hereafter may have been or shall become usable in such commerce.

Here is a stream that is navigable. It has rapids or falls in it, a place where you can construct a dam. Usually it is not navigable there. Now, under the terms of this bill, where they can construct a dam it is declared nonnavigable, and, under the law, where it is nonnavigable it is controlled wholly by the States. The Federal Government has nothing to do with it. Here is the definition of navigable streams which puts the Government of the United States out of court.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In section 23 of the bill it is amplified as carrying out the idea suggested by the gentleman, that the Government has control of streams that are navigable in part, although they are not navigable right at the time. And it says the commission can grant licenses in that kind of a stream provided the licensee asks for it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman from Oregon just showed it was not necessary for a man to ask for a license from the Government. And the Government either has control or it has not. The Government of the United States can not grant a license for the construction of a dam across a nonnavigable stream in a State. We have got no more to do with it than the King of England.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. My question was merely directed to a nonnavigable feeder of a navigable stream.

Mr. MANN. It was directed to the point to which the gentleman from Washington directed his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman desire more time? If you do, I will grant you five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Is my time up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has yielded me more time. I will take a minute.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is to come out of the time that goes to the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I shall not occupy the full five minutes. I do not want to take all the time of those who may be opposed to the propopsition. I have called attention to one glaring defect in this report, which apparently gives away the whole case of the Government.

You can define all you please what the terms are, where a dam is to be constructed in a navigable stream under the control of the Government, and put in all you please about how much they shall pay, and nobody who wants to construct a dam will complain if at the same time you tell them that where they want to construct it it does not come within the control of the Government. Here is the definition of navigable waters as applied to streams, which exempts practically every place in the United States where you can build a dam. Why, Muscle Shoals were not navigable, yet we had a great contest. Nobody doubted that the river at that point was called a navigable river, because it was navigable above and below; but, under the terms of this definition, it was declared nonnavigable, and when it is declared nonnavigable the Government of the United States has nothing more to do with it. It is purely within the control of the State, because the only authority which the General Government has over the flowing water is on the ground of the control of navigation.

Now, I will let the gentlemen wrestle with that proposition a little while.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not this report on this bill, in company with others, a report upon a bill introduced away back in 1917? I have not a copy of the bill, but I see that this conference report here was filed and ordered printed February 26; that is, day before yesterday. It says, "To accompany Senate bill 1419." Was not that bill introduced away back in 1917?

Mr. MANN. I suppose it was introduced probably the first day that this Congress met. It was acted upon by the Senate a long time ago and acted upon by the House a long time ago, so far as that is concerned, and even that was not the beginning. This controversy has been pending for many years. This House, while I was not here, created a special water-power committee, as I understand, composed of members of other committees, which I think was a very appropriate thing to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I asked the question of the gentleman from Illinois was to call attention to the fact that this legislation, than which there is hardly anything of an industrial character to be conceived of greater in importance, is pending between the two Houses month after month. Finally it is brought up here, within two or three days of the final adjournment of this Congress, and there is no opportunity for fair discussion. It is the old system, which I have seen put in practice here ever since I have been a Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is a good deal better than the system which was in the House when the gentleman from Wisconsin came into the House and when I came into the House, in this respect, that it was not then the practice nor the custom to ever print a conference report in the RECORD, and that was not done until I made a holy terror of a kick in the House, reactionary as I was. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I am not specially interested in the dam discussion in this bill, and I say reverently that I do not give a damn for the dams. I wish to emphasize the word "reverently." [Laughter.] But I am interested, Mr. Speaker, in the proposition of bringing home the American boys, and we are now in this situation: In the two minutes that I have I desire simply to say a word, and I again give notice that there shall be a quorum here. I see from the newspapers that the President has announced that there will be no extra session and no chance for Congress to be in session and pass upon the question of demobilization in the Army camps of this country. According to the mail that I have from the boys there, there has been no fair show in the execution even of the orders issued by the War Department. To-day, with 41 cruisers and 39 battleships, we are bringing home a less number of boys every month than we sent over at a critical time. I have asked for a resolution here to have a committee appointed that shall sit during the session to hear the question and determine questions of demobilization.

Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my colleagues, and if I should appear at any time to make a dilatory motion it is for this reason, that the men, women, and children of this country are suffering, the farmers are suffering, because the little men with big epaulets keep the boys in the service regardless of the fact that they have furnished the necessary affidavits for discharge. They are not bringing the men home as rapidly as they can and as they should. I make the point now——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MASON. I have not spoken a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the gentleman challenges the accuracy of the Chair, the clock says two minutes.

Mr. MASON. I yield to the clock and also to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. MASON. Oh, yes. Let us stay. There is no quorum. Count them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, how much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MASON. I want five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Estopinal	Kincheloe	Sherley
Ashbrook	Fairchild, G. W.	Langley	Shouse
Barnhart	Fairfield	Lehlbach	Slemp

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 312 Members have answered present—a quorum.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. I rise to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SIMS. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report. If we are going to have a regular filibuster, why, let us have it.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the gentleman had previously agreed that there should be one hour of debate.

Mr. SIMS. I know I had, but the gentleman from Illinois is wasting the time in filibustering.

Mr. WALSH. He has a right to do it.

Mr. SIMS. Of course he has a right to do it, and I have a right to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois rose and addressed the Chair, and the Chair asked him for what purpose he rose. He said, "I rise to make a motion to adjourn." That does not constitute a recognition.

Mr. WALSH. That is just what I was going to contend, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has been recognized.

Mr. SIMS. We are going to dispose of this conference report to-night, or as soon as possible. If the gentleman wants to debate the bill, I am willing——

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MASON. I want to inquire whether the motion to adjourn is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is always in order when a gentleman gets recognition to make it; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has the floor and has an hour.

Mr. MASON. And the Chair now rules, as I understand the ruling, that he did not recognize me because I had made a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair never recognized the gentleman, and can not recognize him in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee has this hour and the right to parcel it out as he chooses.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MASON. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing to appeal from.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order that there is nothing to appeal from.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair, but there is nothing from which the gentleman from Illinois can appeal. The gentleman from Illinois has not been recognized.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I desire——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. SIMS. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman moves the previous question on the conference report.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MASON. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division on the motion to order the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 131, noes 36.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten Members, not a sufficient number.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order that that is dilatory. The roll has just been called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that no question of dilatoriness can be raised in connection with the point of no quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, the roll has just been called, and no business has transpired since then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That rule applies to a different situation. The point of no quorum can never be treated as dilatory. The presence of a quorum is the very foundation of business in the House. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-two Members present, a quorum.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Chair has counted Members elect who are not Members of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. MASON. I ask for a roll call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MASON) there were 175 ayes and 40 noes.

Mr. MASON. I make the point that the last count shows no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that there is a quorum present.

Mr. MASON. The last count does not show it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote, and that that motion lie on the table.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that on the last announcement of the Chair no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman that there were many Members present who did not vote.

Mr. MASON. I do not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does know. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is too late; the vote has been declared, and I moved to reconsider.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet asking for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMS. But it is too late. I have moved to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not be too hasty about that. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking this vote by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Forty-five Members, a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on what is this vote to be taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SIMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. I did not understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin had demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report. I thought it was on my motion to reconsider. Of course I would not have the slightest objection to the yeas and nays being taken on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 263, nays 65, not voting 100, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. FAIRFIELD.

Mr. HELM with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. TAGUE with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. DENT with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. BURROUGHS.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. REAVIS.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. REED.

Mr. POU with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. VINSON with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WOODYARD.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. SWIFT.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a verification of the vote.

The SPEAKER. A verification of the vote rests entirely in the judgment of the Speaker. If it were a close vote, so close that mistakes enough might have been made to change it, the Chair would have no hesitancy in granting that request, but the Chair declines to order a verification of the vote.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] moves to lay that appeal on the table. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has no right to appeal from the decision of the Chair on that particular point, as it is a matter that is entirely within the discretion of the Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the affirmative vote lay this motion on the table?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. WALSH. How can you have two motions pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. This is a motion that is always put in that way.

Mr. WALSH. That is when it is done by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody asked for a division.

Mr. WALSH. You do not have to divide a motion to reconsider and a motion to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. That the House can not have under consideration two motions at one and the same time. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to reconsider and asked to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is the way it is always done.

Mr. WALSH. That is, when it is done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. We are not voting on the motion to reconsider, but to table it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will pardon me, the House must first vote on the motion to reconsider. Any Member has the right to enter the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Any Member has the right to ask to have these two motions severed, but nobody asked it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the Speaker to the actual conditions. The gentleman from Tennessee made the customary motion to move to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table. Usually that is put by unanimous consent, and it was so put, but objection was made. Then the gentleman from Tennessee moved to reconsider.

Mr. SIMS. No; he did not.

The SPEAKER. No; it was done in the usual way, and any gentleman had the right to ask to have the two severed, but nobody did.

Mr. STAFFORD. Never in the history of the House have two motions been voted on at the same time.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of this motion will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-three in the affirmative. Those opposed to tabling the motion to reconsider will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Five. On this question the ayes are 163 and the noes 5.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair will not hold that the motion is dilatory. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make the point that many men have been counted who are Members of the next Congress——

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman know any such thing as that? [Applause.] The Chair is doing this counting.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The motion is carried.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is on the Speaker's desk the fortification appropriation bill with Senate amendments—three short amendments—which I desire to call up.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Several conference reports have been called up to-day with amendments, with the statement that they would only take a few minutes——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina as soon as he gets through with the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Speaker said that this morning in regard to the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee, which we have just finished.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee got in an important conference report——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the Speaker think it important that the sundry civil bill should go to the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair will recognize the gentleman next——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Provided no one else asks for recognition.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference who asks for it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. It is about the dinner hour, and I rise to make a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Tennessee.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 15979, the fortification bill, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 15979) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there are three amendments adopted by the Senate. I ask that amendments numbered 2 and 3 be read and then I shall move that the House agree to those amendments.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It requires unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. After a while; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 8, strike out "$125,000" and insert "$140,000."
Page 12, after line 17, insert:
"SEC. 8. That no part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or procured otherwise.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to agree to the amendments just read.

Mr. GOOD. Which amendments?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. To the amendments just read, amendments numbered 2 and 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House agree to the Senate amendments just read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 2 relates to a provision for the construction of a concrete wharf in the Philippine Islands. The estimate submitted to the committee was for $140,000. The committee after the hearing reported $125,000 and it so passed the House. Now, the authorities in the War Department appeared before the Senate committee and stated that it would be absolutely impossible to build this wharf for less than $140,000, the amount of the original estimate, and told the committee——

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not just now. And they told the committee that unless $140,000 could be appropriated then there was no necessity of making any appropriation, because it could not be built for $125,000. The House committee and the Senate committee were satisfied that this wharf was badly needed, because the one there now is insecure and unsafe, and therefore I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate appropriating $15,000 more.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, as to amendment No. 3, it simply provides that no money appropriated in any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States. In other words, it is a simple provision providing that those articles shall be, when it is possible, manufactured in Government arsenals rather than by private concerns. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has to get unanimous consent.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I thought that had been already granted.

The SPEAKER. To take from the Speaker's table——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I thought unanimous consent had been given.

The SPEAKER. No; it never had been asked for or given.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Does it require unanimous consent to consider Senate amendments on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It takes unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and ask for a conference.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not asking for a conference, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. The Chair lays a bill before the House, and I am under the impression—I may be mistaken—that unless it is a Senate amendment which requires new consideration in the Committee of the Whole it is a privileged matter to move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. Those in favor of these two amendments——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield.

Mr. MASON. Is there in your amendment, or in the proposition you make, a provision for bringing the boys who are in the American Army home to this country?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This amendment has no relation to the inquiry the gentleman makes of me.

Mr. MASON. Have you any information that you can give to the House—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no information on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman yielded for a question. I do not propose to take my seat until I have asked an important question. I suppose he had a right to yield for a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman had finished his question.

Mr. MASON. I had not.

The SPEAKER. What is the question?

Mr. MASON. I am presenting it now to the gentleman in charge of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair himself would like to know what it is.

Mr. MASON. All right. Thank you. Is there any proposition in this bill or in your amendment that proposes to assist the fellows who under the rules of the War Department are being deprived of the right to go home?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows the answer to his question as well as I could possibly give it to him. I have been entirely courteous to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. You have been courteous, and I know the answer.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill, I will say to the gentleman, has no relation whatever to the soldiers in the service or to the question of their discharge.

Mr. MASON. I thank you for knowing what I knew in advance. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the two amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to that motion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have the floor, I think, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This amendment, gentlemen of the House, makes provision for the manufacture of 26 railway mounts and for 5 barbette carriages, costing something like $6,700,000. And the amendment provides that over $3,000,000 shall be available in cash and the balance in authorization. This proposition was very carefully considered by the House committee and was denied, for the reason that it was perfectly evident that these railway mounts could be manufactured much quicker than the guns can be forged and machined, and we therefore thought this appropriation could be postponed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] moves that the House disagree to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move the previous question.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition. I would like to be heard in opposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. MASON. But he did not move the previous question until I had addressed myself to the Chair. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I had not surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move the previous question if he wants to do so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on disagreeing to this amendment No. 1.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to move to send this bill to conference?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 154.

Mr. MASON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it does not require a quorum to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] makes the point there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that it does not require a quorum.

The SPEAKER. I know it does not require a quorum, but they can demand a roll call and everything of the sort.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I rise for the purpose of asking that the House donate a case of nuxated iron to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The SPEAKER. The motion is out of order.

Mr. MASON. If the gentleman had as much love for the boys in the old country as I have——

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. The gentleman has got more than he needs.

Mr. MASON (continuing). He would not waste cheap words on this particular question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MASON. If the gentleman tried nuxated iron he would have more force and less gall.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-seven gentlemen are present—a quorum.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104—the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104—the sundry civil bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MASON. I desire to oppose the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It has already been voted on.

Mr. CRISP. And it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The motion is agreed to, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

LIGHTHOUSES, BEACONS, FOG SIGNALS, LIGHT VESSELS, AND OTHER WORKS UNDER THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is authorized and directed, from vessels building or under contract, to transfer to the Lighthouse Service three vessels for use as lighthouse tenders and one vessel for use as a light ship, such vessels to be in lieu of the vessels authorized for the Lighthouse Service by the act approved June 20, 1918, and one vessel (to cost not to exceed $300,000) for use as a light ship to replace the vessel destroyed at the Diamond Shoal Light Station, N. C.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill for some explanation as to the details and workability of this scheme that has been developed by the committee in regard to these light vessels and tenders. I should like to know something more about it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, all that there is to be said about it is that the Emergency Fleet Corporation has building and under contract many ships. They stated to the committee that the value of those ships when completed is something to be determined in the future. Certainly they will not get full cost value, and inasmuch as that is true and the Lighthouse Service needs vessels of this character, we directed that the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall transfer to the Lighthouse Service the vessels needed by the Lighthouse Service to carry on their business.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I should like to ask the gentleman whether that is to be done after consultation with the officials of the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is. I will be frank to say to the gentleman that I have a letter from the Department of Commerce, in which they state that they have some doubt as to whether the Fleet Corporation can furnish them with the exact type of ships that they desire.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman evidently did not quite catch my inquiry. It was not so much the objections that were lodged against the proposition by the Department of Commerce and the Lighthouse Service, but as to what the Shipping Board had to say on the subject. Have they ships in process of construction now, or have they contracted for ships, subject to be constructed hereafter, that would be adaptable to this purpose and could be spared from other needs of the Government and assigned to this service?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have 2,538 ships now, either building or under contract to be built, and the opinion of the committee, after talking with representatives of the Fleet Corporation, was that some of those ships can be adapted to the uses of the Lighthouse Service. The economical thing to do is to complete those contracts and have the Fleet Corporation build those vessels in accordance with the requirements of the service.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not want to have a water haul after this thing is enacted into law and be told by the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation that they can not carry out the authorization and direction of this Congress in this regard, and it does not seem to me quite fair that the Committee on Appropriations should have brought in a provision of this kind unless they are prepared to tell gentlemen on this floor interested in these particular items that in their honest judgment this authorization can be carried out and will be.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have some hesitation in saying that they can assure the gentleman exactly what he desires. They may not furnish them to entirely suit the wishes of the Lighthouse Service, because our experience is that no department of the Government will ever agree to accept anything that has been contracted for by another department. The departments in a great many instances are not on speaking terms with each other; but there is not any doubt in the opinion of the members of this committee but that the Fleet Corporation can build, under the contracts they have, ships that will be suitable for the Lighthouse Service. I think the gentleman will be of the opinion that they are suitable.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I have no particular interest in the conflict between the departments, or as to whether certain old ladies and gentlemen are not on speaking terms with each other. [Laughter.] What I want to find out is whether something substantial will come from this, or whether this will be simply a "scrap of paper."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman that something is very likely to come from this. The Fleet Corporation is building these ships, and it is directed to build them.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Are they required to assign those ships to the Department of Commerce?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They are.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I do not care to take the time of the committee, but will the gentleman advise us how far he expects to have the bill read to-night?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have only 30 or 40 pages yet to read, and we expect to complete the bill to-night and send it to the Senate. After it passes the House, if the Senate does not want to pass it, they can do what they please with it.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman anticipates that there will be some considerable debate on this bill, does he not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I do not anticipate that there will be considerable debate.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman does not expect to get through to-night, I hope he will advise us to that effect, for the reason that we should not be kept here late. Some of us were kept here quite late last night.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think we can get through with it in the course of an hour or so.

Mr. MANN. I hope gentlemen will stay here until this bill is passed. If the House is to consider a contested election case to-morrow, this bill ought to be considered until it is out of the way.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I intend to demand a call of the House in case it should be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Yes; send out the Sergeant at Arms and bring in absent Members. This is one night when Members ought to be here to do business, and if they are not here to do business they should be sent for.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is my view and that is my purpose.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the American soldiers, sailors, and marines in the War with Germany have again demonstrated their ability to meet all comers. Those sent to France and those ready to go were as fine a body of men as was ever furnished by any country. These men met in France those from every portion of the world, and they proved themselves equal to any in spirit, enthusiasm, pluck, and intelligence. This was so of our soldiers regardless of color or nationality.

At this time I desire to say a word with reference to the colored soldier. From all the reports received from France it is evident that these soldiers have equaled any. They performed heroic feats and earned and received the commendation of the commanding officers of the American Army, as well as those of the French Army. Hundreds and hundreds of the colored soldiers have been singled out for special distinction. In some cases whole regiments, battalions, and companies have been likewise honored. The records of the War Department, from reports received from France, confirm these statements fully and completely. I can only take the time to mention a few of them, but the colored soldiers as a whole have shown the highest degree of patriotic service in this war. I will cite some of these evidences:

Distinguished-service crosses have been awarded by the commading general, American Expeditionary Forces, for extraordinary heroism in action in France to the following-named colored officers and enlisted men:

Charles G. Young, first lieutenant, Three hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Binarville, France, September 27 and 28, 1918. While in command of a scout platoon he was twice severely wounded from shell fire, but refused medical attention and remained with his men, helping to dress their wounds and to evacuate his own wounded during the entire night, and holding firmly his exposed position covering the right flank of his battalion.

Harvey W. Wilson, second lieutenant, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bussy Farm, France, September 28–29, 1918. After being hit by a shell splinter he continued to lead his platoon against the enemy position until he was again hit by another shell fragment and had to be carried from the field. His example of devotion to duty and his courage inspired the men of the platoon to continue the attack successfully.

Ira M. Payne, sergeant, Company A, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Sechault, France, September 29, 1918. Having found a machine gun hidden in a brush which was causing serious casualties to his company, he crept up, killed the gunners with his rifle, and captured the gun.

Roy A. Brown, sergeant, Company E, Three hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Leseaux, France, September 4, 1918. He was a member of a combat group which was attacked by 20 of an enemy raiding party, advancing under a heavy barrage and using liquid fire. The sergeant in charge of the group was killed and several others, including Sergt. Brown, were wounded. Nevertheless this soldier, with three others, fearlessly resisted the enemy until they were driven off.

Clifton Merrimon, corporal, Company L, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bussy Farm, France, September 27, 1918. He attacked with hand grenades an enemy machine gun which was causing heavy losses to his platoon and succeeded in killing the gunner and putting the gun out of action. He then organized the remainder of the platoon and led them to their positions in the trenches south of Bussy Farm.

Van Horton, corporal, Company E, Three hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Leseaux, France, September 4, 1918. During a hostile attack preceded by heavy minnenwerfer barrage, involving the entire front of the battalion, the combat group to which this courageous soldier belonged was attacked by about 20 of the enemy, using liquid fire. The sergeant in charge of the group and four other men having been killed, he fearlessly rushed to receive the attack and the persistency with which he fought resulted in stopping the attack and driving back the enemy.

Lewis Wakins, private, first class, Company A, Three hundred and fiftieth Machine Gun Battalion. For extraordinary heroism in action near Eply, France, November 4, 1918. He accompanied an Infantry patrol, acting as gunner with a heavy machine gun. When a large party of the enemy had worked around the flank of the patrol and was advancing across a road along which the patrol was withdrawing, he went into action with his gun, at a range of less than 100 yards, although the order to withdraw had been given. Displaying exceptional coolness and bravery under heavy rifle and machine-gun fire, he succeeded in dispersing the enemy. He was the last of the patrol to retire.

George Bell, private, Company E, Three hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Leseaux, France, September 4, 1918. Although he was severely wounded, he remained at his post and continued to fight a superior enemy force which had attempted to enter our lines, thereby preventing the success of an enemy raid in force.

Alex Hammond, private, Company E, Three hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Leseaux, France, September 4, 1918. Although he was severely wounded, he remained at his post and continued to fight a superior force which had attempted to enter our lines, thereby preventing the success of any enemy raid in force.

Bernard Lewis, private, Company A, Three hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Binarville, France, September 30, 1918. During an attack on Binarville he volunteered to go down the road that leads into the village to rescue a wounded soldier of his company. To accomplish his mission he was compelled to go under heavy machine-gun and shell fire. In total disregard of personal danger he brought the wounded man safely to our lines.

Clifford Crawford, private, Headquarters Company Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bussy Farm, France, September 28–29, 1918. He was acting as liaison agent between regimental headquarters and the battalion. Having carried a message through a heavy bombardment to the commander of a battalion which was about to make an attack, he joined the first wave of the attack and dashed into the enemy's trenches. Seeing two of the enemy rush to a dugout, he followed them and brought 10 prisoners from the dugout, killing two who tried to escape.

George Gross, private, Company D, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Sechault, France, September 29, 1918. Although he had been badly gassed, he kept his machine gun in action until he fell beside his gun.

Samuel H. Johns, private, Company L, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bussy Farm, France, September 28, 1918. After several other runners had been killed or wounded, he volunteered to carry a message over fields swept by heavy machine-gun fire and artillery bombardment. He succeeded in delivering the message, but was severely wounded while on the return trip.

Clarence R. Van Allen, private, Company L, Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bussy Farm, France, September 28, 1918. This soldier, unassisted, rushed an enemy machine gun, putting it out of action, and capturing three prisoners.

Other awards have been made, but the above are the only ones that have thus far been published officially in War Department General Orders.

The total number of colored soldiers participating were nearly 400,000, and the number serving abroad in France, Germany, Italy, etc., were over 200,000.

The colored commissioned officers in the service were over 1,200, many of them being college graduates.

Colored men served in all branches of the Military Establishment, including the Cavalry, Infantry, Artillery (Field and Coast), Signal Corps (radio or wireless telegraphy, etc.), Medical Corps, Aviation Corps (ground section), Ambulance and Hospital Corps, sanitary and ammunition trains, stevedore regiments, labor battalions, depot brigades, and engineer regiments.

Colored soldiers fought with especial distinction in France in the forest of Argonne, at Chateau-Thierry, in Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel district, Champagne sector, Metz, Vosges, etc., winning praise from French and American commanders. Colored troops were nearest the Rhine when the armistice was signed.

Entire regiments of colored troops cited for exceptional valor and decorated with the French Croix de Guerre were the Three hundred and sixty-ninth, Three hundred and seventy-first, and Three hundred and seventy-second; groups of officers and men of the Three hundred and sixty-fifth, Three hundred and sixty-sixth, Three hundred and sixty-eighth, and Three hundred and seventieth were likewise decorated.

Many individuals, like Henry Johnson, Needham Roberts, and William Butler were awarded the Croix de Guerre and Distinguished Service Cross, and scores of officers earned promotions in their military units.

The entire first battalion of the Three hundred and sixty-seventh (Buffaloes) Infantry was cited for bravery, and awarded the Croix de Guerre, thus entitling every officer and man in the battalion to wear this distinguished French decoration. This citation was made by the French commission because of the splendid service and bravery shown by this battalion in the last engagements of the war.

In a general order Second Lieut. Nathan O. Goodloe, of the Three hundred and sixty-eighth Machine-Gun Company, was commended for excellent work and meritorious conduct. During the operations in the Forest D'Argonne Lieut. Goodloe was attached to the Third Battalion. During the course of the action it became necessary to reorganize the battalion and withdraw part of it to a secondary position. He carried out the movement under a continual machine-gun fire from the enemy. Gen. Martin said: "Lieut. Goodloe's calm courage set an example that inspired confidence in his men."

Gen. Martin, commander of the Ninety-second Division, also cited for meritorious conduct near Vienne le Chateau Tom Brown, a wagoner, who, as driver of an ammunition wagon, displayed remarkable courage, coolness, and devotion to duty under fire. Brown hauled his wagon even after his horse had been hurled into a ditch by shells and, despite his own painful wounds, worked until he had extricated his horses from the ditch, refusing to quit until he had completed his work, even though covered with blood from a painful wound.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not in these remarks attempt to more than casually refer to the part taken by the colored soldiers in this war. Some time I trust there will be published a complete record of the part that they have taken, and the names of organizations, men, battles, and so forth, fully stated. I am sure that the entire colored population of the United States will have every reason to feel proud of the record that these men have made. Likewise every American citizen, regardless of color, religion, or nationality, should be proud of what they have done to bring about the great victory for the people of the entire universe. The whole citizenship of the United States should know the record that these soldiers have made in France, and I shall be one of those to do everything in my power to publish these facts fully and completely. I hope, too, that as the American people fully realize how heroically the colored soldiers have fought and how bravely they have died to bring freedom to the people of the world that there will be a better feeling toward them in all parts of the United States. Notwithstanding the record of these soldiers in this war an unjust feeling against the race still exists, as is indicated in an editorial recently called to my attention and which was published in a newspaper at Greenwood, Miss., as follows:

Circuit Clerk G. S. Pate informs the Daily Commonwealth that a good many negroes are applying at his office and registering for the purpose of voting in our elections, according to their statements to him. Our advice to these negroes, and all other negroes who contemplate registering, is that they had better get this idea out of their heads as soon as possible. The negroes are getting along mighty well with the white people of Leflore County, and have been for some time, and they ought to have better sense than to think that they will ever again have the remotest chance of voting in our elections. Such a thing is simply unthinkable, and the sooner these negroes who have registered—and those who contemplate doing so—realize this fact, the better for them. Therefore the thought should be speedily banished from their misguided minds.

A distinguished citizen of our country, recently discussing this and other evidences of the unfair treatment of the colored people, had this to say:

It is one thing to grant in a constitution, and in the forms of law, the fullest recognition of religious freedom, and it is another thing to achieve complete equality of opportunity in the political, social, and business fields of activity unobstructed by traditional religious prejudices.

The laws of our country promise to give equal rights, but how are they observed? The negro under the Constitution is regarded as a citizen, at least when he is to pay taxes and fight for the country's flag, but that ends his opportunity, except the privilege of being lynched from time to time. The equal rights of the smallest nation is to be maintained under the league just consummated abroad, but the equal rights of some of the citizens of the largest Republic in the world is "a mere scrap of paper." Is it a matter of surprise that the red agitators find material for hellish propaganda among the disfranchised, whether white or black? Congress is busy investigating in many directions. Why not stop such cowardly threats as are contained in the above editorial? I am not waving the bloody shirt, but as an American citizen voice my protest against racial or religious persecution and injustice.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that out of this war and the sacrifices made by the colored people that there will come a wave throughout the land of patriotic fervor on the part of all the people that will demand of those charged with the responsibility of government that the colored people shall receive and that they will have their rights as citizens protected. There ought not to be any need for these people and their white friends petitioning to the Congress of the United States that laws be enacted to give them justice. Yet we are petitioned from time to time to do that which is right and proper in this regard. Recently there came to Congress a petition as follows:

To the Congress of the United States—A memorial:

The board of managers of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church hereby earnestly memoralizes the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States to pass a Federal law for the suppression of lynching, we being thoroughly convinced that this brutality can not be hindered by State legislation and as thoroughly convinced that it can be stopped by Federal legislation and the holding of each locality in which lynching occurs to a community responsibility for the doings of its anonymous citizens. We further believe that to-day is the day of days for such legislation, inasmuch as the Negro race, which has been the most frequent object of lynching, has made a record for bravery and efficiency and patriotism on the battle field and at home, so as to make their conduct a righteous demand that the rights belonging to an American citizen shall be accorded them in full measure.

This memorial was unanimously adopted by the board of managers of the Freedmen's Aid Society at its annual meeting, January 14, 1919.

FREDERICK D. LEETE,
First Vice President.
P. J. MAVEETY,
I. GARLAND PENN,
Corresponding Secretaries.

Attest:

D. LEE ALTMAN,
Recording Secretary.

Accompanying this petition is a statement as to what the Freedmen's Aid Society is and who represented it in its petition to Congress. As to this, I find the following to be the facts:

The Freedman's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1866. Its purpose is the Christian education of the Negro. It has a theological seminary at Atlanta, Ga., for the training of colored ministers; a medical college at Nashville, Tenn., where 500 young men and a few young women are being trained as physicians, pharmacists, dentists, and nurses; and in addition it has 18 other institutions for the training of teachers, industrial, and other Christian leaders for service among the Negro people. These centers of Christian education are open to the people of all denominations or no denomination.

In the 52 years of its work it has sent from these schools ministers, physicians, teachers, and industrial leaders numbering over 200,000. This service has cost more than $10,000,000. To-day it has 20 schools, 334 teachers, and 5,702 students. The annual budget amounts to over $500,000.

BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETY.

Bishops: William F. Anderson, Cincinnati, Ohio; William A. Quayle, St. Louis, Mo.; Frank M. Bristol, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Francis J. McConnell, Denver, Colo.; Frederick D. Leete, Atlanta, Ga.; Wilbur P. Thirkield, New Orleans, La.; Joseph C. Hartzell, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Ministers: Henry C. Jennings, Albert J. Nast, D. Lee Altman, Herbert Scott, E. C. Wareing, W. H. Wehrly, John H. Race, C. E. Schenk, V. F. Brown, W. B. Slutz, E. R. Overley.

Laymen: R. B. McRary, Charles Hommeyer, E. R. Graham, Lewis N. Gatch, E. C. Harley, C. F. Coffin, C. L. Swain, H. H. Garrison, Harlan C. West, George D. Webb.

Mr. Chairman, in this present Congress I presented a bill (H. R. 11279) for the purpose of protecting citizens of the United States against lynching in default of protection by the States. That bill has not been enacted into law, but I shall present it again in the next Congress and continually as long as I am a Member of Congress till a law substantially as outlined in this bill is written upon the statute books of the United States. In some of the States colored people are not protected against lynching. State officials and county officials fail in their duty in this respect.

The Congress of the United States must enact a law and see to it that it is enforced and all guilty of participating in or permitting lynching are severely punished. I trust that in the next few months we will see evidences of a better feeling on the part of the people in all parts of the United States toward the colored race. If that comes about, then there will be probably no need for the enactment of a law by Congress touching lynchings; yet during this war and while the colored soldiers have been fighting and dying in France to preserve the honor of the United States, its Government and its people, lynchings have been going on in some sections of this country. These lynchings have practically all been of colored people. I for one shall continue to protest and fight against this unjust treatment accorded to a great portion of our people. I am going to remember the heroism of our colored soldiers in France and of the many who have given up their lives there, and I shall now again resolve, in the words of Lincoln, "that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not die in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Keepers of lighthouses: For salaries of not exceeding 1,800 lighthouse and fog-signal keepers and laborers attending lights exclusive of post lights, $1,300,000.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the RECORD to show that I am addressing the Chair during this reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inspectors, clerks, etc.: For salaries of 17 superintendents of lighthouses, and for clerks and other authorized permanent employees in the district offices and depots of the Lighthouse Service, exclusive of those regularly employed in the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses, District of Columbia, $380,000.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, at the end of this paragraph I desire to be recognized to make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For retired pay of officers and employees engaged in the field service or on vessels of the Lighthouse Service, except persons continuously employed in district offices and shops, $45,000.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the RECORD to show that at the end of this paragraph I addressed the Chair and the Chair declined to recognize me. I have no personal feeling about it, but just simply want the record as it is. Under the rules of the House I suppose I can make a point of no quorum. I want to bring the boys home.

Private John Allen Station (Tupelo, Miss.): Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; 3 apprentice fish-culturists, at $600 each; in all, $4,200.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer the following amendment to the section just read, page 145, line 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of officers and crews of the steamers Halcyon and Phalarope, $17,700.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 146, strike out the language in lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Steamer Halcyon: Master, $1,700; first officer, $1,200; engineer, $1,400; assistant engineer, $1,200; 3 firemen at $780 each; 3 seamen at $810 each; cook, $870; cabin boy, $600; in all, $11,740.

"Steamer Phalarope: Master, $1,500; engineer, $1,200; fireman, $780; 2 seamen at $810 each; cook, $870; in all, $5,970."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Reserving the point of order, the amendment does not propose to increase the amount?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I will say that it corresponds exactly to the estimates submitted by the department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MASON. I want to know if you wish to proceed without a quorum? I have made the point of order that there is no quorum present, and it is perfectly apparent that there is no quorum. I want to ask whether you expect the law would be constitutional and binding in this country without a quorum, when I have made the point of no quorum, and when I am not recognized to make the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska, general service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees and subsistence while on said islands, hire and maintenance of vessels, and for all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes," and for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $125,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask why this item has been increased?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is an increase there because of the increased cost of supplies, food, fuel, and clothing. For this year they had $144,700, including the sundry civil appropriation and a deficiency appropriation, and the amount here is $125,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to delay the committee only a moment. This item brings to my mind a practice which curiously illustrates some of the methods of the governmental departments. The Pribilof Islands, the home of the fur-seal herd, lie up in the Bering Sea, one of the most exposed regions in the world, up yonder inside the Arctic Circle. In the care of the seals and the preparation of the skins it is necessary to employ quite a considerable number of natives. There is quite a settlement of natives on the islands. It is necessary that they have houses, and we have been putting up houses for those natives, up on those bleak, wind-swept, icy coasts. What kind of houses do you suppose? Well, they are not exactly pasteboard houses. They are the next thing to it. They are these cheap, knocked-down, put-up-with-a-hammer houses that are made in Kalamazoo and Oshkosh and shipped up there in sections and put together. If one can conceive anything more extraordinary and incongruous than that sort of construction in that sort of a country, they must be possessed of a very lively imagination.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of houses do the natives build for themselves?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know that they are building much in the way of houses for themselves since we got in the habit of building these flimsy shacks for them. Naturally, they have lost the art and the habit of building for themselves. I have been asking this service for a number of years to study the original house construction of the natives, and the house construction of Iceland, and the Shetlands, and Spitzbergen, and regions similar to these, and the cheap grout construction of the Northwest, where houses are built easily with ordinary labor, something that the natives can build and repair and keep in order. I trust they will build no more of these flimsy structures, and I have some hope—just a little hope—that we may eventually stir up the initiative of the bureau and get them to doing something practical up there in the Arctic in the way of house construction.

The idea in a section like that of building ready-to-erect houses in Oshkosh and shipping them across the continent, taking them up through the icy seas, unloading them onto barges in the wind-swept and tempestuous water, carrying them ashore—of course, they break—and putting them together, the slimsiest things in the world, intended for camp purposes. They were never expected to be used as permanent habitations for man in a tempestuous climate. But some one connected with the service found that was the easiest way to buy a house, as you buy a pound of tea, and have it ready-made, take it up there and put it up.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. How long has this thing been going on?

Mr. MONDELL. For a number of years. I have been trying, in my feeble way, for a long time to wake up this bureau to the utter folly and futility of that kind of construction. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Testing of large scales: For investigation and testing of railroad track scales, elevator scales, and other scales used in weighing commodities for interstate shipments and to secure equipment and assistance for testing the scales used by the Government in its transactions with the public, such as post-office, navy-yard, and customhouse scales, and for the purpose of cooperating with the States in securing uniformity in the weights and measures laws and in the methods of inspection, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 4, page 149, to insert an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 149, line 4, after the word "and," insert the word "made."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 736), and May 9, 1918 (Stat. L., vol. 40, pp. 542 to 548, inclusive), including personal services in the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street car fare on official business at official stations, together with per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for such per diem together with actual necessary traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications of legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $5,300 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 765), and in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act of June 12, 1917; and for mileage and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States, the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $350,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$350,000" and insert "$675,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: Page 152, line 16, strike out "$350,000" and insert "$675,000."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the work being done by this Bureau of Naturalization is of vital importance at this particular time. This money does not come out of the taxpayers of the country. They have paid into the Treasury by the head tax $750,000 in excess of the amount necessary to take care of the service. We asked that this be made $675,000 in order that this good work may be carried on. In cities where there is a large foreign population it is of the utmost importance to Americanize these new citizens. The cities throughout the country are giving schoolrooms, and the Government is furnishing free textbooks. At this time it is of great importance to offset the work of the propaganda that has a tendency toward socialism and bolshevism, and I appeal to you to accept this amendment, as it is not money to come out of the taxpayers.

I ask that you adopt this amendment to enable this department to continue the work it has already started. In the city of Pittsburgh and other cities it is doing a wonderfully good work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What type of men are employed for this kind of work?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Men that are naturalized and speak the language of those that we want to reach.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not a fact that the employees of the bureau assume an arrogant attitude toward these people?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. It may be, but not in this case.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am talking about the Bureau of Naturalization. Does not Mr. CAMPBELL feel it his duty to prevent people from being naturalized rather than assist them in being naturalized?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean me?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I am talking about the Chief of the Naturalization Bureau.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I think not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman said that textbooks were furnished to the schools. Does the gentleman have any such schools conducted in his city?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. There are.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By the Bureau of Naturalization?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. There are schools conducted there by voluntary subscription.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But not by the Bureau of Naturalization. The gentleman said the purpose of the bureau was to keep down bolshevism and socialism. Is the gentleman aware that that is what they are not doing? A man who is a Bolshevist goes there and kids these people who want to become citizens and want to remain here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. The object of the bureau is to make American citizens of them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But that is just what they do not do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. In the district I have the honor to represent there are upward of 35 nationalities, and they are all eager and anxious to become Americanized, eager to be taught; even men 50 years old are going to school.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am not discussing the schools.

Mr. FARR. Are the schools not conducted under the authority of the school superintendent?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania understand that these schools could be conducted under this appropriation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Why not, if they have the money to pay for it?

Mr. MONDELL. There is no authority of law for it. If they had all the money in the world, they could do nothing of the sort.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I am only asking for an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. If they had an increase they could not conduct schools with it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. They could carry on the work as provided in the law.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no such thing as providing schools carried in the law.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. There is a bill now before the Committee on Education which provides for Americanizing foreigners and taking care of that very thing, but this item does not provide for anything of the kind; and if you increase the appropriation, it would not do any good.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. They have been doing this very work.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. And Mr. Lane asked for $7,500,000 to conduct this very work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] is misinformed as to the character of work done under this appropriation. Many of the things that he has referred to may be most desirable, but as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] said, the schools to which he has referred are being paid for by the State of Pennsylvania. Under this appropriation not only is a school not conducted, but none of the textbooks to which the gentleman has referred are paid for out of the funds.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I grant the gentleman that the textbooks are furnished out of another fund, but this is to conduct the work.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What work?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. To pay these men that go around who are employed by the Bureau of Naturalization.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this fund is used for no purpose other than to pay examiners. We have always had a force of examiners. Heretofore the appropriation was $275,000. On May 9, 1918, Congress passed an act having for its purpose the naturalization of the soldiers in the cantonments of the country. The Senate included an appropriation of $400,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not now. That $400,000 made $675,000 altogether. With the $675,000 the Naturalization Service proceeded to employ examiners.

And before the armistice was signed the estimate was submitted for $675,000, for which the gentleman now asks. The armistice came. The naturalization examiners were taken from the cantonments, and they are now on the hands of the Bureau of Naturalization, which is striving to find some job to keep these examiners, who traveled around the country to these camps, on the pay roll. The number of examiners who visited these camps run away up—more than 100. They received good salaries. The gentleman who is in charge of this work was asked the specific question by me as to what he proposed to do with them. He said that they were very good men, who wanted to stay in the work, and therefore he thought he would keep them and put them on this regular work. In no way can it be said that they contribute to the work the gentleman has in mind of educating those who desired naturalization, except in this.

He says that when an examiner goes to a man who is an applicant for citizenship he impresses upon him the wisdom of being a citizen. There is no earthly reason why the examiner who goes to him originally with regard to his naturalization can not advise him to become a citizen just as easily as a man who was on the pay rolls last year and whose duty it was to be sent on another trip to visit him and say, "I want to advise you to become a citizen." These men are examiners. Not one dollar is spent out of this fund except for examiners. The gentlemen who are the members of the committee endeavored to get information from the head of this service, and after they had vainly spent three or four hours endeavoring to get an account of the exact amount spent under the original appropriation of $275,000, and what was proposed to be done with the $400,000 that was asked for, we all came to the conclusion that we could not get any information.

The gentleman was asked to revise his remarks, and as they appear in the hearings they defy analysis, and the only conclusion that you can reach is that the $400,000 was lumped with the $275,000, and now that he has these gentlemen in the service he desires to keep them, as he says in the hearings. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will not the gentleman admit that there were naturalized 167,000 aliens in our Army camps?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There were.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. And the purpose is to Americanize them?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no; that work is finished, and the gentleman who has charge of finishing it says so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Many of them could not speak the English language clearly when they went to camp.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They fought in our Army.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes; and they are entitled to be instructed in Americanism.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And they are.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. You make no provision for that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman can not make provision out of this fund to establish schools. You would have to have legislation authorizing the establishment of schools.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. The Congress has given the Bureau of Naturalization authority to promote the training of these foreigners by the public schools of the country.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The public schools of the country are training them. There is not any reason here for any man to argue that a dollar of this fund is to be expended in schools, because it can not be expended there. There is no reason for any arguments other than this, that with the $75,000 additional appropriation given in this bill they can communicate with any man who is an applicant for citizenship and advise him of the benefits of citizenship, and of learning the English language and becoming a citizen, and we have given them $75,000 more this year than they had for any previous year because we believe in encouraging the work, but none of the many desirable things urged by the gentlemen are possible here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I am indeed amazed at the statement of the gentleman who has charge of this bill, because of the lack of knowledge that he seems to possess in the matter of work of the bureau of naturalization. The head of this bureau appeared, as the evidence will show, before the committee and showed how this money was spent. Last year there was appropriated for this bureau $275,000, and because of the exigencies of war $400,000 additional was allowed to procure additional help for the purpose of naturalizing aliens who enlisted in our Army. It is estimated that we have about 12,000,000 aliens in the United States. The number of registrants between the ages of 21 and 31 years was 1,703,006. Those who registered on the 12th of September, 1918, numbered 2,174,072, making a total of aliens who registered for our Army of 5,214,050, while the number of aliens and citizens registered was 23,908,576, thus making 21.9 per cent of all of those who registered as aliens and naturalized persons. Seven hundred and fifty thousand of those aliens who registered had no knowledge of the English language. Now, then, what has been done with this fund? On May 9, last year, the Congress passed an act permitting citizenship to every alien who had taken out his first papers and who enlisted under our banner. Many of those soldiers could not understand the commands of their own officers. They did not know what "fours right" or "fours left" meant. They did not know what it meant when the officers said "Forward, march."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They did pretty well in France, though, under those commands.

Mr. WELTY. Certainly, they did well in France, and I am not saying anything against these men who fought so nobly in France. Certainly, they did; but shall it be said that this Nation is so stingy, so small, as not to provide for an agency whereby they can be furnished books and literature and permitted to learn the English language and thus be able to convey their feelings to us who can not understand their language?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This will not do it.

Mr. WELTY. This will not do it; what will do it? By permitting the alien to drift?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We do it in the city of New York at our own expense.

Mr. WELTY. Most assuredly; but you have agencies having men go around and find just where they are and offer opportunity to learn the basic principles of our country. The aliens will not go to your public schools. They will not go there, because they are too old. They must have separate night schools.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We do that in New York.

Mr. WELTY. I am asking for a small sum to stimulate the public schools to greater activity. You go to one locality in New York and often wonder whether you are in Bohemia, Russia, or Poland. You go to another section, and you wonder whether you are in Italy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly, because the Italians brought some of their country's culture there.

Mr. WELTY. It is not American culture. What we want is to teach these aliens American ideals and let them know what those American ideals mean and that the same is distinctly American.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They were all imported, were they not?

Mr. WELTY. Certainly; they were all immigrants. They came to our land because there was something here which they could not get where they came from. I believe that most of them were attracted to our shores because of the customs, laws, and institutions of our country. Some, I am sorry to note, came here for no other purpose than to exploit our resources, get some money, with a hope that some day they can return and live on that money earned here with greater ease than in the land from whence they came. This class of citizens should not be permitted to remain in this country. They care nothing for our country and its ideals. Most of them care very little for the comforts of home life in America. They do not bring their families, but expect to live cheaply here, content to occupy poor quarters, with a hope of getting rich quick and return after they have earned enough to keep them the balance of their lives.

Mr. Chairman, for years we have permitted the scum and every grade of criminals in Europe to find an asylum here with those who came here because they were sick and tired of autocracy and its handicaps to the toiling. I am inclined to believe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] does not understand the meaning and force of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL]. The money appropriated by Congress for the Bureau of Naturalization is not used to deport objectionable aliens, for the jurisdiction of deportation rests under our laws with the Commissioner of Immigration. It was not the Commissioner of Naturalization who deported the bunch of I. W. W.'s who denounced this country and its Constitution in such language as not to permit its repetition here.

I know some of these immigration officers do make mistakes at times, but I do not think they make a mistake when they take by the nape of the neck every I. W. W. and Bolshevik and boot him across the sea from where he came.

Mr. Chairman, what the Bureau of Naturalization attempts to do is to build a fire under the "melting pot in America" and teach these aliens the basic principles so that they might float off into American citizenship and lose their foreign identity by mingling with those possessing a common language and owe allegiance only to the Stars and Stripes.

And, sirs, we are asking only for a sum of money out of the surplus collected from these aliens. Not one cent comes from the taxpayers. Since the declaration of war the Bureau of Naturalization has been exceedingly busy because of the act of May 9, 1918, providing for the naturalization of all aliens who had taken out their first papers upon entering the Army. Between the 1st day of October, 1917, and September, 1918, 176,816 drafted soldiers were naturalized, while 150,246 alien soldiers became citizens since the passage of the act. This required additional help not only in the field but in the office force as well. Now, these soldiers can not read and write the English language. They will not go to school with children 7 and 8 years old. If you are not going to provide educational facilities for the alien population, are we justified in permitting these soldiers who fought to protect our country and homes from drifting? Should we not encourage night schools for them?

We hear a great deal about vocational training. Every wounded or sick soldier with a hospital record is entitled to the benefits of an education. Every alien soldier who was sent to the hospital will receive the benefit of this education. They learn to read and write and are taught a useful occupation, but shall we neglect those who were not sent to the hospital, especially when the appropriation of this amount is only out of the surplus of the amount the Government collected from these aliens? Gentlemen, we can not in good conscience collect this tax off of these aliens unless we mean to use the funds so collected for their benefit.

Mr. Chairman, the present bill carries $2,000,000 for vocational training.

At first the bill carried a million and a half, but the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] offered an amendment to increase that to $3,000,000 and was strongly supported by my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS], all this vast sum to be spent for vocational training alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WELTY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, let us see if we can have an agreement for debate on this matter. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments to the paragraph end in 15 minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I desire five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I expect to take five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. WELTY. Not now. I do not want to be discourteous, but I wish you would wait until I finish what I am about to develop. Now, I am in favor of the reeducation of these men who are wounded and in doing everything we can, but, as was said on the floor of the House, every college and State institution is not only willing but anxious to furnish education to these young soldiers, and it will not cost the Government one cent for their education, save and except their subsistence, quarters, and medical aid. These colleges are the proper places to send these boys. They want to return home. God knows that many a heart is aching to return to the old homestead. Return these boys to their respective States to be educated in their respective State schools. The hospital is no place to reeducate our boys. Restore them to health and then discharge them from the hospital as soon as possible.

But we have appropriated $2,000,000 for vocational training. Oh, out here at the Walter Reed Hospital, for instance, what do we find? A printing press that cost, I understand, $13,000, to teach those boys how to print and instruct them in the art of printing. Buildings after buildings are erected and expensive equipment installed, and yet beween 60 and 70 per cent of those boys have not passed further than the eighth grade. I understand there is a wireless apparatus out there with which last week they were able to pick up a message between Berlin and London. We have a greenhouse there, where they attempt to grow vegetables and flowers for the sick in this hospital. You go through that greenhouse and you will find they raise the finest of vegetables and flowers for these boys. It is right that money should be appropriated for that purpose, but when you go to the books and find out where these vegetables and flowers have gone you will then realize that three-fourths of them have gone to the colonels and the majors and the captains and the lieutenants, probably that those officers might serve the poor patients more efficiently. Are we going to spend all this money for these purposes? Are we going to coordinate in this vocational training?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELTY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Reverting to the colleges willing to do this work, my colleague will recognize the Government must pay for the expense of subsistence.

Mr. WELTY. Oh, yes; and that is not all. They pay for quartors and for medical aid and for subsistence. That is not very much. That does not cost very much, as the gentleman from Ohio knows, because he used to be a teacher——

Mr. FESS. The plan of the vocational board was to utilize all these existing institutions without the Government creating any new ones.

Mr. WELTY. That is all right if they are doing that. But why are they spending these large sums of money here at the hospitals? It seems that we are going wild in some of our appropriations and forget that these colleges are better equipped to educate the soldiers than any agency the Government can create.

Mr. FESS. A hospital is for the primary work before the training can begin, and now the boys are about to go out from the hospitals, where the training is increasing very rapidly.

Mr. WELTY. In passing, let me say that I do not want to reflect on the Surgeon General's office. It is impossible to keep selfishness out of the Army. I feel sure that Gen. Ireland will speedily correct any abuses that may be called to his attention. Too much praise can not be given to the work of this department, especially when we compare the unhealthy conditions of the camps and the sickness during the Spanish-American War and the work done by the Medical Department in this war. No soldiers received better medical treatment than did the American soldiers during this war. I am simply calling this matter to the attention of the House because we are apt to overlook the fact that our State schools will take care of these boys if we will only permit them to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for a moment?

Mr. WELTY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Committee on Education is expecting to-night to favorably report what is known as the Americanization bill, which is legislation that will bring about what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] wish?

Mr. WELTY. Most assuredly. That is what they are going to try to do; and that is the trouble with our Federal Government. It is attempting to control every agency rightly belonging to our States. I do hope that the time will never come when the control of our schools is transferred from the several States to the Federal Government. God knows that the Federal Government is controlling too much now. The tendency is to destroy not only the initiative of every individual but to deprive our States of their sovereignty and reduce them to townships and counties. If this fund is appropriated, it will not be used to start schools, but to furnish books and literature to be used in night schools under the direction of the local boards of education.

We do not need any more new agencies. We have enough bureaus. It keeps a Member of Congress busy trying to learn where they can be found.

The proper channel to teach these aliens American ideals is through the Bureau of Naturalization. That is why this bureau was organized. Then why should the Department of Education assume this duty when all can be accomplished by the naturalization officers through the medium of the common schools?

Remember this, gentlemen, that the 176,816 soldiers naturalized under the act passed by Congress are not the only aliens in our Army. It is estimated that 50,000 aliens in the country joined the independent forces. The Czech, Slovak, Bohemian, and Polish aliens in America formed an independent army because they could not understand our officers. All these are returning, and it is high time that we knew their spirit; and we should remember that we are unable to know it, when they come back, unless we have a common language. These all fought for the American ideals, and yet they are unable to convey that ideal to us in a language we can understand. We believe alike, think alike, and we act alike, and yet we do not know our kindred spirits. Gen. Crowder in his report has this to say about these aliens:

The great and inspiring revelation here has been that men of foreign and of native origin alike responded to the call to arms with a patriotic devotion that confounded the cynical plans of our arch enemy and surpassed our own highest expectations. No man can peruse the muster roll of one of our camps, or the casualty list from a battle field in France, without realizing that America has fulfilled one of its highest missions in breeding a spirit of common loyalty among all those who have shared the blessings of life on its free soil. No need to speculate how it has come about; the great fact is demonstrated that America makes Americans. In the diary of a German officer, found on the battle field, the following sentence, penned by one of the enemy whom these men went out to fight, speaks volumes: "Only a few of the troops are of pure American origin; the majority are of German, Dutch and Italian parentage. But these semi-Americans—almost all of whom were born in America and never have been in Europe—fully feel themselves to be true-born sons of their country."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELTY. We hear so much of America being the "melting pot of the world." A judge, in his charge to the jury, aptly said:

We find all over these United States, in groups, little Germanies, little Italies, little Austrias, little Norways, little Russias. These foreign people have thrown a circle about themselves, and, instead of keeping the oath they took that they would try to grow American souls inside of them, they have studiously striven to exclude everything American and to cherish everything foreign. A clever gentleman wrote a romance called "America, the Melting Pot." It appealed to our vanity, and through all these years we have been seeing romance instead of fact. That is the awful truth. The figure of my country stands beside you to-day. It says to me, "Do not blame this man alone. I am partly to blame. Teach him, and the like of him, and all those who have been misled by him and his like that a change has come."

There must be an interpretation anew of the oath of allegiance. It has been in the past nothing but a formula of words. From this time on it must be translated into living characters incarnate in the life of every foreigner who has his dwelling place in our midst. If they have been cherishing foreign history, foreign ideals, foreign loyalty, it must be stopped, and they must begin at once, all over again, to cherish American thought, American history, American ideals. That means something that is to be done in your daily life. It does not mean simply that you will not take up arms against the United States. It goes deeper far than that. It means that you will live for the United States, and that you will cherish and grow American souls inside of you.

The Bureau of Naturalization is the proper agency to lead these men to this new light. They have been furnishing the textbooks and literature for use in the common schools without any expense to the taxpayer. These aliens have paid it all—not one dollar comes from the taxpayers. This money has been collected from the aliens and there is a surplus in the Treasury of $754,415.21. Should we not use this money to educate these soldiers who can not read and write the English language? Will we help them or suppress them? It is their country just as much as it is our country, for they fought to preserve its institutions. I hope that the amendment will carry.

Some time ago I introduced a bill requiring every alien to register and pay an annual fee during his alienage, which bill, I believe, will be favorably reported by the Committee on Immigration; but I can not support even my own bill if the money so collected will not be used to teach these aliens American ideals so that we might better understand them and that they might receive the benefits of a knowledge of the basic principles of our Government.

The American laborer must receive sufficient pay to live and rear his family in pleasant surroundings, and out of his surplus earnings pay for a home which he should own. He can not do this in competition with cheap laborers who are content to live in dirt and filth. The foreigner must realize that American citizenship has advantages which he desires. We can not throw citizenship on him. He would not appreciate the same. He must win that citizenship himself, and the only way he can do it is by possessing a knowledge of our language, customs, and institutions, and being taught to live in a home where his children can be reared to become equals to every American. I do hope that the amendment will carry.

Mr. SEIGEL. Mr. Chairman, I exceedingly regret that what is a most important matter has temporarily descended into a dispute between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] and my colleague [Mr. LAGUARDIA] as to the place or places from where the population of this country came. The work these examiners in naturalization have been doing has consisted of examining the declarations made by would-be citizens. At the present time there are 46,000 of such declarations that have been unexamined for months. They have had to appear before the various judges where naturalization courts are held for the purpose of examining the applicant and his witnesses. Now, the truth of the matter is, we are short of examiners; and I believe that if the members of the Appropriations Committee had seen the shortage of examiners in the city of New York, for example, where applicants for naturalization have to stand in line and to wait day in and day out for the purpose of becoming naturalized, they would not have proceeded to cut down the amount which is actually required.

Now, it is true that these same examiners have done a certain amount of Americanization work, and it is true that considerable credit is due to Mr. Crist for having started that work. But these examiners are needed for other purposes. They are needed because in this country to-day there are 11,000,000 people who have not been naturalized, and it is useless to yell from one end of the country to the other for them to get naturalized and expect the applicant to stand day in and day out for the purpose of being naturalized, dragging witnesses down to the court repeatedly, standing in long lines in the post-office building, and then expect men to become American citizens at a great, unnecessary loss of time and money to them and their witnesses.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. FESS. We passed a bill providing for the naturalization by wholesale of those who had gone already in the Army.

Mr. SIEGEL. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. But provided that it could be done in the camps where an officer of the court could go and do it. Do we have any information as to how many of those have been naturalized?

Mr. SIEGEL. I think something more than 179,000 have been naturalized, which is a large number. The court went to the camps and these examiners went down there. While that was going on naturalization ceased, practically, in the other parts of the country.

Mr. WELTY. It is 179,116 that were actually naturalized in the camps.

Mr. FESS. What proportion will that make of our entire alien soldier activity? That is, were a very large proportion of them naturalized?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will say this, it is known now that at least 200,000 and some odd who could have claimed exemption waived exemption and went into the service to fight for us and many of them have received the distinguished service cross.

There are over 10,000 applications of aliens for citizenship which have arrived from the other side, and the final papers have not been granted. Those papers are still lying around and are yet to be examined.

Mr. FESS. The law was justified, then?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; it was more than justified. It was justified by urgent necessity and it was justified by international law. If they had been captured on they other side, they could have been executed.

I urge the appropriation for this reason, because every dollar has come from the people naturalized. Not a single cent comes out of the Treasury of the United States. Over $750,000 was received during the last fiscal year, and the total amount that we ask for all the expenses, including office rent and including nine or ten thousand dollars for the blank paper on which these certificates are issued, is a total of $675,000.

Now, I do not know how many Members of the House have watched the process of naturalization actually going on. I have watched it step by step in New York. One of my colleagues from Ohio was with me a week ago; and I tell you, gentlemen, that every dollar appropriated brings more than 100 per cent in returns. We should do all we can to help men become real American citizens in this case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized for three minutes, if I may.

Mr. Chairman, the item under consideration has been increased over the appropriation for the current year by some $75,000, and that in spite of the fact that a very considerable amount of the activities undertaken in the current year will be completed and will not be carried on in the next fiscal year.

It is true that we have a great many aliens in this country, and it is true that a great many of them need education in English. But it is also true that, without regard to the size of this appropriation, no dollar of it could be properly expended for the purpose of educating aliens. There has been quite a sentiment in favor of the Federal Government doing this work, but it can not be done under this appropriation.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield, although I have only three minutes.

Mr. WELTY. Can not this fund be used for the purpose of sending the books and the literature to the schools?

Mr. MONDELL. No part of this fund is used for sending out books. There is a separate and distinct fund for the purpose of sending textbooks out, and not a dollar of this fund is used for that purpose. What gentlemen want to use it for is "to send men around." That is the theory. There have been a lot of men employed in this service in one place and another, going around and talking to the folks, and they want to continue the employment of these gentlemen going around and talking to people——

Mr. WELTY. Making arrangements with schools.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no provision in the law under which this appropriation can be used for the purpose of "sending men around," and there is no reason why we should pay money out of the Federal Treasury for the purpose of "sending men around." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a word. The Committee on Appropriations is compelled to rely upon the showing made by the departments, and whenever a department can not show what it is going to do with money you can bet, to use a slang expression, nobody else can, because they have developed an ingenuity and a skill in the way of finding reasons for appropriating public money that is beyond anything dreamed of.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] exhausted a great deal of energy in trying to get from Mr. Crist, who came representing these items, something to show why he needed any more money than what the committee had indicated.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I have only two minutes. The very best they could do was to get out of him a statement by which he accounted for $280,000 and for $95,100. If you add these two sums together, you will get $375,100. The committee cut it $25,000, and that, judging by my experience of a good many years in department estimates, was a very conservative cut. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, unless the Committee on Labor have an amendment to offer, I would like to offer an amendment here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: Page 152, after line 17, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"United States Employment Service: To enable the Secretary of Labor to continue the United States Employment Service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, $10,033,080.10, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer, at the end of line 16, to strike out "$350,000" and make it "$375,000."

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has been passed.

Mr. SIEGEL. No new paragraph has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 152, line 16, strike out "$350,000" and insert "$375,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SIEGEL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes, 23.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted [After counting.] Five Members, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to continue the investigation touching women in industry, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, on page 152, line 20, I move to strike out $40,000 and insert $150,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Montana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Miss RANKIN: Page 152, line 23, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$150,000."

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this provides for an investigation touching women in industry. We have had women in industry for a great many years, but during the war so many more women entered industry that it is very essential that the conditions under which those women work should be investigated and should be kept to the same high standard that we demand for men's work. Unless this is done it is going to double the expense of taking care of men in industry, for these women will undercut the men in their pay and will demoralize the working conditions. So it is very necessary to make a special study of women in industry for the benefit of both men and women. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the committee in fixing the sum of $40,000 fixed the identical sum for this work that has been carried during the current year. When this was established as a war emergency bureau of the Department of Labor during the past year Prof. Marshall, who presented very excellent reasons for it, urged that $40,000 would be sufficient for the purpose of this particular bureau, carrying out its duty of policy making. It provided a director at $5,000, an assistant director at $3,500, a chief clerk at $2,500, a secretary at $2,000; and a very able woman was placed in charge, who up to this time has been doing her best to develop some policies and to establish standards for women throughout the country. In the very nature of things it can not be expanded into a separate department of the Government with district offices throughout the country, and, as the lady in charge very intelligently shows, it can not be made a statutory organization, but for the present should be continued.

She believes it is a special problem, and we will all admit that women are always a special problem, whether in industry or out of industry. For that reason the committee thought it wise to recommend that $40,000, the same amount carried for the current year, be appropriated, in order that she may have a chance to see whether she can accomplish the purposes she has in mind. She stated that she arrived at this estimate of $150,000, because she took the amount spent for women in industry in the Ordnance Department, and the amount spent in the Navy Department, and the various other departments during the war and lumped them all, and before the armistice was signed this estimate of $150,000 was made. I think the amount appropriated for this service is ample, and I believe that under her direction it will do very good work.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What amount did the bureau ask for?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Has the Bureau of Statistics in the Labor Department been doing this work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not this particular work, but the Bureau of Labor Statistics has been doing work of this kind, and it has prepared documents on the subject of women in industry, and made investigations. Miss Van Kleek, who was in charge of this bureau, said that possibly the work could be carried on by the Bureau of Labor Statistics; but because a separate bureau would give greater prestige to the organization, she was anxious to have it continued as a separate organization.

Mr. CANNON. This would have been subject to a point of order if it had been made, would it not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In my opinion, it would have been, but the Committee on Appropriations realized that women are always a special problem, whether in industry or out of industry, and realizing that we have presented it to the House in order that the House might express its views.

Mr. CANNON. I think we passed it because she was a woman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am disposed to agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. And $40,000 is all that is needed.

Mr. KEATING. I move to strike out the last word. I do not think it is quite fair that this should be presented to the House as a suggestion to donate $40,000 for some fad which is urged by a woman. We have no right to appropriate $40,000 merely to please a woman, and that is not the proposal here.

The proposition is a very serious one. It is to vitalize the bureau in the Department of Labor that has to do with women in industry; not to play up some fad, but to make special investigations and to pay special attention to the needs of thousands and millions of women who are going out every morning into the workshops and the factories of this country. I do not think the House should pass upon the proposition in the light of the airy remark made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. This is a very serious problem. The work done by this bureau is a serious work, and it is a work to which the Government of the United States should address itself. There is not a more important item in this bill than this one providing for an adequate appropriation for the Bureau of Women in Industry, and I hope the House will adopt the amendment offered by the lady from Montana. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. With part of what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has said I thoroughly agree. I think there is a problem in connection with women in industry, whether it is going to continue a permanent problem in America I do not know. I am still old-fashioned enough to hope that the men of America may continue in a large measure to provide for the women of America without forcing them into industry. But in some instances they have been forced into industry and some have gone of their own predilection, and as a result of the conditions war has produced, a great many are now there.

But I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that it is a mistaken notion that efficiency in the solution of a problem is measured by the amount of money which the Treasury is called upon to supply. The fact is I have never known in life outside, or in the Government itself, an organization to become efficient by sudden mushroom growth. It grows efficient by gradual growth; it makes itself efficient by proving step by step its work.

It so happens that the Government was fortunate in getting this particular woman at the head of this bureau. She is a woman of high intelligence and efficiency, and has done good work, but if people think that by increasing the appropriation they increase efficiency they are mistaken. With the larger appropriation, they are apt to proceed along lines that are not intelligent, that are not worth while.

There is not a department in this Government that is not to-day making a plea that it can only be efficient by having more money to spend. The history is that the more money departments have the less efficient they frequently are. What we need in America is to learn not to attempt to solve overnight all the problems that exist, and not to believe that simply by pouring out great sums of money we can thereby solve a problem. I had rather have one woman, an intelligent woman like the head of this one, in charge of the bureau than 20 people helping her, because those that help her will only interfere instead of being an actual help.

Another thing to be remembered is that the men in industry, the women in industry, those who toil, pay for governmental activities. You may not be able to put your finger on the tax, but in the last analysis the people must pay the sum. We have placed tremendous burdens on the people. Gentlemen say this is a small amount. That is always the cry. The argument was made to-day that large sums have been appropriated for certain purposes, and that therefore we ought to vote it for this purpose. It is that argument that makes necessary taxes in billions, and sooner or later there will come a Congress that will measure the work and not be prodigal with appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this was the only service among all of the war activities that was not provided for by law that the committee recommended the continuation of. The committee took that responsibility knowing that the item was not provided for by law, that it was subject to a point of order, because we were impressed with the importance of the work to be carried on, and further we were impressed with the very evident intelligence with which the work had been carried on. It was one of the very few new war bureaus which justified itself beyond any question or controversy. I believe in this work and I believe in those engaged in it. I think my friendship for the work can not be questioned in view of my attitude as a member of the subcommittee. As a friend of this work, as a believer in the importance of the work, I shall not vote to increase this appropriation. I think that in the long run this work will be better done and more wisely extended if it is continued for another year, within the appropriation originally asked for it, at a time when the problem was most acute in the midst of a great war. While those responsible for the work have not said so, I believe that they believe that the future of their work is quite as safe under the present appropriation as under an expansion.

What does expansion mean? Simply the establishment of district offices around over the country. Let us continue the character of the service as intended and proposed in the first instance. It was said that it was not to be a functioning service. It was stated at the hearings this year, I believe, that it was not believed to be wise to make it an extended functioning service, that it ought to be a planning service, an advisory service, a standardizing service, and that it can be such a service under this efficient organization with its present appropriation. In my opinion its friends will be better able to defend it and its work if it continues another year with this appropriation. In the meantime we can pass on the question whether there should be an extension and expansion of the work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we went into the war and called 4,000,000 men into the Army, and a good many more into the various civil services connected with the Army. Did the women of the country hold back? Did they do their share? Did they in many cases take the place of the men who were called into the service and perform the necessary work in order that the Government might do its proper function in providing for the Army and taking care of its share of the work? In every branch the women responded nobly. They did work which without them could not have been done for lack of labor. Are they not entitled to have the conditions under which they have gone into this work properly investigated? [Applause.] Have they not responded in such a way that we can do our little part toward knowing whether they have proper treatment and work under proper conditions? They have not held back. While I do not believe in extravagant appropriations, I think we can afford to give $150,000 toward investigating and knowing the conditions under which they labor in this voluntary work which they have assumed and without which we could not have successfully taken our part in the war. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word. This provision was subject to a point of order but it was not made. This woman captured the committee. The Bureau of Statistics is well equipped to do similar work, and it has done similar work. The women, God bless them, have done their share and are doing their share, but there is no sense now in time of peace in increasing this appropriation. There is not one of these bureaus connected with the Department of Labor and with some other departments—and I shall keep close to the text—that is not now in time of peace saying, "Why, my work commenced in war, but it is a confounded sight more important for peace." That is the position of the Department of Labor. I have no objection to and I am not criticizing the Department of Labor. God knows I have trod every path that labor has trod, almost from the cradle up to mature years. You know our children and grandchildren and great grandchildren will get back to earth and touch the earth. I do not believe in increasing the work of the Department of Labor. The Bureau of Education cooperating with it, what happens? Oh, all kinds of schemes—coordinate with the States—yes, yes; coordinate with the States, and in the name of labor and education what do they propose to do?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. In the name of labor and education they propose to take charge of the schoolmasters in the States. Good God! Let us keep something for local self-government. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GORDON. Was there any evidence before the committee showing whether or not these women who went into these industries were leaving them, and as to how many would be employed in the next fiscal year?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, just what were employed before. It is to enlarge the service. The woman at the head gets $5,000 a year and the next one $3,500 a year, and she made such a good appearance before this committee that—well, we caved. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the lady from Montana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Miss RANKIN) there were—ayes 41, noes 48.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed Miss RANKIN and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GALLIVAN: Page 152, line 20, insert a new section as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Labor to advance the opportunities for profitable employment of the wage earners of the United States there is hereby appropriated out of available money in the Treasury, $10,033,808.10."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, if we can not discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then the Chair withdraws the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Of course I want to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the point of order?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I suppose that the Chair must have already discussed with somebody some sort of an amendment that was about to be offered at this point, but he certainly has not read this amendment. I contend that my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is addressing the Chair now?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. This makes law, does it not?

Mr. GALLIVAN. It makes no new law.

The CHAIRMAN. It makes new law.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It makes no new law. I direct the attention of the Chair to the organic act creating the Department of Labor, section 1, the second last sentence:

The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

That is the organic law of the land in this hour, and my amendment asks that the Secretary of Labor be given the wherewith to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit the Chair to ask him a question? Does the gentleman from Massachusetts seriously insist that the proposition contained in his amendment comes within the limits of the law that is prescribed here?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Why, certainly. I can not imagine the Chair seriously insisting that it does not. If it is not for the purpose mentioned in the organic act, what is it for?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules might I call the Chair's attention to a few authorities in Hinds' Precedents on this point? In Volume IV, section 3615, page 410, there is a precedent that seems to me in point:

A department being created for the declared purpose of investigation, an appropriation for the instrumentalities of such investigation was held to be within the rule.

And, if the Chair wishes, I will read the remainder of the decision, with which, I take it, he is familiar:

On February 14, 1901, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration—

The very bill we are now considering—was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Clerk had read the following paragraph relating to the work of the Fish Commission:

"Employees at large: Two field-station superintendents, at $1,800 each; 2 fish culturists, at $960 each; 2 fish culturists, at $900 each; 5 machinists, at $960 each"—

And various other employees.

Mr. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, made a point of order against this paragraph, that the appropriations proposed were not authorized by law.

After debate, during which reference was made to sections 4395–4398, Revised Statutes, to the fact that the law of 1871 created the department for the prosecution of investigations, and to the decision of Chairman Payne, on January 30, 1897, the Chairman (Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois), on February 16, held—

And he proceeded in his opinion to overrule the point of order and to hold that the fact that the department was created for the express purpose of conducting such investigations made in order the appropriations to carry out such investigations.

I do not pretend, Mr. Chairman, to be an authority on parliamentary law, but in the time I have had at my disposal I have gone through the books with a great deal of care, and I have failed to find a single instance where an attempt has been successfully made to overrule the proposition laid down by Chairman Hopkins in 1901.

I want to call the attention of the Chairman to a case that is not reported in Hinds'. I am quoting now, Mr. Chairman, from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the second session, Sixty-third Congress, page 6712. An attempt was made to increase the appropriation for the Children's Bureau. An amendment was offered in the form of a detailed item, in which the bureau was authorized to employ clerks and experts of one kind and another. The Chair ruled that amendment out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that to increase an appropriation or to make it?

Mr. KEATING. That was to increase the personnel of the department. It was ruled out on the ground that the bill creating the bureau fixed the personnel for the bureau, and that therefore the personnel could not be increased without the passage of a bill. Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offered an amendment authorizing a lump-sum appropriation to carry out one of the objects in the organic law creating the bureau, and they had a long and interesting discussion on that point.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who had urged the point of order against the amendment as originally offered, opposed the point of order presented against the lump-sum appropriation, and he stated the whole case in one paragraph, which I shall, with the indulgence of the Chair, read:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered is clearly in order; as clearly in order as the amendment offered a few minutes ago was not in order. Section 2 of this law outlines the jurisdiction of this bureau, and it is clearly within the jurisdiction of this committee to bring in a lump-sum appropriation for the purpose of enabling the bureau to perform the services within its jurisdiction. The amendment which was offered to section 2 proposed to change the office personnel, which had been fixed by law, and which in the terms of the statute could only be changed by law. Of course, we could not do that by amendment to an appropriation bill, but we could appropriate a million dollars for any one of the purposes named in section 1 of the act—to investigate infant mortality, to investigate the birth rate, questions of orphanage, juvenile courts, dangerous occupations, diseases of children, legislation affecting children, etc.

Now, Mr. Chairman, our contention is this, which is the contention made by the gentleman from Wyoming in this discussion, and, as I believe, a contention sustained by every Chairman who has ruled over the proceedings of this House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for many years: The organic act creating the Department of Labor having specifically charged the department with the duty of finding profitable employment for the workers of this country, it is within the power of this House on this bill to vote a lump-sum appropriation to permit the Secretary of Labor to carry out one of the objects for which his department was created.

That is our contention in a nutshell. I might go on here taking up the time of the committee, but, as I say, I have searched these bulky volumes as earnestly as I knew how, and I have failed to find a single precedent which would sustain the Chairman in sustaining this point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say, and that word I did not expect to say until I heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] read the paragraph from the organic act which sets forth the objects for which this bureau or agency was established.

As I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts, the last clause in that paragraph declares that one of the objects of the organic act is "to increase opportunities for employment." That is substantially the language, is it not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to read it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It reads:

The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

The amendment follows the language there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am obliged to the gentleman from Mississippi. Now, the language in that paragraph which, in my judgment, makes this amendment germane is the expression, "to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

For would not this amendment, if made law, "advance their opportunities for profitable employment"? Actual experience supplies an answer to that question, for experience demonstrates that the Government Employment Service does increase such opportunities. This is certainly a fact, if we take as true statements in letters which come to us not only from laboring men and labor organizations, but also from employers. Only this morning I received a letter from the Simmons Manufacturing Co., of the city of Kenosha, in my district, an establishment employing upward of 3,000 men, in which the writer urges the retention in the law of the provision for such employment agency. I have also received several letters from other employers in my district, some in the city of Janesville, saying that the existing service enables them to secure employees readily, and laboring men write me that it has helped them to secure employment. All this being true, then this amendment proposing to keep in existence an agency which does increase the "opportunities for profitable employment" clearly comes within the meaning of the paragraph of the organic act that was read by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Mississippi, and which declares the objects for which the Government bureau was created.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The law which sets forth the purpose of this department shows that the purpose is threefold. Simply because it specifies this threefold purpose is no reason why Congress has the right to inaugurate new legislation here and spend $10,000,000. One of the purposes is to promote and develop the welfare of wage earners. Why, if the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct in his contention, the Secretary of Labor could contend that he could furnish every wage earner with a Pierce-Arrow limousine to ride to his place of work. That would promote his welfare. Would the gentleman contend it would not require legislation, special legislation, for the Secretary of Labor to do a thing of that kind? One of the purposes is that it is to improve their working conditions. Why, the Secretary of Labor might decide in his discretion that in order to have their working conditions improved each one of them should own a brownstone mansion. Would the gentleman contend for one moment that the Secretary of Labor could carry out that purpose from a lump appropriation without special legislation authorizing it? The other purpose is "and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment." Why, the Secretary of Labor might well say that it would advance their opportunity for profitable employment to send each one of them to Yale University or to Harvard or to Columbia, and let them take an A. B. degree. Does the gentleman contend, simply because he is to help them in their opportunities, he could decide in his discretion to give them a university education out of the lump-sum appropriation, without new and special legislation passed by Congress to authorize it?

I submit, Mr. Chairman, it does take new legislation here to authorize the expenditure of this $10,300,000 proposed, and without new legislation authorizing it it is certainly subject to a point of order.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, under the language of the act creating the Department of Labor the amendment is certainly germane. To refuse to provide for our Government Employment Bureau is almost criminal, in view of the present crisis. Not only do I favor Government employment bureaus, but I favor strongly increasing their number and efficiency.

When it comes to the question of unemployment, I would like to say that on November 21 I introduced a resolution asking that a program be prepared by the committees of Congress, presented here, and passed, to take care of the rapidly increasing number of unemployed in this country. To-day we are faced with a situation where thousands of our soldiers are marching the streets of our great cities in search of work, many of them objects of charity. According to the Department of Labor reports as issued, hundreds of thousands of war workers are seeking work. The Employment Service of the Department of Labor told me the other day that nearly two and one-half millions of men and women were out of work in this country.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will.

Mr. SIEGEL. I would like to know who gave the gentleman that information.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Department of Labor.

Mr. SIEGEL. I saw Mr. Densmore, and he told me that there were not more than 350,000 people out of work in the country.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say this in that connection, that there are 122 cities that are reporting at the present time, and these 122 cities give only a partial list of manufacturing establishments in those cities. This does not begin to cover the country.

The action of the Appropriations Committee in striking out the $10,033,080.10 asked by the Labor Department for its employment agency can not be defended. The immense and distressing problem of unemployment which the country faces to-day with millions of men and women now in enforced idleness should compel that committee to reconsider its action.

I feel that the course of this Congress in sitting here for the past four months and refusing to do anything to provide employment for the millions of demobilized soldiers and war workers has been most reprehensible.

On November 21, 1918, only a few days after the armistice was signed, and when we knew that demobilization was upon us, I introduced a resolution, House resolution 452, directing the great committees of the House to provide work for the unemployed, which, had it been promptly acted on by Congress, would have avoided all the distress and danger which has since come upon the country by the creation of this vast compulsory army of nearly two and a half millions of unemployed men and women we have to-day, with the long train of evils and distress which it inevitably entails, to say nothing of the loss of billions of wealth to the country which is necessarily the result of the enforced idleness for months of millions of our wealth producers.

The Labor Department Employment Agency should have its proper appropriation as asked for by the department and as recommended by the minority report. But an employment agency does not and can not create opportunities for employment for anyone; it can only indicate to employers and workmen the places where shortage or surplus of labor exists; that is a proper and excellent part of the service. But it can not create the vast opportunities for work required to furnish employment for these ever-increasing millions of unemployed. That can only be done by opening up to labor the vast unused natural resources of the Nation with the aid of either private or Government capital. But as private capital "hesitates" to invest, waiting in hope of lower prices and lower wages, and as millions of men, women, and children can not and will not stand idle and starve while the capitalist "hesitates" and waits for lower wages and prices, there is but one thing to be done, and that is for the Government, which by its war program has created this abnormal condition, to step in with ample capital which it is able to command and in the various appropriation bills provide the means for opening up employment for all those in enforced idleness.

The Employment Service of the Labor Department says, "Since the war we have been finding places for workers in this country at the rate of 100,000 per week." But there are since the war 250,000 unemployed a week for whom they did not find places. There are at present nearly 2,500,000 unemployed in the United States, and the Labor Department reports that "the peak has not yet been reached"; their number is constantly increasing by whole armies of men and women each week.

What would this mere drop in the bucket of $10,000,000 for the Employment Service for the whole year amount to if directly applied as a means of providing employment for 2,500,000 unemployed? That would be $4 apiece. How much employment will that furnish? It will pay for less than one day's work apiece for the millions already out of employment and leave not a cent for the other millions who at the rate of thousands of men a day are being thrown into enforced idleness.

What this Congress should do is to provide, in this and in the other appropriation bills, sums sufficient to furnish work for every unemployed man and woman in the United States.

At the present rate of increase by the 1st of May there may be nearly 4,000,000 out of work, and at $4 wages per day apiece that would require $16,000,000 per day, and 300 working days for the year would amount to $4,800,000,000. That is the sum which is needed to-day to be appropriated in this sundry civil bill and the other appropriation bills of this Congress if we are to deal in any adequate and effective way with this vast and ever-increasing army of the unemployed, already numbering nearly two and a half millions, and which is being increased every week by hundreds of thousands of compulsory recruits.

The moment Congress starts providing the money for employing those out of work it will instantly encourage and stimulate private capitalists in all lines of industry. For no one knows better than the capitalist that when the Government gives work to all the unemployed the market demand for their products in every line of business will be both permanent and profitable.

Every man employed on Government work helps to make jobs for others in private employment to make the goods he will buy. With all men and women employed, the average wage will steadily and naturally rise. But high wages do not necessarily mean high prices and high cost of living, for with the vast improvements in roads, transportation, and storage facilities which Government work will provide the flow of farm, forest, and mine products to the cities and city products to the farm and mine will in time increase the supply and reduce the price of all the necessities of life.

The weekly report on labor conditions issued by the Department of Labor, February 22, 1919, gives 73 cities reporting a surplus of labor of 355,597 unemployed and a shortage in 15 cities of 7,900, and this is only a partial report from the industrial centers. On November 30, 1918, 29 cities reported a shortage of 33,878, and 12 cities reported a surplus of 11,114. Between these two reports conditions have steadily grown worse, and the peak has not yet been reached. We are now informed by the Labor Department that there are now about 2,000,000 unemployed in the United States to-day.

A writer in Reconstruction, Frederick K. Kerby, says in February, 1919:

A million and a quarter workers are jobless to-day in the United States of America. They are, to use the official expression of the United States Employment Service, "involuntarily unemployed." That is to say, they want work and they can't get it. This estimate, based on official returns and made for me by the statistician of the New York headquarters of the United States Employment Service, covers the situation at the end of January. By the 1st of March, at the present rate of increase, the army of the unemployed will have reached at least 2,000,000.

Dr. George W. Kirchwey, Director United States Employment Service for New York State, says:

I do know that the great centers of population throughout the country are going to suffer a condition of unemployment which may easily become serious in the course of the next 30 days.

We must work out some reorganization of our industrial system that will provide public buffer employment for those who are not employed in private industry at any given time. That will prevent these eternal swings of the pendulum from prosperity to adversity. We must speed up all kinds of works of public improvement in cities, counties, States, and Nation if we would avoid the dangers that are ahead of us. There is no time to be lost; if we do not get action, and quickly, it may be too late.

This condition of affairs is not entirely unexpected. Many who are well informed issued warnings from time to time, asking some program for the period of reconstruction immediately following the cessation of hostilities. On December 7, Nathan A. Smyth, assistant to the director general of the United States Employment Service, stated that unemployment is the greatest danger confronting the United States during the next four months. The New Republic, as early as March 30, 1918, reported that—

Contrary to the prevailing impression, there are many hungry and unemployed men at the gates of our shipyards and munition plants to-day—not so many as there were in December and January, but yet a large number.

On November 21, 1918, I introduced the following resolution:

House resolution 452.

Whereas the rapid demobilization of 4,000,000 soldiers and 10,000,000 or more war workers in the United States during the next few months is liable to create a great body of unemployed; and

Whereas these conditions are brought about as a direct result of the exercise of the war-making power by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the plain and imperative duty of Congress to at once initiate the necessary steps to open opportunities for employment to all workers in the United States who face enforced idleness during the coming months.

Resolved further, That as a first step to remedy the danger of widespread unemployment of millions of our people during the winter and following months, this House hereby authorizes and directs the Committees on Labor, Interstate Commerce, Public Buildings and Grounds, Rivers and Harbors, Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, District of Columbia, and Post Offices and Post Roads to each make an investigation as to the possibilities of work for the unemployed in those branches of industry, either in public or private employment, coming within the purview of each of the above committees of this House.

Resolved further, That said committees shall have power to subpœna witnesses and administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, and employ such assistants as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this resolution, and to report to this House on or before December 20, 1918.

Had this resolution been adopted, and a program formulated and passed by Congress, as indicated therein, there would not be a single person in enforced idleness in the United States to-day, nor would there be any unemployed at any future time as long as this remains the policy of the Government; and in justice to the men and women who labor it ought to be the policy of the Government for all time to come. This resolution asked action by Congress by the 20th day of December, 1918, and a hearing was had by the Rules Committee on December 10 and 11, 1918. I have placed the resolution in the RECORD for the information of the public, together with certain extracts from the hearings before the Rules Committee on the resolution.

On January 2 I introduced a bill creating a Bureau of Unemployed in the Department of Labor. I ask that this bill be made part of the RECORD:

A bill (H. R. 13592) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor" by providing for a bureau of the unemployed.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor," approved March 4, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following section:

"SEC. 12. That there shall be in the Department of Labor a bureau to be called the bureau of the unemployed, and a commissioner of the unemployed, who shall be the head of the said bureau, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and who shall, in the absence of the commissioner, act as and perform the duties of the commissioner of the unemployed, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of Labor or by the said commissioner.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority under the direction of the Secretary of Labor—

"(a) To take a census, at as frequent intervals as possible, of the unemployed in the United States.

"(b) To make and keep a classified enrollment of the unemployed by avocations.

"(c) To correct and keep full records of the industrial and commercial conditions throughout the United States, especially in relation to opportunities for the employment of labor.

"(d) To furnish the fullest possible information to the unemployed of opportunities for employment in any part of the United States and to devise plans for facilitating the movement of the unemployed to places where opportunity for employment exists.

"(e) To make investigations and report to Congress and the President annually on the 1st of December, and oftener if requested, the extent of enforced idleness and unemployment in the United States and the causes thereof, with suggestions for remedies for the same.

When the bill creating the existing executive department to be known as the Department of Labor was first introduced in Congress in 1902 it was plainly indicated in the structure of the bill and in the arguments before the Committee on Labor of the House that one of the principal purposes of the framers of the law was that the new department should be a large and important instrumentality of the Government for solving the distressing and dangerous problem of the unemployed.

H. R. 13592 in substance was introduced in the House first in 1915 by Representative Fowler, of Illinois, but no action was taken thereon. Shortly after an attempt was successfully made to embody part of the plan in an amendment to the Labor Department law creating a United States employment agency. Many Members of Congress and others in the executive branches of the Government seem to be under the impression that by merely creating an "employment agency" in the Department of Labor they would be creating employment. This was a costly error, for while an employment agency is useful as a means of advertising the temporary scarcity or surplus of labor in localities and saving the workers from the fees of private employment agencies, it does not and can not furnish one single additional day's employment for one single man or woman in the United States.

My bill, H. R. 13592, provides that the Department of Labor shall "make investigations and report to Congress and the President annually on the 1st of December, and oftener if requested, the extent of enforced idleness and unemployment in the United States and the causes thereof, with suggestions for remedies for the same."

Thus the Department of Labor, in conjunction with Congress, will be able to plan and provide for the opening of new opportunities for employment on such lines as will effectually solve the problem of the unemployed and forever banish from the United States the curse of enforced idleness and its resulting poverty and misery, to say nothing of preventing the present loss of from three to ten billions of dollars of wealth annually which results from involuntary idleness of our wealth producers.

It is known that Australia and Canada are well advanced in their reconstruction programs. Australia and Canada have made extensive preparations; so also has England; and Italy has appropriated 3,500,000,000 lire for the same purpose. Other countries might be enumerated. In fact, the United States, so far as I know, is the last country to take any action; in fact, we are just beginning to think about doing something. We are now in the position of loaning or giving great sums of money to foreign nations, with which these countries make possible some sort of program for their unemployed after the war, while we, who furnished the money, are drifting into a very serious condition of affairs at home. This very month Congress has appropriated $100,000,000 for foreigners through the push-button methods of an absent President, but I have yet to hear of a dollar being appropriated for the relief of distress in America. I am a believer in the policy of America first; foreigners second; and I am proud of it. I will never, so far as I know it, vote for or consent to a policy of foreigners first and Americans second.

It is true that we have a Labor Department, and we have employment bureaus. This, however, merely distributes positions already existing; it does not create new positions. The bureau and departments can not lay down a program of road building, reclaiming lands, such as swamp lands, cut-over lands, and irrigated lands, and open to labor hundreds of millions of acres of good, productive land now being held out of use by speculators and monopolists. I venture to say that if something is not done soon to relieve distress in this country, Congress will hear from our great industrial centers in no uncertain way; in fact, already we are in receipt of many letters and resolutions demanding that something be done. Strikes and growing unrest are now the order of the day. There are those who scoff at the idea of unemployment in this country. They seem to fear to admit that such a condition exists or that it may grow worse. In fact, if the war were actively on, anyone who might seek to remedy the condition would be called pro-German possibly, or perhaps disloyal. Certainly, those who seek to better conditions are loyal to the people who work and to their families who are suffering want. If, however, such action is hostile to the great employers who desire lower wages, in order that they may increase their profits, if that is disloyalty, I am willing to accept that term.

In the contest between man and money I am for the man as against the dollar. The man who is willing to work and able to do work is entitled to a position; and if he can not find a position, it is the Government's duty to find one for him; and if the Government can not find one for him, it is our duty to create a job, so that he may support his family and not become a seeker for charity, which destroys the morale, weakens the strength, and degrades the character of our citizens.

Just the other day here in Washington a leading bank inserted an advertisement for clerks; 172 replies were had. A short time before hostilities ceased the same bank received no replies to the same ad. One employer who sought a stenographer before the armistice, the other day advertised and received 53 applications. These instances can be cited in any number. In Boston, New York, and many other centers thousands of returned soldiers march in parades demanding work.

On the 29th of December the surplus labor supply was rapidly approaching the point of danger, and it was announced in the headlines of the press, "Lack of work may keep men in the Army."

The American soldier will not remain in the Army for any such reason. He is still an American, and he will stand on his rights, and he has the right to be released when the war is over; and the politicians who oppose his release will have 4,000,000 soldiers to contend with when they seek political preferment in the future.

The Wall Street journals are already talking cuts in wages, and state that such reduction will surely come before the end of this year. There are plenty of roads to build, plenty of cut-over lands to put in condition for future farmers, swamp lands to be drained, irrigation projects to be developed, and many other public works on which soldiers and war workers can be used, and, for that matter, anyone who is out of employment. Above all, there are in the United States hundreds of millions of acres of good farm lands, forest and mineral lands, the natural opportunity for millions of men to employ themselves, which are to-day being held out of use by individual and corporate speculators and monopolists. If we, as the chosen representatives of the people, fail to protect our own people, ours will be a heavy responsibility.

Mr. Hoover, who has resided in London for the past 20 years, says that "America must furnish 20,000,000 tons of foodstuffs to hungry Europe this year," but he does not mention anything about supplying milk to the half-starved children in New York City. Our Labor Department has issued statistics showing that thousands of babes die in our country every year for want of milk. Says the Washington Times:

> It isn't pleasant to read of a mother with six young children able to buy 3 pints of milk every other day, or to read about hungry babes angrily beating with their little fists on their mother's breast.

Every ton of food shipped to the foreigner creates just so much of a greater scarcity in the United States, and we pay for this scarcity in higher prices for food. A higher cost of living is the penalty.

One out of every five school children in New York City is starving and 7 out of 10 are undernourished to such a degree that they are fertile ground for wandering disease germs. Labor statistics show that in 10 years, from 1907 to 1916, there was a gradual increase in wages, amounting to 16 per cent. In the same period retail prices of food rapidly increased to 19 per cent in 1912, 25 per cent in 1914, up to 39 per cent in 1916. In January, 1917, this increase had reached 56 per cent, and in February 62 per cent. Milk is becoming more precious than the spices of Arabia, while our wheat goes to our associated nations, who industriously consume beer and whisky made from American cereals; but the American school child grows thinner, and is often struck down by disease; and that is our manner of beginning charity at home.

In England and Wales only 10 per cent of the school children were found underfed after two years of war. In New York City 21 per cent of the boys and girls between ages of 8 and 13 are lacking proper food. Conditions are rapidly growing worse. The percentage was 11 last year, and that was bad enough; and, strange to say, in that great city the socialist aldermen are leading the fight and labor is backing them up, while many so-called patriotic taxpayers and so-called loyal real estate owners are doing everything in their power to obstruct relief measures.

We must not forget that before the world war began the United States was drifting into a frightful condition of unemployment in the manufacturing, building, transportation, and miscellaneous trades. In the State of New York, out of 1,184 union members, 18.8 per cent were reported idle at the end of March, 1912; 21.8 per cent at the end of March, 1913; 28.3 per cent at the end of March, 1914; 27.4 per cent at the end of March, 1915; and 16.4 per cent at the end of March, 1916. These figures show the rapid increase of idleness during the first part of Wilson's administration, the decrease of idleness after outbreak of the world war, and the stimulus that war orders have given languishing industries of the country.

Congress should heed the voice of the Chicago Federation of Labor, November 30, 1918, in their platform, section 4:

> Abolition of unemployment by the creation of opportunity for steady work through the stabilization of industry and the establishment through periods of depression of Government work on housing, road building, reforestation, reclamation of desert and swamp, and the development of ports and highways.

We must not forget that while our soldiers fought bravely at Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, Argonne Forest, and St. Mihiel, that here at home in the trenches of labor millions upon millions of patriotic American citizens were toiling to forge the weapons and missiles of war with which they achieved victory. Without American labor standing behind the American soldier, victory never could have come to our banners. We owe much to these men. They carry upon their backs the industries and the prosperity of the country, and it will be an evil day for the Nation when Congress and the legislatures forget the debt we owe them. The man who leaves home in the early morning—yes, in the gray of dawn—oftentimes toiling until the twilight; the man who must eat his meal from the dinner pail, grimy and weary with toil—this man, I say, is the backbone of the Nation. You may talk about money and brains, but labor is prior to and independent of money; and when it comes to brains, the American workman is able to run the United States, to furnish our leaders, our generals, our captains of industry, and the foremost men in every line.

In recent years I have often heard it said complainingly that labor has forced demands for higher wages and better conditions. When their rights are denied, when no relief is given, it is the right of American labor lawfully not only to demand but to force better conditions by means of organization, by means of strikes, and by means of demands which can be easily understood. With 2 per cent of the people owning 65 per cent of our wealth, one of the great future problems will be to bring about a more general distribution of this tremendous wealth.

We must pass prosperity around. We continue to concentrate the wealth of this Nation in the hands of fewer and ever fewer numbers of men until now a small circle controls the entire output of the country. The Government is now reaching out for this wealth and taxing it away from these robber barons who have made life miserable and intolerable for the great mass of our citizens for these many years.

Our people have not forgotten the watchwords of the French Revolution, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." When royalty and landed nobility of that day were overturned, the workmen of France carved these words into the archways and over the entrances of every public building, of every cathedral throughout the land, and they remain there to-day that all men may behold.

While traveling through France recently I saw an approaching engine, and on the tender the word "Etat." I supposed, of course, it was the equivalent of our Baltimore & Ohio or Pennsylvania, but learned, to my surprise, that Etat means the State, so that here the nation owns the railways, locomotives, and rolling stock; it is the people's property to do with as they see fit and it is not the plaything of one man or a set of men who set themselves up as having the divine right of wealth, which to me is as abominable a doctrine as that of the divine right of kings. There are to-day in this country more than 2,000,000 unemployed. I hope that number will not increase, but many well-posted authorities tell us that this number will increase, that it will reach two and a half and perhaps three million unemployed. Therefore, it is high time that appropriations are passed for America and to disentangle ourselves from Europe and her quarrels, and seek first the welfare and well-being of our own people at home. The brave lads who fought our battles for us abroad will be in no mood to listen to excuses when they return, and they will return in the not distant future—2,000,000 of them to join 2,000,000 more who did not cross, and I ask you gentlemen to remember that since the beginning of time the soldier and the veteran is a man who looks you square in the eye without fear or favor and gives you his ideas and plans straight from the shoulder. Men who have faced death on the field or prepared themselves in spirit to meet that ordeal will not quail before problems and politicians at home. They will demand results; they are strong; they are ambitious; they want work, and they are going to get it; if not at first, then finally when the pressure of public opinion compels action on the part of Congress.

To meet the needs of this situation, the following statements were presented in hearings before the Rules Committee by myself and others. This was in support of House resolution 452, which I introduced November 21, 1918:

UNEMPLOYMENT BY REASON OF DEMOBILIZATION OF SOLDIERS AND WAR WORKERS.

COMMITTEE ON RULES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., Tuesday, December 10, 1918.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. EDWARD W. POU, presiding.

The committee thereupon proceeded to the consideration of H. Res. 452 and H. Res. 463.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, we have two different resolutions before us this morning, the only difference between them being that 463 has added some committees to 452.

Mr. LUNDEEN, the committee will now be glad to hear you.

STATEMENT OF HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM MINNESOTA.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. CLAYPOOL'S resolution, 463, and mine are alike, with the exception that to his have been added several more committees, as the chairman stated. The question is as to how many there shall be. I think we can agree on one proposition, and that is that the Congress ought to take steps to see that there will be no unemployment, if such a thing is possible, rather than to cure unemployment after it arises. That seems to be the attitude of other governments. I have been looking over some of the activities in this regard of the government in Australia, Canada, and England, and I find they are going ahead on the theory that if the governments of these different colonies and countries do not take steps to prevent unemployment they are going to have it on their hands, and then have to cure the evil after it arises. For instance, in the congressional files in the reading room of the Library we find that Canada has already passed a bill for a three years' program—$50,000,000 the first year, $100,000,000 the second year, and $150,000,000 the third year; $300,000,000 in all—right along these lines. Of course, we have a Labor Department, we have the employment bureaus, and there is a movement on foot to consolidate and to coordinate the municipal, State, and national employment bureaus. But that is not going to reach the thing we want to reach. In the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, of which I am a member, we have been talking for more than a year about doubling the amount of money now invested. We have over $100,000,000 in the irrigation projects, and Secretary Lane thought we ought to put another $100,000,000 in there.

That is only one of the committees. Such matters as swamp lands and cut-over lands should be considered. We have a great deal of cut-over lands in our State of Minnesota.

Mr. FOSTER. What would you do with those cut-over lands, Mr. Lundeen? I do not understand your proposition in that respect.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Well, there was a project discussed a great deal some years back by the Minnesota Legislature about having State farms, the State selling the land to the individual for a number of years, say 40 years.

Mr. FOSTER. I know; but what I am getting at is what you thought the Government should do.

Mr. LUNDEEN. They would clear, say, 10 acres of that land, so that he could have enough to support himself on; we will say put in a well, erect a house there——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Loan them money on the land at a per cent, and then the man could pay it back.

Mr. LUNDEEN. This is a project which is approved by the most conservative business men of the State.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LUNDEEN. This proposition is a resolution instructing committees to remedy the danger of widespread unemployment. Here is a committee on roads. They might bring in a recommendation after this resolution were passed, after investigating, that we could put in a billion dollars in transcontinental roads in the United States, and that there should be feeders running in different directions, and that the surplus labor be put to work on that.

Mr. FOSTER. How are you going to finance it? What is your idea? You say a billion dollars for roads; how are you going to get the money?

Mr. RODENBERG. By the issue of bonds?

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. LUNDEEN. My idea is that the Government get behind this, as the Canadian Government has in appropriating $300,000,000. For instance, we are all going to do all we can for the soldiers. But their problem is easier than that of the war workers, because the soldiers are going to be given a preference by law or given a preference without law. We will see that the man who fought the battles is given a place.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you a question. Do you think there is any danger of any widespread lack of employment, except possibly from the demobilization of our Army?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, there has been approximately 4,000,000 men who have been under arms. If they were taken care of, do you think there would still be any considerable danger of lack of employment in the country?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; I do. In 1914—I have papers here, though it is not necessary to go into them—but the statistics show that in that year, when the war broke out, for instance, in some labor unions in Chicago there were 28 per cent of their members out of work. There was very heavy unemployment throughout the United States at that time, and it was increasing. That was the 1st of August, 1914.

Mr. SNELL. Sometimes a labor union will say there is lack of employment because they will not permit their members to work unless they accomplished certain results or the employers do certain things.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As a general thing, those who are not in the union have a heavier rate of unemployment than those in the unions, because the unions are better able to take care of their members.

Mr. SNELL. In our country we have done away with trying to improve roads and do necessary repairs, because we have not had the labor and it has been impossible to get it for the last three years, and away back in 1914 they could not get help enough to do the work.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Only in certain skilled lines.

Mr. SNELL. This was absolutely unskilled labor.

Mr. RODENBERG. That was due to the wonderful activities of the munition plants, where they paid such high wages.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LUNDEEN. I believe the Government machinery ought to be put to work on this problem at once, and that these people ought to be called in and that the committees ought to have sittings on this proposition.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not taking issue with you on that. That is probably correct. But I am just speaking now as to the necessity of this particular resolution. Why have they not all the necessary authority already—all these committees—to do the very thing proposed in your resolution.

Mr. LUNDEEN. There is the grave danger of Nation-wide unemployment and enforced idleness of millions of men and women. It should be gone into by all these committees, not only with respect to unskilled laborers but all others. The need is for quick results; therefore the committees should have to the full the powers given them in the resolution. There should be no delays and there should be ample power to get the facts from persons and papers.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LUNDEEN. Of course, there will be public buildings and all that sort of thing. Speaking of what I was mentioning here awhile ago, on March 30, 1918, the New Republic had then to say: "Contrary to the prevailing impression there are many hungry and unemployed men at the gates of our shipyards and munition plants to-day; not so many as there were in December and January, but yet a large number." Certain skilled people, of course, are provided with work, but here you have unemployment right at the shipyards.

Mr. SNELL. That same came from the Department of Labor down here in the city, did it not?

Mr. LUNDEEN. No; it did not.

Mr. SNELL. They have claimed all the time there was plenty of labor, but I personally could never believe that.

Mr. LUNDEEN. This was furnished me by the Legislature Reference Bureau over here in the Congressional Library. As soon as we get back to the prewar basis we are going to have the same condition that we had in 1914, only aggravated, I believe. And while the Australians and Canadians and the British are taking hold of this, which many of them did before the war ended, I do not see much evidence here that we are grappling with the problem. We must be forehanded in this matter and not let it arise and then cure it after it gets underway.

I do not say that is exactly the form of the resolution that should be passed or that it exactly names the proper committees, but committees ought to take it up and they ought to summon these people and they ought to cooperate with the departments who are having it in hand. Congress is going to be held responsible, I believe, for the condition of labor within the next few months. These men are being demobolized at the rate of 200,000 a week, or 30,000 a day, and, supposing the President keeps 1,000,000 men or so over in Europe, there will be another million coming back from "over there." They will be displacing the war workers here, because the soldier will always be taken care of first.

The CHAIRMAN. You are right about that, and my thought has been that if we provide for taking care of the men who have fought in the Army—which, of course, everybody feels we should do; in fact, we needed a man here, and I sent down and announced my preference for a soldier, if we could get him. The young man is here this morning. I think this is typical of what everybody is doing, that if we could provide for the taking care of the Army, it would seem to me that ought to come pretty near solving the situation.

Mr. RODENBERG. What is going to become of the other 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 the soldiers are going to displace? We have got to make some provision for those people.

The CHAIRMAN. I have my own idea as to the best way to take care of the soldiers.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. My idea is that the Government ought to stand behind these soldiers until they get back in their employment, to stand behind them for two or three years, if necessary—soldiers and sailors, too.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LUNDEEN. Here is a statement by Mr. N. A. Smyth, assistant director general, United States Employment Service. He is right in touch with the situation, and he says this [reading]:

"Unemployment is the greatest danger confronting the United States during the next four months the labor reconstruction conference was told at its meeting here to-day by Nathan A. Smyth, assistant director general of the United States Employment Service?

"Soldiers are being discharged by the thousands daily on the basis of military units, with no reference to whether or not they are now needed in industry.

"There is every prospect that unless remedial measures are promptly taken the sight of stranded, workless, moneyless soldiers will be common throughout the land.

"The great danger in the coming four months is that there won't be jobs enough to go around; that unemployment will come with attendant misery and social unrest at a time when anarchistic tendencies are contagious.

"Chiefly must we look to our manufacturers to carry the burden. But they are hesitant. Taxes are not yet determined. The cost of money is high and credit timid for a while. The prices of raw material and labor are high. The producer hopes they will fall, and manifests a tendency to wait till they do. To meet each of these deterrent features is an immediate national task."

* * * * * * *

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was the impression I had of the situation, but these business men, these employers of labor, seem to take the other view of it. Do you understand what is their source of information? Have you looked into the matter sufficiently to know what their source of information is?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not know where they get their information. I think they are absolutely wrong. Every country in the world is anticipating unemployment, and every country in the world that is forehanded and forward looking at all is going to meet it. As I mentioned early in my statement here, they are putting forth all sorts of projects—first, to take care of the soldiers, and, secondly, the war workers. All sorts of road-building and housing projects and State farms are being projected.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LUNDEEN. Take, for instance, one of the factories in my home city. Before the armistice 25 or 30 men would apply for work each day, while since the armistice there has been double the number of men asking for jobs. That may be partly due to the fact that one large plant in my home city burned and threw several thousand men out of employment.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SNELL. That may be a peculiar situation due to an unusual condition.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But they were asking for jobs even before this plant was burned, and it has increased since then; and also due to the fact that they formally used three shifts, and two shifts have been dispensed with, and only one shift is now working in almost all of the foundries and steel and iron works in our home city. But that is only one portion of the country.

The resolution looks toward a survey of the situation. Since we have had surveys of various kinds, I do not see why we should not have a survey on this proposition by the committees of Congress, with authority to call these men before them and administer oaths and inquire and look into the general situation.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear they have to employ assistance.

Mr. SNELL. I think that goes altogether too far.

Mr. GARRETT. These committees already have their clerks. What will be the necessity, Mr. LUNDEEN, taking the suggestion there as to the lack of authority on the part of these committees to subpœna witnesses, of their being clothed with that particular authority to summon witnesses and force the attendance of people to discuss this problem? The interest in it surely must be great enough that they would come voluntarily without being brought by subpœna to discuss a great economic situation. I hope you will understand I am not undertaking in any way to discredit your efforts. Your motives do you credit. I am merely speaking of just what sort of a situation we would be in if we carry this resolution or some resolution to the floor of the House. What answer could we give to such inquiries as I am now making?

Mr. LUNDEEN. If men come willingly there would be no necessity of using that power; if they do not, we could see that they do come in.

The standing committees enumerated in the resolution should by all means have all the powers granted them by the last paragraph of the resolution. The fact that the chairmen and members of those committees are not now of the belief that their committees possess these powers, and therefore have not acted and will not act, is one of the strongest reasons for the passage of the resolution. Another reason is that the resolution is not only a specific direction and authority to act at once, which is conferred on these enumerated standing committees of the House; but it is a broad and positive declaration of principle and public policy on the part of the House, which is a definite reassurance and pledge to the soldiers and the war workers, as well as the people generally that as they stood by the Nation in its need of men and women to fight and work for political liberty in foreign lands, so now the Nation will stand by them in their need for employment and economic liberty here at home.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not your idea, Mr. LUNDEEN, that there is probably a real danger of unemployment; that your opinion in that respect being sustained by the action taken by these other countries—England, Australia, and Canada—that up to the present no concrete action has been taken to meet that possible emergency, and that your resolution is more in the nature of a suggestion to call it to the attention of Congress in order that some action may be taken to meet this possible emergency?

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is just what I have in mind, and along that line the President in his address of November 11 said this (reading):

"The ordinary and normal processes of private initiative will not, however, provide immediate employment for all of the men of our returning armies.

"It seems to me important, therefore, that the development of public works of every sort should be promptly resumed, in order that opportunities should be created for unskilled labor in particular, and that plans should be made for such developments of our unused lands and our natural resources as we have hitherto lacked stimulation to undertake.

In a great many sections of the country public work can not be undertaken during the winter, and it will be several months before public work can be undertaken, and these men are being discharged now, in the fall of the year, with winter approaching, and when there is lack of work.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are mistaken, then no harm can come from having what you call a survey. If there shall be found widespread unemployment, then it is worth the trouble and expense involved in trying to meet it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think it is the first duty of Congress at this time to look into it and make a survey.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would you have that done by all these committees or one committee, as has been suggested?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I introduced a resolution naming several, and another Congressman introduced a resolution naming still more committees, and it has been suggested here that we have just one committee. It makes no difference to me, but I want somebody to get at it.

Mr. SNELL. If you want definite action, you better have one committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have you any knowledge as to whether a committee of the Manufacturers' Association has taken up the question or not with a view of restoring or readjusting their industries to peace conditions and employing labor, the need for just what you all want done?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Along that line they are hesitating until the taxation problem has been fixed. They are doing, I am sure, all that they can do; but you know the armistice came upon this country very suddenly. I presume the American private was the only person who foretold the armistice. You remember when he said, "Hell, heaven, or Hoboken by Christmas." All the generals and everybody said it would take until next spring before an armistice could be hoped for. I do not suppose they have been able to readjust themselves, and I am sure they are doing everything they can. But I believe that the Government will have to assist in the situation; that we should not allow this road program to go by the board, or perhaps something along the irrigation line, or something like the swamp-land and cut-over land program; that a committee or several committees or many committees of Congress should take hold of it right away.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree with you. I think the Committee on Roads, Irrigation, Arid Lands, and any committee that has authority on these swamp lands should take all those questions and employ laborers at once, or just as soon as it can be arranged. I think the Appropriations Committee should take the question up.

Mr. GARRETT. Here is the Committee on Flood Control, which is not mentioned. That would be one committee.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be in the other resolution.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Others are named in Mr. Claypool's resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice you mention the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Of course, I do not suppose it would be insisted that that committee should undertake to arrange for positions beyond the need of the public service.

Mr. LUNDEEN. No; I do not think that that should be done. But if there is some future work that should be done and it can be just as well done at the present time, it should not be delayed. The slack should be taken up by all these different committees. I do not want to take any further time just now.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. We will now hear Mr. CLAYPOOL.

STATEMENT OF HON. H. C. CLAYPOOL, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM OHIO.

Mr. CLAYPOOL. My part in this is quite brief and merely supplementary. Finding that our friend (Mr. LUNDEEN) had introduced a resolution, it only occurred to me that a few committees should be added, and that is the part I undertook to supply. I first started simply to amend this resolution, but it amounted to an entire resolution by the time they got it printed.

I may be all wrong in this. I came here this morning from home with the idea that there was a real danger of the unemployed. That was the impression where I had been traveling. I came here to learn that there is probably no such danger existing, and I am pleased to death that there is not. Surely, if we can get down off of the high perch where we have been preparing a great Army, running the manufacturing plants to the high point in producing munitions of war and clothing and everything that goes with a great Army, if we can get off of that eminence to the normal without a jar, I am tickled to death. There is not anybody more pleased with that than I am.

But, you will pardon me, we all have our opinions. I do not believe we can do it. There are many things which enter into it. Even before 1915, as has been said here by some of the Members when everything was stimulated by a foreign war, we were on the verge of manufacturing tramps. We had more men than we had real use for. Now, we have gone through that period. Not only the foreign war, but our own coming into the war a year and a half ago has stimulated everything to the high point. Even this has entered into it: Back home, in the farming country where my friend CAMPBELL lives and where I live, farmers are arranging to get along with fewer men. They are using the tractor, they are doing this and that, using machinery for husking and cutting corn, and learning to get along generally without so many men. Even that is going to enter into it. Take the great factories; they are going to hesitate a little while to know just what to do. Beyond the new conditions following the great war like we have just had is going to develop——

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. CLAYPOOL, if the farmers are making this great demand for tractors and machinery, would it really not have the effect of increasing the demand for labor, because it will take those men to make all this machinery in the factories which the farmers are demanding?

Mr. CLAYPOOL. Yes; but one machine requiring but a few men to manufacture would do the work of a hundred men when set in operation on the farm. That works into the problem all the way along the line. All we hope to do in this direction, if you gentlemen find in your wisdom that a different resolution will answer the purpose, you have my entire consent, and I have no pride in the form of the resolution. If you find fewer committees can investigate to better advantage, I have not anything to say. I only wanted to add, in my additional resolution, for instance, a matter that has been discussed here quite a little in my presence, and that is the road proposition. I want to say, too, by way of preliminary, that I am a pretty fair economist, of necessity, and I do not want to spend a dollar of the Government's money without producing something worth one hundred cents on the dollar. Take, for illustration, if this Government would undertake to run a few trunk lines—one, two, or three, whatever may be necessary—of paved roads across this great continent of ours, I would want it to be worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and I believe it would be worth that. Not only that, but we should stimulate the States to run their laterals into those trunk lines and also the counties to do the same thing. It would be a foundation for all good road systems that we gentlemen have in mind here and would certainly be a valuable asset.

I only speak of that as one particular matter.

I want to call attention, too, while passing along rapidly the line that is suggested here, that I find it well founded that other countries are anticipating the same fear that a few of us have in mind. Canada, which has been mentioned, has arranged already to give each returning soldier 160 acres of land, and lend him $2,500 in money to go and enter it and prepare for business. That might be a little extravagant, but those of us who have lived in the era following the War of the Rebellion remember that we had a great West then—Kansas, Nebraska—all that great fertile country that was ready for farming was opened to settlement, and they rushed out there. It was a relief to the whole situation. But we all know that that condition does not exist now. When you come to taking up swamp lands, when you come to getting water on millions of acres of arid land, the individual can not go and do it. It has to be done by great private companies that speculate or it has to be done by the Government—one way or the other. You can not expect the fellow who is thrown out of a factory or who is thrown out of the Army to go out there onto that arid land and get water on it. It can not be done. Those of us who have given that public-land matter a little attention know it can not be done that way. That land is either going to remain there unimproved or fall into the hands of great speculators, bringing about a situation that the Government has got to take some notice of and do something along the line we mentioned.

There is one other thought that struck me, and I am going to hurry along with it, and that is this: All the men thrown out of employment are not in the same lines of life. You talk about farmers, and a good many people think anybody can farm. There never was a greater mistake. The average young man accustomed to city life can not go out there on that arid land, and even if somebody got him water on it, he can not become a farmer. He is 25 years old, perhaps, and has been in the Army a while and spent all his life in some city or some factory. And so it goes all the way along the line. That is our notion for having several lines of endeavor considered. Farming is one proposition; the building of roads, which will require brick, cement, and other materials, opens up avenues of employment for men who would not be farmers, and so with matters coming under all the attention of almost every one of these different committees; as we all agree that this is to be a mere survey we ask that you give it attention.

All that I expected to do was to intensify the consideration. I agree with Mr. GARRETT—and we nearly agree—that these committees have much of the power needed, but might they not overlook it, unless attention was called to it, in the busy whirl of affairs here? So, we simply want to intensify that idea and call attention to it more than any other one thing in reciting these matters and calling the committee's attention to the matter in these resolutions:

* * * * * * *

Mr. CLAYPOOL. And that is largely what prompts us in calling special attention to this, whatever you may conclude to do. With our shipping facilities and the great foreign demand and all that which goes with it will it not naturally keep up to the high point the food products for the next year or two or three years, perhaps? If there will be a superabundance of labor—you know everything is governed by supply and demand more or less—might it not reduce their wages below what would be an honest living even for the honest laborer? That is the only thing we want to call your attention to, and beyond that we have no interest.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CLAYPOOL. My friend here, Mr. Ramage, has given a good deal of time and thought to these matters, and I will be glad for you to hear him.

STATEMENT OF MR. MATHEW H. RAMAGE, 1343 CLIFTON STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. RAMAGE. The thing that appealed to me, gentlemen——

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please tell us what position you occupy?

Mr. RAMAGE. I am chairman of the executive committee of the Economic Liberty League, a body organized to help out this situation.

Mr. SNELL. When was it organized, and tell us something about it?

Mr. RAMAGE. It was organized in New York City about six weeks ago, and I was over there and they made me chairman of it.

Mr. SNELL. What does that mean; what does it stand for?

Mr. RAMAGE. Well, it stands for a better and fairer economic adjustment. The Economic Liberty League is an organization for the betterment of mankind. The following is the memorial recently presented to Congress which contains the declaration of principles and list of officers of the league:

THE ECONOMIC LIBERTY LEAGUE,
Washington, D. C., November 20, 1918.

To the honorable the Speaker and House of Representatives of the United States of America.

GENTLEMEN: We respectfully submit for your consideration and action during the present Congress the legislative proposals set forth in the inclosed resolutions. Being firmly persuaded that only by prompt action along these lines can the immemorial and beneficent principles of Jeffersonian democracy be perpetuated and expanded to enable the hundreds of millions of Americans of this and future generations to enjoy the full fruits of that economic liberty, the denial of which has been the main cause of human miseries in the modern world; and America's adoption of which now will save our people and help other nations to escape the disasters to civilization which have befallen many peoples in Europe.

Respectfully, yours, ECONOMIC LIBERTY LEAGUE,
NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
MATTHEW H. RAMAGE, Chairman.
WM. DELAHUNTY, Secretary.

PETITION AND MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Resolutions adopted at the meeting of the National Executive Committee of the Economic Liberty League, Washington, D. C.

Whereas the armies of freedom having won in the great war political liberty and independence for the peoples of Europe; in order to make permanent these and other liberties, it is now necessary for the people of the United States and other nations to achieve the last and greatest of the rights of man—economic liberty—without which all the other forms of freedom fail; and

Whereas as was wisely declared by the Revolutionary Convention of France in 1789:

"Ignorance, neglect, and contempt of human rights are the main sources of public misfortunes and corruptions of government"; and

Whereas in times of long-settled peace and public sympathy, and under the iron discipline and ruthless despotism of war times, human rights are often and easily trampled under foot and treated with "ignorance, neglect, and contempt," yet not so may human rights be safely treated in the mighty flux and change at the close of such a stupendous and bloody struggle as that through which the world has just passed; and

Whereas more urgent and important than any other issue facing the people of the United States to-day is the problem of the future employment and the economic liberty of the millions of men and women of the military and war material forces who are about to be released from their present occupations; not a day should be lost by our citizens and our National, State, and local government bodies in making ample preparation for this huge and complex emergency, which must be settled quickly and with justice, gentleness, and wisdom. The first duty falls on the Federal Congress, because under our Constitution all the issues of war and peace are the peculiar province of the National Government. And, of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government, to Congress falls more especially the duty of solving these greatest of the problems of peace, because in dealing with these vital matters the judiciary is impotent and the executive practically helpless without authority and direction from Congress.

The legislative branch of the Government must lay the foundation broad and deep, founded on the solid rock of economic liberty. Freedom of access for labor to the unused natural resources of the country and equal opportunities for all the people over the highways of the Nation are fundamental.

The maintenance of highways is one of the most important functions of the Government—one of the great essential attributes of sovereignty, of which no State can divest itself without endangering the very existence of free government. Therefore

Resolved, That we demand as the first step in the program of reconstruction, the establishment of permanent Government ownership and operation of the telegraph and telephone systems as a part of the Postal Service of the Nation. And we indorse and recommend the immediate enactment of the principles of the pending Cary bill, H. R. 6750, for the erection of a Federal department of transportation, as a first step toward the early establishment of Government ownership and operation of all railroads, pipe lines, and waterways.

We demand the adoption by the Government—Federal, State, and local—of a policy of Government provision for employment for returning soldiers and sailors and war industries workers who are now about to be released from their employment. And as a first step to that end, we urge the immediate enactment of the principles of the Loft and Fowler unemployment bills of 1915.

We also demand as a part of this provision the enactment of the principles of the Crosser bill as a feature of the pending Federal revenue legislation and of the permanent revenue policy of the Nation. And we insist upon the necessity of a rehearing before the House and Senate committees of the Congress on the pending revenue bill because of the important changes necessarily arising out of the termination of the war. We indicate the possibility of securing $4,000,000,000 of public revenue from a site value tax on the unimproved land values of the country, which now flows into the pockets of private land monopoly; this amount can be raised without laying a single penny of added taxes on the industry or consumption of the Nation.

The adoption by the Government of the policies herein set forth will not only remove the menace of unemployment but by vastly increasing production will greatly reduce the present needless and enormous trust-created high cost of food, fuel, and other necessities of life; this, too, without making at all necessary those proposed increases of hours of work, and reductions of wages of labor, which may entail serious disturbance of the industrial and commercial conditions of the country. For no one can deny that economic liberty and justice are to-day vitally necessary additions to the policies of all Governments in order to insure permanent industrial as well as international peace for the war-wearied peoples of the world.

Respectfully submitted.

ECONOMIC LIBERTY LEAGUE,
National Executive Committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it incorporated or voluntary?

Mr. RAMAGE. It is just a voluntary organization.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who are the members?

Mr. RAMAGE. Edward J. Bowen, 320 Fifth Avenue, New York, is treasurer, and Mr. William Delahunty is the secretary. Capt. Charles Campbell, water transportation expert, is the vice chairman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do they maintain an office?

Mr. RAMAGE. Yes; there is an office in New York, at 320 Fifth Avenue, and also here, at 810 F Street, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How is it sustained—what supports it?

Mr. RAMAGE. It is supported just by voluntary contributions among ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. You are a resident of this city?

Mr. RAMAGE. I live here in the wintertime; I live down in Maryland in the summer and am a farmer down there on the Potomac River.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, we will be glad to hear anything you desire to say.

Mr. RAMAGE. The thing that appealed to me about this reconstruction, to state it in as concrete a manner as possible. This great number of laborers in the war-munitions plants and also the soldiers in uniform are being released at a time when I do not think there is the least possibility of a very material lowering of the cost of living—the cost of living is higher probably than it has ever been at any time in the history of America—and it was in view of the tremendous amount of materials that they seem to have to send to Europe we are going to be down to a point where, if we get enough to eat, we will have to pay a big price for it here right along, and I understand that even wages now in a great many parts of this country are not quite commensurate with the cost of living. I understand that the cost of living has gone up 65 per cent and the wages only 50 per cent in the United States. That being the case, living is above normal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think you are right. I do not think anybody could live on the standard of living upon which they lived four years ago to-day, even if there were a 65 per cent increase in wages.

Mr. RAMAGE. That is what we fear. We fear some great turmoils might take place in the country, big strikes would start up, and we might have a worse condition than we ever dreamed of having unless something substantial is done. I do not believe that the United States Government needs to spend one dollar that is not for permanent improvements; that is to say, that the people will not get the full return for. I believe good roads, for instance, will pay for themselves in a few years. There is a great lack of good roads where I live. I live 45 miles from Washington. It takes me a half a day to get there on the boat and it takes me another half of a day to get back. If I use a team, I have got to go to La Plata on the train and take a team 22 miles, and the roads are most deplorable. I am not advocating anything for that part of the country particularly, but those are the conditions there, and good roads are needed everywhere.

STATEMENT OF MR. WESTERN STARR, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. Mr. Chairman, they have asked me to say a few words here. My name is Western Starr.

The CHAIRMAN. State your occupation, and so on.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. My residence is in Baltimore. I am a farmer. I do not know that I ought to say, living in Baltimore, that I am a farmer, but I have been a farmer for a great many years, and I am now, between seasons, waiting for the next season's work to begin.

My relationship to this organization is that of a consulting friend. I never heard of it until 10 days ago.

Mr. SNELL. You mean the organization this other gentleman represented?

Mr. WESTERN STARR. Yes, sir; it was only newly organized, and its object, as it was presented to me, appealed to my sympathies, and I have consented to look into the subject a little and to bring before you some observations in connection with it.

Of course, anything I have to say will be fragmentary, following the words that have been said before, and the first thing I want to do is to reply to the suggestion involved or suggested by the question of the gentleman in the easy chair [Mr. GARRETT] with reference to what further authority is needed by the committees that have been mentioned in these resolutions. I think that there has been practically no lack of interest, but there is a mandate needed. These men have power to do what is necessary, but until Congress, which is theoretically a sovereign power of this Government, takes it up and says that it is necessary that something should be done, the committees are very apt, being burdened, as they are, with other things, to let matters take their natural course.

The CHAIRMAN. We will have to ask you to conclude as quickly as you can.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. I will ask you to tell me how many minutes you can give me.

The CHAIRMAN. We have to go into executive session here in a few minutes. We will hear you for five minutes, when we will have to conclude the hearing for to-day.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. Nature, left alone, will in most cases rectify all the blunders that occur. But it is the art of the position to assist nature, and if we are to allow this situation to take care of itself, undoubtedly it will work itself out in time, but by application of the wisdom of developed observation we will probably be able to assist nature in the solution of this great question, and without the distress that nature alone will involve.

I apprehend that we are touching very close to important fundamentals on this question. Being limited for time, I must be brief in what I have to say. In perfectly normal times there is 3 to 5 per cent involuntary unemployment in this country at all times. It is not always located in the same communities, but there is a total of 3 to 5 per cent involuntary idleness in this country. We now have involved in war enterprises, either in uniform or out, not less than 17,000,000 or 18,000,000 of individuals. War industries are being stopped. I was talking with three gentlemen from Pittsburgh this morning. They told me, in answer to the direct question, "We are simply waiting. We are laying off men. We will not take on new men and we can not undertake new enterprises, because we do not know what may happen, and we are not able to go ahead without knowing what we are going to do. We can do nothing until the treaty is absolutely signed except to prepare." And they are living from hand to mouth, and that is so all over the country.

My judgment is that the regulator of wages as to the levels and the volume of employment is always the degree of accessibility to natural opportunities of this country, under a condition that has existed for 50 years, to be practically absorbed. They are not utilized and they are not developed, but they are absorbed and have passed out of Government control into the hands of private individuals or corporations. There is a way of reaching that.

I believe on the question of post roads the one big thing is the annual migration that comes twice every year, in the spring and fall, from the rural districts into the city and from the city into the rural districts, growing out of the fallibility of seasonal occupations. But there is enough to employ all the involuntary idleness by Government work in the form of post roads and highways alone. I offer that merely as a suggestion. That ought not to be done entirely by the Government; the States themselves should take part in it; and I believe a system could be developed under which, following the lines suggested in a recent bill that the Government will provide a certain fund provided the localities furnished a stated fund to keep those men at work with the improvements that should be going on, and the inducements should be sufficient in the form of wages to stimulate the work and keep it going.

When we dislocate 50 per cent of the available producing power of the country—and you are perfectly well aware that the census reports show, fallible as they may be, only 30 to 35 per cent of the people were employed in gainful occupations in this country in normal times, and over half were employed in war industries—and to turn them loose and let them go at their own sweet will, what will happen? We have no inducements to offer in the way of idle, vacant land which the Government owns. We should put them on the land, but not give them title except for use and occupation. That is what we should have done heretofore, but we did not do it. We gave them the land outright, and now it has passed into the hands of speculators.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What land do you mean?

Mr. WESTERN STARR. I mean the great lands of the West—Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa; take those railroad land grants and where is the land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is owned by individuals very largely.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. The land grant?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. That may be true in certain sections.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is true all along the line of the Union Pacific.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. Take, then, the Northern Pacific.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. It is not true along the Northern Pacific.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know that in Kansas that land is owned by individuals, men on small farms.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. It is not the farmers who are buying farms; it is the banker and the lawyer who are buying farms. The farmers of this country have never made any money agriculturally; they have never made any money by farming. I am talking now of the mass of profits which have been the profits of the land speculators.

Mr. SNELL. Where do you get that sort of information?

Mr. WESTERN STARR. From your own census report. You go to Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, and those States, and you will find at the crossroads retired farmers who have rented or sold their farms and who are living in the little towns there and have been there during the last three or four years of their lives.

Mr. FOSTER. You realize that one great drawback—and I do—is that it is the man who lives on the farm and does not own it.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. The tenant farmer is the curse of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. The man who sits in the town and lives off of the farmer out in the country.

Mr. SNELL. That is so in every part of the country. However, the lawyers and bankers buying farms I never heard of before.

Mr. WESTERN STARR. You will find it so. That is literally so, and I can produce testimony in this room of high authority. I would enjoy your questions and am sorry that we have not more time.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

And so, gentlemen of the House, you see this most important problem was gone into some time back but nothing was done, and in this connection let me say that the Postal Service is near to my heart. I have a brother, Joel Lundeen, who has served the Government for years in the Railway Mail Service. I have stood by these boys right along in Congress and out of Congress.

The United States Government is a big employer of labor and should by all means set an example by giving employment to our men. The Post Office Department during the war has curtailed all branches of the service to conserve man power by reducing the force of letter carriers, clerks, and railway mail clerks, by cutting out one delivery a day or more, and by taking service off a large number of railroad trains.

During the last year the department has opened the doors to women as carriers and as railway mail clerks, and, although that may have been the proper step during the war to conserve man power, I believe now that the war is over that the department should only employ men in those branches. This would give employment to many returned soldiers. Women are not physically able to perform this class of labor. The department is to hold an examination for railway mail clerks March 15, 1919, for both men and women between the ages 18 to 35. The employment of women in the carrier or Railway Mail Service was unheard of until a year or so ago. To show the curtailment in the Railway Mail Service from July 1, 1916, to December 31, 1917, taken from official schedules issued by the department, the Merchants' Association of New York spent six months' time collecting data to find the cause for the poor service, and they give the following figures, which pertain to the tenth division, which includes Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota, and northern part of Michigan: Eighty-nine railway post-office trains wholly discontinued, 107 railway post-office trains discontinued in part, which makes 196 railway post-office trains discontinued wholly or in part. That makes 12,983 miles of Railway Post Office Service discontinued, which makes 4,271,084 annual miles of Railway Post Office Service discontinued during that time. Only 24 railway post-office trains have been established, wholly or in part, which makes 1,658 miles, or 538,527 annual miles. So the net service discontinued for the period is 172 trains, with 11,325 miles; all told, 3,723,557 annual miles, which, summarized, means that July 1, 1916, there were 548 trains in operation, of which 172 trains were discontinued, or 31.39 per cent.

It has been estimated that it would take 400 men in this one division to restore the service to where it was July 1, 1916; and that is only 1 division out of 15 which cover the whole United States. For the whole United States there was July 1, 1916, 6,636 railway post-office trains, of which 1,612 railway post-office trains were discontinued wholly or in part, which means that 25.32 per cent of railway post-office trains have been discontinued from July 1, 1916, to December 31, 1917, which when put in miles means that on July 1, 1916, there were 217,462 miles of railway post-office train service, of which 96,178 miles have been discontinued, or 44.23 per cent.

The merchants' association summarizes their report, in part, by saying:

1. That mails are not dispatched with former frequency;
2. That they are not fully worked in transit;
3. That in consequence much "stuck" letter mail is turned into the terminal station, and then materially delayed;
4. That inferior mails move with extreme slowness;
5. That train delays are not a principal cause of slowness in the mails; but that
6. Insufficiency in the number of railway postal cars, their withdrawal from a great number of routes throughout the United States, and the reduction of the crews of railway postal cars appear to be the main causes of the conditions shown.

The Government has no men in its service more intelligent, more faithful, and efficient than the postal employees. Why curtail them? Why treat them unjustly? Not only should their pay be ample, but at the end of the road, when life's sun is setting, they should of a right have a retirement pension, and, gentlemen, I stand ready to vote for the Keating-McKellar bill or any other bill along this line.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As far back as the first part of December, 1918, the legislation proposed in my resolution of November 21 was considered of sufficient importance to force the great Rules Committee of the House to take up the question. Hearings were held for two days. Members of Congress, economists, business men, and the Secretary of Labor appeared before the committee in support of the proposition; and at the hearings every member of the committee but one emphatically expressed his approval of the resolution. In spite of all this, however, no report was made by the committee, and no action was taken by either the committee or the House. What mysterious power prevented action remains a secret.

The unprecedented meeting of the governors of all the States and the mayors of 100 leading cities of the United States called by the President to meet at the White House March 4 is evidence that the extreme and urgent importance of the unemployment problem is at last recognized. But how much better for the unemployed people of the United States would it have been if President Wilson had called this conference of governors and mayors and urged action by Congress last November, when I presented my resolution.

Brazen contempt and heartless neglect of human rights are essentially responsible for the building up of the great fortunes, whose growth is such a marked feature of our development. From the same cause spring poverty and pauperism. "The tramp is the complement of the millionaire." Unemployment is more menacing to the Republic than hostile armies and fleets bent on destruction.

The Independent Labor Party, representing all the labor organizations of Chicago, adopted the following platform the latter part of December, and therein strongly indorses the principle of my unemployment resolution:

THE INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY PLATFORM.

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE.

1. The unqualified right of workers to organize and to deal collectively with employers through such representatives of their unions as they choose.

DEMOCRATIC CONTROL OF INDUSTRY.

2. Democratic control of industry and commerce for the general good by those who work with hand and brain and the elimination of autocratic domination of the forces of production and distribution, either by selfish private interests or bureaucratic agents of government.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY AND MINIMUM WAGE.

3. An 8-hour day and a 44-hour week in all branches of industry, with minimum rates of pay which, without the labor of mothers and children, will maintain the worker and his family in health and comfort and provide a competence for old age, with ample provision for recreation and good citizenship.

ABOLITION OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

4. Abolition of unemployment by the creation of opportunity for steady work at standard wages through the stabilization of industry and the establishment, during periods of depression, of Government work on housing, road building, reforestation, reclamation of desert and swamp, and the development of ports and waterways.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

5. Complete equality of men and women in government and industry, with the fullest enfranchisement of women, and equal pay for men and women doing similar work.

STOP PROFITEERING.

6. Reduction of the cost of living to a just level immediately and as a permanent policy by the development of cooperation and the elimination of wasteful methods, parasitical middlemen, and all profiteering in the creation and distribution of the products of industry and agriculture in order that the actual producers may enjoy the fruits of their toil.

ABOLISH KAISERISM IN EDUCATION.

7. Democratization of education in public schools and universities through the participation of labor and the organized teachers in the determination of methods, policies, and programs in this fundamental field.

EXTENSION OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' INSURANCE TO ALL WORKERS.

8. Continuation after the war of soldiers and sailors' insurance; extension of such life insurance by the Government without profit to all men and women; and the establishment of governmental insurance against accident and illness and upon all insurable forms of property.

TAX INHERITANCE, INCOMES, AND LAND VALUES TO PAY WAR DEBT AND GOVERNMENT EXPENSES.

9. Liquidation of the national debt by the application of all inheritances above a hundred thousand dollars, supplemented as may be necessary by a direct capital tax upon all persons and corporations where riches have been gained by war or other profiteering, and payment of the current expenses of Government by graduated income taxes, public profits from nationally owned utilities and resources, and from a system of taxation of land values which will stimulate rather than retard production.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES—NATIONALIZATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES TO FURNISH EMPLOYMENT FOR RETURNING SOLDIERS AND SAILORS AND DISLOCATED WAR WORKERS.

10. Public ownership and operation of railways, steamships, stockyards, grain elevators, terminal markets, telegraphs, telephones, and all other public utilities, and the nationalization and development of basic natural resources, water power, and unused land, with the repatriation of large holdings, to the end that returning soldiers and sailors and dislocated war workers may find an opportunity for an independent livelihood.

RESTORATION OF FREE SPEECH, FREE PRESS, AND FREE ASSEMBLAGE.

11. Complete restoration, at the earliest possible moment, of all fundamental political rights—free speech, free press, and free assemblage; the removal of all war-time restraints upon the interchange of ideas and the movement of people among communities and nations; and the liberation of all persons held in prison or indicted under charges due to their championship of the rights of labor or their patriotic insistence upon the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

LABOR REPRESENTATION IN ALL DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT AND ALL GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES OF DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONSTRUCTION.

12. Representation of labor in proportion to its voting strength in all departments of Government and upon all governmental commissions and agencies of demobilization and reconstruction, and recognition of the principles of trade-unionism in the relocation of soldiers, sailors, and war workers in peace pursuits, with adequate provision for the support and extension of the Department of Labor as the principal agency therefor.

LABOR REPRESENTATION IN PEACE CONFERENCE.

13. Representation of the workers, in proportion to their numbers in the armies, navies, and workshops of the world, at the peace conference and upon whatever international tribunals may result therefrom, with the labor of this Nation represented by the president of the American Federation of Labor and such other delegates as the workers may democratically designate.

AN END TO KINGS AND WARS.

14. Supplementing the league of nations, and to make that instrument of international democracy vitally effective for humanity, a league of the workers of all nations pledged and organized to enforce the destruction of autocracy, militarism, and economic imperialism throughout the world, and to bring about world-wide disarmament and open diplomacy, to the end that there shall be no more kings and no more wars.

The Christian Science Monitor says labor is out for a complete reconsideration and readjustment of its position. This position was defined as clearly as possible in the statement made, quite recently, in the House of Commons by the general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen. Mr. Thomas left, indeed, little to the imagination:

The organized workers of Great Britain have made up their minds to obtain for themselves an increasing share of the wealth which their labor has produced and produces. The workers of the threefold organization are determined to shorten materially the hours of labor in their respective industries. They are dissatisfied with the system of society which treats their labor power as a mere commodity to be bought, sold, and used as though they were machinelike units in the process of wealth production and distribution, and they therefore demand that they shall become real partners in industry, jointly sharing in determining the working conditions and management.

LABOR'S LAST WORD.

There you have the last word of labor in every civilized country in the world. And labor follows its demand with the question, "What are you going to do about it?" On the statesmanlike quality of the reply, not only of capital but of governments, to that question may depend the future peace of the world. It is the second stage of Armageddon.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to call the attention of the Chair to the organic act which has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING]?

When this service was established by the appropriation in the sundry civil bill last year it was manifestly subject to a point of order. The opinion of the committee then was that it was so subject. The United States Employment Bureau was established as a war emergency bureau. Now, the gentlemen who seek to have it continued urge that it can be continued by a change of language, because the first section of the organic act contains the declaration of purpose to the effect that the purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to improve the working conditions and advance their opportunities for profitable employment. Mr. Chairman, that is nothing more than a declaration of the purpose of the department.

If that is sufficient legislation to authorize the establishment of a new bureau, then you may as well abolish the Committee on Labor, for it has no further function to perform. The gentleman from Colorado, who argues on the point of order, I know is not in earnest, for before his own committee—the Committee on Labor—is a bill introduced by himself to establish an employment bureau, define its duties, and prescribe its limitations.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, just for a moment?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. KEATING. I call the attention of the gentleman and the attention of the Chair to this very important point, that this amendment that I have offered here does not establish an employment bureau in the Department of Labor. It gives the Secretary of Labor a lump-sum appropriation to carry out one of the objects set forth in the organic law, which is an entirely different proposition from the establishment of a labor bureau.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Chair has heard that and is familiar with it. Under that first section it is sought to be held that the amendment is in order. If that be true, why was it necessary to secure legislation for the establishment of a Children's Bureau? If that be true, why was it necessary to secure legislation to establish a Bureau of Labor Statistics; and why was it necessary to secure legislation for the establishment of a Bureau of Immigration, or why would it be necessary hereafter to secure legislation to establish any bureau under the Government? The organic act of the Department of Commerce contains a declaration of purpose similar to that which is contained in this organic act establishing the Department of Labor. Is it contended that because that declaration is contained in the organic act of the Department of Commerce the sum of $10,000,000, or any other sum, can be appropriated for the mere carrying out of the declaration of purpose?

The act goes on in subsequent sections to prescribe duties and to provide the duties of the various bureaus under the Department of Labor; and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the eighth section of the organic act. There it provides that the Secretary of Labor shall have the power to act as mediator and appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever, in his judgment, the interests of industrial peace may require it to be done. It goes on and requires the Secretary of Labor to report back to Congress the result of his investigations, in order that legislation may be had to accomplish the purposes set forth in the organic act.

Again, in section 10, it is provided:

That the Secretary of Labor shall investigate and report to Congress a plan of coordination of the activities, duties, and powers of the office of the Secretary of Labor with the activities, duties, and powers of the present bureaus, commissions, and departments, so far as they relate to labor and its conditions, in order to harmonize and unify such activities, duties, and powers, with a view to further legislation to further define the duties and powers of such Department of Labor.

Now, if under the declaration of purpose they have the power to appropriate money to carry on anything they want to do in order to accomplish the purpose, why require the Secretary of Labor to report back to Congress for further legislation to define the duties and the powers of the Department of Labor? Manifestly it would be useless. It is nothing more than a declaration of purpose similar to that contained in the organic act of every department, and if under that the Chair could hold that this should be done, then there is no excuse for the existence of legislative committees in this House or in any other. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not allow the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to leave the impression on the minds of the Members of the House that this is an attempt to create a new bureau in the Department of Labor. I have read the language of the organic act, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that as far back as 1915 the Secretary of Labor, basing his action upon the authority granted in the organic act creating the Department of Labor, in a report pointed out that the Department had established, through its division of information, Federal labor exchange branches, with a public employment branch station in 18 employment zones throughout the country. The work of these labor exchanges was fully explained in that report, and the results were tabulated.

And again, in his report in 1916, the Secretary of Labor reported that "The United States Employment Service, now an established agency of this department, is engaged in promoting a beneficial distribution of wage-earning labor throughout the United States by advancing opportunities for profitable employment."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Which department or bureau was it—the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization—under which that was specifically authorized in order to secure employment for aliens?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not think it was specifically authorized under the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It was under the Department of Labor. It may have been in connection with the Immigration Service, but I can say to the gentleman that I can recall an employment service in the Department of Labor in my own city before I came to Congress. That is nothing new. This is no attempt to establish a new branch.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. In my own city the Department of Immigration has been entirely separated, and has been from the very beginning, from the Employment Service.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That is only a branch of the Department of Labor.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman was speaking of their being together. They are entirely separate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations my natural inclination is to enlarge the jurisdiction of that committee. It would have simplified the task of the committee tremendously in the preparation of this bill if we had taken the easy and elastic view of our authority and jurisdiction that is now urged upon us by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. But we did not take the view that an appropriating committee could run amuck and appropriate as it saw fit, simply because a service had been undertaken and carried for a short period of time.

I shall not be particularly disturbed, however the Chairman rules. If he rules that we have jurisdiction, it will make the duties of the committee easier. But in my opinion it is rather important, from the standpoint of the legislating committees of this House, that there be left some little jurisdiction for those committees.

Now it is urged in support of this amendment that it is drafted in the language of the organic law of the Bureau of Labor. That is true. But when before has it been claimed that an appropriating committee could appropriate by simply quoting the general declaration of purpose of an act creating a department of the Government?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield one moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. On page 160 of this bill, which I presume the gentleman voted to report, in line 13 it says:

For the Department of Labor, $150,000.

If that is not subject to the point of order, certainly this other provision would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the regular, ordinary appropriation for the printing for the Department of Labor, provided for by law.

Now, what is the fact with regard to the Department of Labor? It has an all-embracing declaration of beneficial and useful purpose; and, following that very broad and general declaration, the law sets up certain bureaus and agencies within the department and allots to them their duties and responsibilities. If an appropriating committee of the House, by simply quoting the language of an organic act, could appropriate, there would no longer be any necessity for the Committee on Labor or half a dozen other committees in the House whose duties it is to establish new bureaus and to provide new activities. My friend from Colorado did me the honor of quoting from an argument I made in support of an appropriation under the Children's Bureau. But my friend, while he does not claim to be a parliamentarian, is a sufficiently good parliamentarian to understand the very marked and clear and distinct difference between that situation and this. In that case a bureau was established with certain definite functions and responsibilities.

In this case a department is established, in the establishment of which there is a broad and sweeping declaration of general purpose. Of course, in the case of that bureau, any one of the activities delegated to that bureau could be provided for by an item of appropriation. But to say that because a department is established to do certain things therefore you may legislate all over the general field that may be included within that declaration, is to give the appropriating committees all of the jurisdiction which we have heretofore supposed rested with the legislative committees.

Mr. Chairman, certain somewhat questionable decisions connected with items on the Agricultural bill have been quoted. There have been more conflicting decisions on the Agricultural bill and in connection with the items of that bill than in connection with any other appropriation bill in the House. It is true that in some cases the decisions have been rather broad, but in none have they been as broad as is now proposed. I imagine that chairmen, in passing on those cases, may have been influenced by the fact—should not have been, but may have been influenced by the fact—that the Agricultural Committee is both an appropriating and a legislative committee, which has authority to legislate and authority to appropriate, and the only question on the appropriation bill is not, Is this new legislation and therefore outside of the jurisdiction of this committee? but it is, Is this new legislation on a general appropriation bill? And while the fact that that committee both appropriates and legislates should not sway the judgment of the presiding officers, there is no doubt that it has swayed their judgment in some cases. But even in those cases no decision has been as far-reaching as a decision in favor of this particular amendment would be. If this sort of an appropriation is in order on a bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, then we may very well dispense with the services of half a dozen legislating committees of the House and leave the matter of establishing bureaus and departments and agencies and activities to the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to take the time of the House by speaking to the merits of the proposal. My view touching the merits that underlie the amendment has been indicated somewhat by the appropriations carried for the Department of Labor in the deficiency bill, which made provision to continue this employment agency until July 1, and before then I hope for affirmative legislation. But the question which is at issue here—and it is an exceedingly important question, very much more important than even the $10,000,000 that is involved in the amendment—is this: How far a general statement of the purposes for which a bureau or department is established confers upon an appropriating committee without legislative power the right to appropriate any amount of money in the general terms "for the purpose of promoting," and so forth.

I think all of us are apt at times to overlook the importance of the real observance of the rules of the House. If gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the amendment are correct, the Committee on Appropriations absorbs, by virtue of this decision, practically all of the powers of the various legislative committees. And it will have the right simply to take almost any act relative to the creation of any activity of the Government and turn to that part of the language which lawyers might say was in the nature of inducement, but is not really and strictly a power, and on that rest the case. Gentlemen have not undertaken to define the duties—to read the law which defines the duties—of the Department of Labor; but they say, inasmuch as the language says this shall be the purpose of the Department of Labor to do so-and-so, therefore, by starting out with the same generic language in an amendment, it is in order.

The history of the Department of Labor is that it was carved out of the old Department of Commerce and Labor. When this department was separated various bureaus were put into the Department of Labor and various bureaus put into what is now the Department of Commerce.

In order that the whole subject of what might hereafter be given to the Department of Labor should not be foreclosed, there is enumerated first the various bureaus and then it is made the specific duty of the Secretary of Labor to investigate and report to Congress a plan of coordination of the activities, duties, and powers of the office of the Secretary of Labor with the activities, duties, and powers of the present bureaus, commissions, and departments, so far as they relate to labor and its conditions, in order to harmonize and unify such activities, duties, and powers, with a view to further legislation to further define the duties and powers of such Department of Labor.

As was suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], if the opening part of the act conferred upon the Secretary of Labor the right to do anything whatever that in his judgment would promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and so forth, what folly it is to make one of his specific duties the reporting to Congress what additional legislation might be necessary in order to enlarge his powers. His powers already covering all of creation, so far as they are related to wage earners, it was absolutely unnecessary and foolish to undertake further to define them. I repeat, because it is of tremendous importance to this House and to orderly procedure, if you can take a matter of inducement in connection with these various bureaus and simply by putting the amendment in that general language make it in order, then I say to you it is possible to write as in order anything appropriating any sum of money for any purpose under the sun, and I will guarantee to write an amendment that will be proof against any point of order, if the gentleman's contention is correct.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. It does not necessarily follow that because you direct the Secretary of Labor to advise Congress as to what things should be done he can not do other things, if he has the money, because it might be the duty of Congress, although giving him the power to do certain things, to require him to report back so that Congress might know what to give him money for and why to give it to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the language is "legislation to further define the duties and powers of such Department of Labor." The language that the gentleman speaks of does not say that it is the duty to do various things or to have various bureaus, but the general purpose of the Department of Labor, and I submit that if that language is sufficient to tie an appropriation of this kind to, we can simply take the organic act creating any department of the Government and appropriate any lump sum we wish, and leave it to that department under such general language to do with as it pleases.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Would it have been in order to offer an amendment specifying the particular objects for which this money should be appropriated, provided it came within the general purpose for which the department was created?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. The distinction has to be drawn between the general purpose and the prescribed duty. Congress creates a department for a general purpose, and it creates all departments for the general purpose of improving the welfare of the citizens of America; but when it comes to defining the particular activities of the departments, it does not rest upon the general ground of promoting the welfare, but it defines certain functions as duties, and I insist that this, therefore, is not in order. Let us see where it would lead. There have been any number of bills introduced in Congress, and they went to the Committee on Labor. That committee had the right, as it had the duty, in my judgment, to recommend legislation dealing with what I think is a serious situation. It has not seen fit to do so, and therefore an effort is made to make of the Committee on Appropriations a medium for carrying through an undigested program, appropriating a lump sum under the general authority of the preamble of the act. I do not believe it is in order so to do.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Chair's attention to this significant fact: The gentlemen who are urging this point of order are among the great parliamentarians of the House. They have not cited for the information of the Chair a single decision sustaining their contention, not one decision. In all the history of the House, whenever this point was raised, the Chair has ruled that lump-sum appropriations to carry out the objects of the provisions of the organic law was in order, and these gentlemen, with all their knowledge of the precedents, failed to cite a single decision.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have never before heard anybody contend that general language of inducement could be the basis of such an appropriation.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair that all of the authorities on that subject cited by the various gentlemen who have discussed it have taken that position.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. NOLAN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that prior to the declaration of war for two years the Division of Information spent a great deal of money in providing employment to men on the farms and in industries in this country?

Mr. KEATING. I am familiar with that, and yet, anticipating what the gentleman from South Carolina would say, I do not hold that this is in order because of that action.

It is true in the law creating the Bureau of Immigration the Bureau of Information is created, and one of the objects of that bureau is to furnish employment for aliens, and in this great emergency the Secretary of Labor so construed it that some employment was offered to those who were not able to secure employment—at least that is the report.

We base our case squarely on the organic law creating the Department of Labor, and we maintain that all precedents sustain us.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that if we overrule this point of order the Committee on Appropriations can then absorb the jurisdiction of all the committees of the House. There are several things to prevent that. One is the good sense of the Members of this House. The membership of the House will not permit it to do that; but, in addition to that, Mr. Chairman, Congress will never legislate the entire contents of the Treasury in lump-sum appropriations.

I admit that this is a poor way to provide for an employment bureau. I think that we should have enacted legislation creating an employment bureau in the Department of Labor, but the fact is that we have not. It makes no difference where the responsibility rests. It has not been created, and therefore Members of the House are justified in taking advantage of this extraordinary remedy, a perfectly legal remedy, not one to be used every day, but to be used upon such an occasion as this, when a real crisis confronts the Nation. Congress has been derelict in its duty in enacting legislation, and you must go back to the organic law creating the bureau or the department and find there, if you can, a clear authority for the thing you are attempting to do, and then, instead of attempting to create a bureau with all its employees, give a lump-sum appropriation to the chief of the bureau or the secretary of the department and trust to his honesty and to his wisdom in administering it. This is the proposition we submit, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just one minute. I only desire to call the attention of the Chair with reference to the statement urged that prior to the establishment of the employment service in the last sundry civil act an employment bureau existed, that it existed by reason of specific legislation authorizing the establishment of a division of information and prescribing the duties of such division, that it should promote the beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States. Now, in reference to the statement of the gentleman from Colorado that no precedent has been cited, whereas they have offered precedents, I desire to say that the precedent cited by the gentleman from Missouri related to a ruling upon a point of order which held that the establishment of a bureau was not in order, but an appropriation for an investigation was in order under the act of May 25, 1900, enlarging the powers of the Department of Agriculture; that an appropriation for an investigation was in order because there was specific legislation contained; that the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, collect and publish useful information as propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds and other authorizations, directing the Department of Agriculture to make such investigation. Now, as to the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi that this bill, on page 160, carries a general appropriation for the Department of Labor, that appropriation, as the gentleman from Mississippi ought to have known, is only for printing and binding, and is made under the subhead, "For printing and binding," and he ought to have known that if he did not. [Cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to insert a new section, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to advance the opportunities for profitable employment of the wage earners of the United States there is hereby appropriated out of available moneys in the Treasury $10,023,000—

And so forth.

To that amendment the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] make the point of order. Arguing the point of order, the gentleman from Massachusetts and other gentlemen who have discussed it cited certain language in the organic act which create the Department of Labor. That language is:

The duties of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

That language is relied upon, as the Chair understands, to make this amendment in order. The House has always been extremely careful in conferring the legislative power upon committees; at least it has been so for 50 years. It has withheld from the Committee on Appropriations any power of legislation, and, naturally, having withheld that power, it has provided that no amendment to an appropriation bill if it carried legislation should be in order if offered on the floor of the House. This is very peculiar language as contained in this organic act. If the Committee on Appropriations could have rightfully brought in a proposition such as contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and, of course, if it could not have, why an amendment from the floor of the House would be subject to the point of order. The Chair is unable to see where the limit on the Committee on Appropriations would end. If this—well, something like the whereas of a resolution—should be held to authorize appropriations by the Committee on Appropriations, why there is absolutely no limitation that you could put upon your Committee on Appropriations.

And, of course, if the Appropriations Committee could bring in a proposition any amendment from the floor would be in order. The Chair thinks this amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts makes new legislation, not authorized by any existing law, and that therefore it is obnoxious to the rule of the House. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee? The gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DONOVAN). The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEATING. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 58.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the decision of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LONDON. As a section for the purpose of continuing the present system of unemployment exchanges, the sum of $10,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 152, after line 20, insert, as a new section, the following:

"For the purpose of continuing the present system of unemployment exchanges, $10,000,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules on the point of order I desire to draw the following distinction between the previous motion and this amendment. The principal objection which was raised to the amendment previously offered was that it repeated the language of the organic law, which was too indefinite. The objection to the amendment was that it was as vague as the organic law itself. In this case I provide for the continuance of a function undertaken by the Department of Labor and which comes fairly within the general purpose for which the department was created.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman cite the Chair to that statute?

Mr. LONDON. Yes. The statute reads that it is one of the functions of the Department of Labor to increase opportunities of profitable employment, to increase the opportunities of the wageworker for profitable employment. Now, if the Chair will bear with me for a moment, the Labor Department was created for the purpose of promoting the general welfare of labor, and among the functions of the Department of Labor one is to increase the opportunities for profitable employment. Now, it was with the object of increasing the opportunities for profitable employment, of minimizing unemployment, of minimizing involuntary idleness, that a national system of unemployment exchanges was created, so as to bring the man and the job together. I am not arguing the merits of my amendment, but it is necessary to understand the object of maintaining a system of unemployment exchanges in order to realize that the function which the department is now exercising is squarely within the purpose for which it was created.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, does not that go back to the very proposition upon which the Chair ruled; that is, is not the gentleman predicating his amendment and his argument upon that general language which the Chair has just held was not sufficient to authorize an appropriation?

Mr. LONDON. No. I am predicating it on two facts. I can realize——

The CHAIRMAN. I mean the law. I do not mean the facts.

Mr. LONDON. The law. I realize that an amendment calling for an appropriation of $500,000,000 to the Secretary of War to carry out the purposes for which the War Department was created would be out of order.

But my amendment is confined to one specific duty, to one particular item, to a limited function, and that function is not the creation of something new, but the continuance of an existing system of unemployment exchanges, now maintained by the Department of Labor, and for which an appropriation has been carried in an appropriation bill during the war and for which an appropriation is carried in the deficiency appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair say this to the gentleman, although it is not the custom of the Chair ordinarily to say that: The Chair can not reflect, or ought not to reflect, his legislative views in his parliamentary decisions. The present occupant of the Chair has never, so far as he is conscious of it, reflected a legislative view in a parliamentary decision. The Chair is not passing now upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the proposition, but the Chair is only passing on the parliamentary situation. We must preserve the integrity of the rules of the House. Otherwise we would be in constant chaos.

Now, that upon which the Chair wishes to hear the gentleman is how his amendment can be justified under the law.

Mr. LONDON. Exactly. That is what I was addressing myself to.

The CHAIRMAN. Whether the gentleman's amendment and his argument do not go back to the exact proposition upon which the Chair just ruled.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, no. The Chair previously ruled that the appropriation, couched in the language of the organic law, which is vague and indefinite and which permits the branching out into hundreds of activities, is too general to be admitted under an appropriation act. But in this case I again call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I am narrowing down the appropriation to one distinct item.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the statute which authorizes the United States Employment Service?

Mr. LONDON. It does by authorizing and directing the Secretary of Labor to devise means to increase the opportunities of profitable employment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the very language that was quoted in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. LONDON. I know; but what the Chair objected to before was the use of the very expression of the statute, "to increase the opportunities for profitable employment."

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that that would present a stronger case than the indefinite language. Is there a statute anywhere that authorizes unemployment exchanges?

Mr. LONDON. There is no statute which in so many words authorizes unemployment exchanges, but there is this legal situation before you: The department is created for the purpose of increasing the opportunities for profitable employment. In the course of the life of the Department of Labor it has been found that in order to increase the opportunities for profitable employment it has become necessary to create a clearing house, a network of unemployment exchanges, so as to enable the jobless man to find his job and to bring the man and the job together. That function is now being exercised by the Department of Labor, and the Chair must take judicial notice of the fact that the Department of Labor is now exercising that function.

And furthermore, the presumption exists that no department of the Government is violating the law. The Secretary of Labor is now, under the law under which his department was created, maintaining a system of unemployment exchanges.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the department is not violating the law, but the authority under which the department is operating in the employment exchange was carried in an appropriation bill at some time; I mean the money with which it is operating——

Mr. LONDON. Not in so many words——

The CHAIRMAN. Which possibly would have been subject to a point of order if it had been made at the time. The decision of the Chair does not indicate that the department has been violating the law in any way.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that that was not the object of the decision.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York concluded?

Mr. LONDON. Yes. Of course, I know that there is no law which in so many words authorizes the establishment of unemployment exchanges for the next fiscal year.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has asked for a citation of the law that would justify the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. I have listened with a great deal of care to the arguments both for and against this amendment, and I particularly call the attention of the Chair to the wording of this statute, as applied to the amendment just offered. If the Chair has before him volume 37 of the public laws, part 1, page 736, chapter 141, the next to the last sentence in the paragraph reads—

> The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be—
> Then there are several other words of general character—
> to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

Now, that is not a general, glittering power. It is a duty, and it is specific. It is a duty that is imposed by law, and if this Congress passes a law of that kind, it is the duty of this Congress, if it expects the department to carry out the will of the Congress of the United States, to appropriate the necessary moneys to enable it to be carried out. And if it is our duty to appropriate under the existing law, then it is not new legislation, and it is not expanding the authority of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not robbing any committee of its legislative function, but it is the plain intendment of the statute that here and now, at this time, the Congress of the United States in its general appropriation should supply the Department of Labor with money enough to do that which this statute says they shall do, and it seems to me very plain.

Now, no decision that has been quoted here has been differentiated or explained. Every precedent that has been cited applies to this case, and no precedent has been cited against it, and no one of the precedents cited has been differentiated; and with all due respect, I do not think the Chair was right in the other decision, and certainly is not justified in ruling this amendment out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the other ruling was concerned, that is res judicata, for it has been sustained by the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL. The committee has sustained it, and I meant no reflection whatever on the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Would Congress have authority to appropriate a thousand million dollars and authorize the Secretary of Labor to go out and hire everybody who was out of a job and put him to work?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. GORDON. Why not? That is furnishing more direct employment than your agency would.

Mr. CALDWELL. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio would go outside of the fundamental law. Here a duty is imposed upon the Department of Labor, and it being a duty, it is necessary for us to appropriate the money necessary to enable it to perform that duty, and is therefore naturally a matter for the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason the Chair did not refer to the precedents that were cited in the argument made upon the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was that the Chair did not think there was one of those precedents that was on all fours at all with this proposition. The Chair thought that, in so far as the precedents cited were concerned, the amendment presented a de novo proposition. That is why the Chair did not refer to the decisions that were suggested as possible precedents. Now, coming to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], it reads as follows:

> "For the purpose of continuing the present system of employment exchanges, $10,000,000."

All that has been cited is the very language that was cited in the argument upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. No statute has been directed to the attention of the Chair other than the general language upon which the Chair undertook to pass. The Chair thinks it stands exactly as the other amendment stood, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. DECKER: Page 152, after line 20, insert as a new section:
> "For expenses of Department of Labor, made necessary by the act of March 4, 1913, entitled 'An act to create a Department of Labor,' $10,000,000."

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I should like to have the gentleman give some reason for the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Because it is legislation and not germane.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this clearly falls within the same lines we have been discussing, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman, although the Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has repeatedly asked for some act to base the appropriation on. I wish the Chair for a moment to consider the fact that I base this amendment on the original act.

Now, it may be that Members of this House, or it may be that the Chairman, do not think that $10,000,000 is necessary to carry out the expenses of the bureau created by the original act. But that does not make it out of order. That, I submit, is a question for the good judgment and conscience of Members who sit in this body. I can not see on what ground, by whatever stretch of the imagination, or by what discrimination of logic——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. Has not the Chair sustained the point of order?

Mr. DECKER. He has, but he is listening to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. A very patient man. [Laughter.]

Mr. DECKER. He is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I submit that the gentleman is attempting to argue the merits of the amendment and not addressing himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Missouri is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I think I know the difference between the merits and the point of order, and, knowing that he is a learned judge, I would not presume to place myself in the class of a jurist, like the distinguished gentleman from Texas, but I do submit, and I claim the clemency of the Chairman, who knows my frailties and limitations better than the gentleman from Texas, to speak on the proposition which looks to me simple. If it is not simple it is not my fault. That is this, that once upon a time the Congress of the United States created a Bureau of Labor. The Congress of the United States provided for certain officers and expenditures of that Bureau of Labor, and to-night, as a Member of this body, I offer an amendment which says that for the expenses of carrying on that Bureau of Labor we shall appropriate, instead of what has already been appropriated, the large sum of $10,000,000; and if the distinguished Chairman will allow that to be in order, as I think it is in order, I would like to discuss with the distinguished jurist from Texas the merits of the question. But, so far as it being in order, it may be a fool amendment, it may be unwise, it may be radical, but that is for me and gentlemen who represent their constituencies to take upon their consciences and exercise their judgment. [Applause.]

I know something about the rules of logic. I am not a parliamentarian, but if the expenditures of the Bureau of Labor are now $1,000,000, I claim the right to make it $10,000,000, according to the original act, and then the gentlemen can stand in their places and vote aye or no, whether they want to spend that much money for the sake of the toilers of this land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DECKER. I did not hear the ruling, and I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. BRAND took the chair.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DECKER) there were 106 ayes and 33 noes.

So the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee resumed the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

The paragraph of the deficiency appropriation act approved July 8, 1918, which increased the compensation of certain employees of the Government Printing Office during the period of the war and for six months after the proclamation of peace, shall continue in effect until June 30, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. What increase did this provide on July 8, 1918?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Fifty to sixty cents an hour in certain cases and sixty to sixty-five in other cases.

Mr. WALSH. The schedule of increases based on compensation received at the time?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For linotype operators, printers, proof readers, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it desired to extend this time until June 30, 1920?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For the reason that if it is not done then there will be a considerable reduction in the pay of the employees at that time, when all other employees of the Government are receiving an increase. In justice to them it does not look fair at this time, when the compensation of all other employees is being increased, not to give to these men an increase that it granted them during the war until the end of the fiscal year. It does not carry beyond the fiscal year.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I have not the figures here, but my recollection is that if you eliminate this paragraph the members of the typographical union in the Government Printing Office would be receiving considerably less than the members of the other printing offices around town.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that will be so after June 30, 1920. Is it intended that before June 30, 1920, not only these Government employees but the others shall secure legislation making these increases permanent?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. So far as the committee is concerned of course we have no such intention at this time and make no declaration as to what will then take place. We hope that by action of Congress there will be some classification of salaries by that time that will be fair to all, but it did seem to us that it would be unfair at this time to cause a reduction in the salaries of these particular employees of the Government when all the others are being increased.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the $240 bonus which has been provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill runs until June 30, 1920.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The increase that is granted to the Government Printing Office employees was not fixed upon that basis at all. It was an increase upon a schedule from 50 cents to 60 per hour, according to the class of work done, and when that increase was originally granted it was to continue until the termination of the war and for six months thereafter, and by that language they were given at the time it was granted apparently a longer period in which they would enjoy that increase than those who were given the $120 bonus last year; but that seems to me no reason why we should provide now that they should go to June 30, 1920.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The bonus of $240 will apply to all employees until June 30, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. And not to these employees?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And these employees would be receiving a decrease in their salaries without the application of the bonus.

Mr. WALSH. Do these employees get the $240 bonus?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They do.

Mr. WALSH. And this additional compensation besides?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The bonus means about 33 cents a day. The committee took the trouble to figure it out in order to ascertain the justice of this claim. The increase that was given by Congress to these men amounted in their case to at least 40 cents a day. It means that if they get the $240 they are decreased 7 or 8 cents anyway in a day.

Mr. WALSH. I do not quite understand the gentleman's mathematics. They get a $240 bonus?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And by this provision they get a further increase?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The same compensation they have been receiving; and since last year they get the $120.

Mr. WALSH. And beginning July 1 they will get $240?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And then they will get, further, 40 cents a day?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. If they are not permitted to continue to receive it, it means that their compensation will be reduced at least 7 cents a day, and in some cases it goes up to 20 cents or 25 cents a day; and I can say to the gentleman that the committee figured it out most carefully, and they are of opinion that we should not reduce the wages of these people.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for the law-drafting ability of gentlemen who attend to the doing of such things in the city of Washington, but would it not be possible to give a man 40 cents or 50 cents a day more than he was getting without putting the increase into bills in a manner so that it takes two of the greatest experts on the floor of the House to understand what you are doing, leaving the other 400 men not understanding it at all?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. JUUL. It seems to me that if you want to give a man a dollar more a day, it could be put into a bill so that even a man from out in my country could understand it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYNES of South Carolina. I agree with the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the War Department, $1,000,000: Provided, That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the publication, from time to time, of bulletins prepared under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Army, for the instruction of medical officers, when approved by the Secretary of War, and not exceeding $50,000 shall be available for printing and binding under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What bulletins are to be printed from this appropriation of $1,000,000 for the War Department for the instruction of the medical officers?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The $3,000 item?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The exact information that is to be contained in the bulletins I do not know. The statement was that they want to issue some bulletins for the instruction of the surgeons in the Army. I suppose from time to time that is done. It seems to me it ought to be done. It seems to me they ought to be able to secure the benefit of the information that the Surgeon General can secure.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose this information will be taken from textbooks or medical works of some character?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; it may be the result of research, and that is what I imagine is the purpose, that the result of the research will be communicated to surgeons of the Army so they may be able to keep up with the progress in medicine.

Mr. WALSH. Does either of the gentlemen know whether this covers the publication of the bulletin issued by the War Department in connection with the rehabilitation work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I do not. That was not for the instruction of medical officers, and I am satisfied it is not included in it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Agriculture, including not to exceed $47,000 for the Weather Bureau, and including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the joint resolution No. 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $200,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, $600,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to inquire why this increase of a half in the appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. They had in 1918, $650,000; in 1919, $600,000, and this is the same amount.

Mr. WALSH. I discovered I was in error and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Labor, $150,000.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to ask the chairman of the committee, in line 13, for the Department of Labor, $150,000. What is that for?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is for printing and binding for the department.

Mr. JUUL. Now, may I be permitted to ask another question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. JUUL. Could that item here carry $10,000,000 or carry any other thing without being subject to the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would be in order to increase the amount in any sum, but if it were increased it could only be spent for printing and binding.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman's idea is that this body does not possess power under existing law to increase to any sum the money of any item that is in here and then utilize the money for employment?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. It has to be utilized for the purpose for which it is appropriated, and in order to be carried for that purpose it must be authorized by existing statute law. Now, I am glad the gentleman asked the question that I may say this: The other matter is over, and I do not care to revive it——

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman understands I am not speaking in criticism.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand.

Mr. JUUL. I am trying to see if this body possesses the power while handling this bill to meet an emergency that to me seems to have arisen. Do we possess the power in any way to-night to add to any item the sum necessary to maintain these employment bureaus?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not think there is any place in the bill where you could increase amounts for the purpose of carrying on the employment bureau for next year. The gentlemen will recall I carried in the bill which passed the House to-day an appropriation of $1,800,000 for the express purpose of carrying on the employment bureau until July 1, and I did that in connection with the deficiency bill because we had made an appropriation for the fiscal year that ends in July, which turned out to be insufficient, and I felt under present conditions we ought to carry a sum sufficient to carry that department until the 1st of July, and personally, speaking just for myself, I also believe that there is a certain amount of activity that ought to be carried on after that date in connection with the demobilization and with the present condition in the labor market, but I think that ought to be done through a provision that would indicate some direct purpose rather than in the loose way that would have resulted if we had undertaken without authority to put it on this bill, and I spoke to the point of order not because of the merit of the proposal, with which I had a great deal of sympathy, but because it is the duty of the chairman of the committee to protect the bill and because the effects of these rulings upon legislation in the future are very widespread and far-reaching.

Mr. JUUL. Then the gentleman's verdict is we are absolutely helpless to remedy this condition?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, not to remedy it permanently, but to do it by an amendment on this bill at this time. There is no reason why Congress should not deal with the situation long before the 1st of July.

Mr. JUUL. This would be the only opportunity between now and March 4?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know. You can suspend the rules in a day or two.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17. An act to include certain lands in the counties of Modoc and Siskiyou, Cal., in the Modoc National Forest, Cal., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 357. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15706. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 5559. An act to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2012. An act for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford;

H. R. 5989. An act to grant certain lands to the town of Olathe, Colo., for the protection of its water supply;

H. R. 7362. An act to authorize construction of a lock and dam in Old River, in the State of Texas, and the making of improvements enabling the passage of fresh water from a portion of Trinity River above the mouth of Old River into Old River above such lock and dam, and for the protection of rice crops against salt water;

H. R. 10394. An act to add certain lands to the Minam National Forest, Oreg.;

H. R. 11219. An act providing for the appraisal and sale of the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11368. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain-described tract of land;

H. R. 12082. An act authorizing the sale of certain lands in South Dakota for cemetery purposes;

H. R. 12579. An act to grant to citizens of Malheur County, Oreg., the right to cut timber in the State of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Malheur County, Oreg.;

H. R. 12860. An act granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female), Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States;

H. R. 13042. An act providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act;

H. R. 13056. An act to grant to citizens of Modoc County, Cal., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Cal.;

H. R. 13482. An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15495. An act to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads; and

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5553. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Supreme Court of the United States, $15,000; and the printing for the Supreme Court shall be done by the printer it may employ, unless it shall otherwise order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That is peculiar language, and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he thinks the words "unless it shall otherwise order" are necessary?

Mr. SHERLEY. The purpose of that, I think, is to enable the Supreme Court, if in its judgment it thinks it necessary, to have certain printing done other than in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As it reads it would appear as if the Supreme Court might have the printing done where it pleases unless it reverses itself. The expression is an odd one—"unless it shall otherwise order."

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that language is a little peculiar. It has been there a number of years. I do not know its ancestry or history, but the purpose of it is to give to the Supreme Court liberty to do its printing where it desires.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman say that language has been used heretofore?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am quite sure it has. I think it was put there before my time in the Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should hesitate very much to have the Congress reflect upon the Supreme Court in this way and to indicate it might do this thing unless it thought it wise to do otherwise.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the Supreme Court has power, of course——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman is satisfied with the language, I will not move to strike it out. I thought perhaps those words "unless it should otherwise order" were not necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have followed the routine of previous bills.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the court has the power to have the printing "done by the printer it may employ," why add "unless it shall otherwise order"?

Mr. SHERLEY. I suppose somebody put that in in order that by the employment of one printer it might not be compelled during the fiscal year to use only that printer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, if the gentleman is satisfied I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Library of Congress, including the copyright office and the publication of the Catalogue of Title Entries of the copyright office, and binding, rebinding, and repairing of library books, and for building and grounds, $200,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

The Library of Congress has been for some years publishing some documents giving the result of researches in historical subjects, which documents are, in my opinion, of unusual and extraordinary value. Their publication was nearly all discontinued about two years ago. Upon inquiry I found it was because of lack of funds. I assume that the only provision in the bill which might furnish funds for these publications is in this paragraph. If I am incorrect, I would like to be corrected.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman this amount is all they asked, and when you vote for it you give them all they ask. They asked for $200,000, and this bill carries $200,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That certainly is as generous as the committee could expect to be. But may I inquire further, then, if the committee has in its estimates from the Library of Congress the completion of the publication of some of these items? I refer to one in particular, although there are several, which is the publication of the Records of the Continental Congress. It has all been completed but two volumes. It is of distinct value throughout the country. They have the material; the manuscript is waiting and accumulating dust. May I ask the gentleman if the estimates included these items?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I must say we have no information as to the status of the particular documents that they have, but I am satisfied if they did not ask for more than $200,000 they must have based that largely on the work they have on hand and with a view of completing the publications to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman this question, then? The language indicates to me that this appropriation covers two subjects, if I may use that language.

First, the binding and rebinding of general books that are on the shelves of the Library of Congress; also the binding of such publications as I have just referred to. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It covers all their binding. It is the only fund that they have, and any binding that they have is covered by this fund.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does that compare favorably with the amount appropriated two years ago?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is the exact sum that they have had for five years.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Interstate Commerce Commission, $130,000, of which sum not exceeding $10,000 shall be available to print and furnish to the States at cost report-form blanks.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Chairman Daniels, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, inclosing a letter received by him from Commissioner Prouty, director of the division of values, on the subject of the use of cars in connection with parties engaged in valuation work. There was some comment made on this subject matter when that item was before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the correspondence referred to:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 27, 1919.

Hon. JOHN J. ESCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In view of the fact that the question has recently come before the House as to the character of equipment used by valuation parties of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I requested from the director of valuation a memorandum relating to the character of this equipment.

A copy of the director's reply is submitted herewith.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. DANIELS, Chairman.

FEBRUARY 26, 1919.

Hon. WINTHROP M. DANIELS,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You ask me to state the character of equipment which is used for the housing of our road and track parties engaged in valuation work.

Very early in this work it became apparent for reasons which need not be stated here that, except in the most densely populated parts of the country, it would be necessary to subsist our parties in cars which would contain the instruments and records necessary for field work, and would house and feed our men. The first of these cars were provided by taking two freight cars for each party and fitting up the interiors with bunks, a computing room, and a kitchen.

While these outfit cars have never been altogether satisfactory, they have been continued in use during the whole period of our work, and are still in service, with the exception of two or three cars in the southern district, which have been turned back to the railroads when the party using them was disbanded.

After trial of this plan, it was suggested that a better and more economical arrangement might be worked out by using Pullman tourist cars which had been discarded as worn out by that company. A contract was finally entered into with the Pullman Co. to refit a certain number of these cars, strengthening them so as to be available for service in passenger trains, providing a kitchen with cooking apparatus in one end and a computing room in the other, etc., etc. The cars were thoroughly overhauled in every respect and freshly painted. The price paid by the Government was approximately $3,000 per car.

These cars have proved fairly satisfactory. As our parties are gradually being disbanded they are offered for sale. Five of them have already been advertised and bids recently opened. The highest bid received is $1,000 per car.

Respectfully,

(Signed) C. A. PROUTY, Director.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Money appropriated under the foregoing allotments shall not be expended for printing or binding for any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, except such as shall be certified in writing to the Public Printer by the respective heads or chiefs thereof to be necessary to conduct the ordinary and routine business required by law of such executive departments or Government establishments, and except such reports, monographs, bulletins, or other publications as are authorized by law or specifically provided for in appropriations herein; all other printing required or deemed necessary or desirable by heads of executive departments or other Government establishments or offices or bureaus thereof shall be done only as Congress shall from time to time authorize.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. If I understand correctly the purpose of this paragraph, it is that none of the departments that receive money from any appropriations made in this bill can have printed at the Government Printing Office any publication, bulletin, monograph, or report, except such as may be authorized by law or specifically provided for herein, or except as shall be certified in writing to the Public Printer by the respective heads or chiefs of the bureaus and departments as necessary in order to conduct the routine business of these departments. Can the gentleman having this measure in charge state how many of these certificates the Government Printer has one file, certifying to the necessity of these many, many publications, magazines, bulletins, monographs, autographs, and photographs that have been published at the Government expense during the past two years?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no information from the Government Printing Office that they have thousands, or even hundreds, of certificates. I know that the Printing Office does require orders from the departments for every bit of printing that it does; every requisition. I do not think it is abused at all. I have no information that it is.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that the right of publication of these various documents by the different departments has not been abused?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I mean under this fund. If the gentleman means that the departments may have been refused their right to publish bulletins, or if he reflects on the character of the bulletins they have issued, I will not take issue with him. But I mean that they have not committed any abuse under this paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I know that the gentleman is a very busy and competent member of this most important committee, and that he has to give a great deal of time to the preparation of the legislation which it reports. But it would seem to me that there are several departments which receive their most important and essential appropriations under the provisions of this act that are having printed bulletins and other publications which, if they are certified in writing to be necessary to conduct the ordinary and routine business required by law of such executive departments, we either should amend this law or we should require the chief or his assistant, who signs the certificate, to read the document before he signs it, because there are a great many of these publications that have been issued that certainly are not necessary to conduct the routine business of the department, and I think they are a hindrance, because they require additional help to send them out and prepare them and issue them. Some of them are sent out in expensive wrappers and scattered hither and yon at a great expense to the Government for transportation by mail. I had hoped that the gentleman might have given some information on this subject.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would state to the gentleman that in the legislative bill there is a provision giving the Joint Committee on Printing authority and direction to investigate allotments in order that some of the work that the gentleman refers to and complains about may be eliminated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. CANNON. I want to make an observation, hoping that the time will come before a great while when there will be a severe censorship as to Government documents. There are services paid for from the Public Treasury, propaganda touching almost every conceivable subject, in the name of education, in the name of information, that, in my judgment, are very improper, but you can not undertake to regulate it to-night.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. CANNON. Yes——

Mr. STAFFORD. The very practice which the gentleman seeks to criticize has been prohibited in an amendment that was offered in the Senate and was adopted by the conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am very glad to hear it. Speed the day when it will go into effect!

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and fixtures, typewriters, carpets, labor-saving machines and accessories, time stamps, adding and numbering machines, awnings, curtains, books of reference, directories, books, miscellaneous office and desk supplies; paper; twine, glue, envelopes, postage, car fares, soap, towels, disinfectants, and ice; drayage, express freight, telephone and telegraph service; repairs to building, elevators, and machinery; preserving sanitary condition of building, light, heat, and power; stationery and office printing, including blanks, price lists, and bibliographies, $39,000; for catalogues and indexes, not exceeding $16,000; for binding reserve remainders and for supplying books to depository libraries, $80,000; equipment, material, and supplies for distribution of public documents, $20,000; in all, $150,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 12, page 163, by striking out "$150,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$155,000." It does not change other items, but simply corrects a total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 163, line 12, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$155,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has read so rapidly that we passed the Panama Canal item before I knew it. I want to make a very brief statement in regard to that enterprise. A few years ago we used to discuss the Panama Canal a very great deal; but the great war and the things connected with it have taken our minds away from that great engineering work of ours. We hear and speak very little of it.

It is interesting to know that even with the conditions of war that have existed, the tolls during the last fiscal year have been larger than ever in the history of the canal. They amounted to $6,439,083.99. The appropriations for the fiscal year were $10,650,000; but the Panama Canal Commission separated the items, and they have estimated that those items properly chargeable to cost of operation amounted to $5,903,719.69, giving us a net balance of revenues over actual cost of operation of about $500,000.

The commission called the attention of the committee to the fact that had the original rules of measurement been in operation the revenue the last year would have been largely increased. Instead of being the sum that I have mentioned, it would have been $7,522,195.68, an increase of $1,083,069. By reason of the change in rules of measurement we have lost $2,797,260.26. There is a bill before the House proposing to restore the old rule of measurement. That bill should become a law. These great losses in canal revenues are in the main going to the benefit of foreign shippers. A very few American shippers, shortsighted in their view of things, in my opinion, believing they were somewhat affected by this matter of measurement, have opposed the change to the original system.

They have been beneficiaries to a very limited degree of the new system. The foreigner has been the beneficiary in a very great degree, particularly those ships carrying the British flag. We have practically given to British shipping since the change in the rules of measurement two and three-quarter million dollars that should be in the Treasury of the United States. We ought to remedy that mistake in the very near future.

With regard to the future of the canal, Col. Harding, in his statement before the committee—and this will seem rather startling to gentlemen after the statement that we have collected half a million dollars more in tolls in the past year than the actual cost of operation—estimated that instead of collecting $6,000,000, as we have the last year, if the time comes when we shall collect $23,000,000 from the canal it will begin to pay. The period when the tolls will increase from their present sum to $23,000,000 is probably some distance off.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. We can hasten the day by restoring a fair, reasonable rule of measurement under which carriers shall pay for the cargoes they carry through. With the coming of peace there will, of course, be a very greatly increased traffic through the canal.

Fortunately the difficulties with regard to slides are all over. The canal is operating smoothly; everything is moving as it should; it is a good going concern, and if business gets better, as it should, we may some day in the future begin to get a revenue from that great enterprise.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee so late to-night, when I know that it wishes to finish the bill, in discussing the Panama Canal question. But when the bill referred to by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] shall be reported to the House favorably and comes before the House for action I will discuss it and tell why it was reported and why they want it passed. That bill is not in the interest of American shipping; it is entirely aimed at the coastwise trade between the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast and the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast. That is a statement on my part which I can prove, but which I do not wish to take up the time of the House to-night to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the President is authorized to transfer to the custody and care of such of the departments or independent establishments as he may determine the files and records of the agencies created for the period of the war upon the discontinuance of such activities.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this section is section 4, the one before it is section 3, and the one before that is section 2, but there is no section 1.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All of the bill preceding is section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the following portions of the unexpended balances of appropriations for the fiscal year 1919 for the support of the various services, as set forth in this section, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act, namely:

Capital Issues Committee, $265,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, this section strikes me as being one of the most important in the bill. Is it understood that upon the adoption of section 5 the Capital Issues Committee will go out of business?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is practically out of business now, only one member of the committee there, and this will leave $200 or so to wind up the business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The section winds up by saying: "The following portions of the unexpended balances of appropriations for the fiscal year 1919 for support of the various services, as set forth in this section, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act." And then it names the Capital Issues Committee, $265,000. My question is, Does that take back into the Treasury all the money that is left available to the Capital Issues Committee?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All except $100 or some small amount to pay outstanding obligations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It means that the Capital Issues Committee goes out of business completely on the passage of this act?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Committee on Public Information, $200,000 of the appropriation of $1,250,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That means that Mr. Creel's Bureau of Information goes out of business?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Except that we leave to them a little larger amount, because they have outstanding obligations which exist, and that they may dispose of some bills. But we specifically provide that this bureau and the Bulletin shall go out of business on April 1, so that there shall be no mistake about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does $1,250,000 remain in the bureau after the passage of this bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no; only two or three thousand dollars—I have forgotten the amount—but the bureau will wind up business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill reads $200,000 of the appropriation of $1,250,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That means that the original appropriation was $1,250,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they have used up all but $200,000, and the bill provides that the maintenance of the service bureau in the District of Columbia and the publication of the Official Bulletin shall be discontinued from and after April 1, 1919, and thus we get rid of the Official Bulletin and the service bureau?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Creel and all his associates on the passage of the act go out of business after April 1, 1919?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. Mr. Creel has a fund out of the President's fund, but I have no information as to what constitutes that fund. So far as the money we have appropriated, we take it away.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the service is continued here or in Mexico, where they issue a bulletin, or in France, where Mr. Creel now is, apparently, it will be continued out of the President's fund?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will, because he has no other fund here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Congress stops all appropriations for Mr. Creel and his bureau?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the purpose of this section.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Council of National Defense, $75,000. Does that wind up the Council of National Defense?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; it does not. In my opening remarks I called attention to that in presenting the bill. The Council of National Defense was created prior to our entering the war. Its purpose was to collect statistics which might be used in case of war. The Council of National Defense asked the Congress to appropriate $300,000 for the next year, as they wished to engage in several activities. They have a highway department to advise as to the value of good roads and several other things, and the committee, instead, has left them with a small amount. We made an appropriation in this bill of $50,000 for the next fiscal year, which is ample, we think, for them to carry out the purpose and perform the duties described in the organic act creating them, which was to collect statistics as to the manufactures of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This $75,000 was a part of an appropriation made direct by Congress to the Council of National Defense?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they have other funds remaining with which to go on with these new activities? I am asking these questions to learn how soon we are going to get rid of these war boards.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We will get rid of every war bureau with the exception of the Council of National Defense, and that, after you have taken this $75,000, will have left a small balance which will enable them to continue a very much reduced organization to July 1, and after July 1 they will have an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The policy of the committee, however, is to cut down from this time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the purpose of this; and every other war bureau, by reason of this section, will have to wind up its affairs on July 1.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Federal Trade Commission, $300,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, that is not classed with the war bureaus at all. The Federal Trade Commission voluntarily stated to the committee that they were able to save out of a lump sum that was given to them $300,000. It was based on the continuance of the war, and with the discontinuance of the war and the discontinuance of their activities in arriving at the cost prices for the Army and Navy, they were able to turn back into the Treasury this amount of $300,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That, of course, is a continuing body.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is provided for by law. Food Administration, $3,500,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is covered back to the Treasury, and the Food Administration will discontinue its activities on July 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more to continue these inquiries. This is a very important matter, and I think the committee is to be commended for this report, and the House and the country ought to be gratified to know that these agencies are going out of business and we are saving some money.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman the status of these agencies. When we take back from the Food Administration the sum of $3,500,000 we will leave them with a small amount, sufficient to wind up their affairs. They will have some auditors left, who will audit the accounts that will come in between now and July 1, and they will have a few file clerks, who are engaged in filing the records of the administration, but they will go out of business completely on July 1.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will become of the headquarters, the buildings and the furniture, and things of that kind that have been used by the Food Administration?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All of the furniture is turned over to the general supply commission, and the building will be turned over to the Superintendent of Capitol Buildings and Grounds under the provision of the legislative bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The passage of this bill and the recovery of $3,500,000 will practically wipe out the Food Administration?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if the gentleman will tell us about the War Industries Board, $1,925,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The withdrawal of this sum means that they will cease their activities and, as in the case of the other bureaus, they are left with a small sum sufficient to take care of their outstanding obligations up to July 1.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that particular branch to continue its war activities?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If they are they will have no funds under this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the House, but the fact that we are about to get rid of these various appendages of the Government due to the war is a matter of congratulation, I think, to the country. The Capital Issues Committee served a useful purpose. It was of doubtful origin, but it has served its purpose and is going out of business, refunding $265,000. The Committee on Public Information, headed by Mr. Creel, has run its course and is about to wind up its affairs, for which I trust the country will be grateful. The Council of National Defense has been useful and has brought fame to many a dollar a year man, some of them having large personal knowledge of matters of Government and some of them serving with a real patriotic purpose. It is about to go out of business, except as indicated by the chairman of the committee. The Federal Trade Commission, of course, continues.

The Food Administration, headed by Mr. Hoover, turns back $3,500,000 and is about to quit, for which I think the Nation should be thankful. The Fuel Administration is in the same boat; it will turn back about $775,000, and I think we can all feel we are well rid of these bodies. The War Industries Board will turn back $1,925,000; but, according to the chairman of the committee, certain reservations have been made and certain activities of that board are to be continued. I am pleased to note that the War Trade Board is going out of business, and that it will refund $250,000. The utility of the War Trade Board has been very dubious indeed. It has been an organization intended to aid American commerce and protect it during the progress of the war; but complaints with regard to the War Tarde Board have been such that its passing should not be without comment. Our American merchants endeavoring to trade on the other side have been prevented from doing business because of the activity or the inactivity of the War Trade Board, and apparently it has been as much in the interests of other countries as it has been in the interest of the United States. Here is a communication from a large American concern—the Metal Export Co. of America—indicating that because of the relation between the War Trade Board of the United States and certain foreign agencies it has been practically impossible for the American merchant to do business abroad. We may sell at the American price, but the world price is cheaper than the American price. By manipulation, by licensing, by operation of foreign embargoes, the American dealer has been put to very great disadvantage. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert this letter as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing the letter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

METAL EXPORT CO. OF AMERICA,
New York City, February 24, 1919.

HONORABLE SIR: We will show in a brief and incontrovertible way how the good offices of the present administration are being unconsciously and unwittingly employed to assail and destroy the industries of this country.

2. The following are the facts and the remedy:

3. On May 8, 1918, the Trondhjem Blikemballagefabrik (tinplate box manufacturers), of Trondhjem, Norway, members of and secretary to the Trondhjem Import Canners' Union, contracted with us to furnish them 3,000 double boxes of tin plates f. o. b. New York.

4. The Norske Handelsbank of Trondhjem on the same day gave us a bank guaranty, available for one year, guaranteeing the payment on presentation of bills of lading in Trondhjem.

5. We complied with all existing Norwegian, British, and American regulations and duly received from the buyer the import number, 149, issued by the Trondhjem Import Canners' Union, of which the buyer is secretary.

6. We gave the Norwegian Legation in Washington proof of the issuance of the guaranty number by the Trondhjem Import Canners' Union, and they, in the conventional manner, supported our license with the War Trade Board.

7. On July 26, 1918, the Norwegian Legation in Washington wrote us as follows:

"METAL EXPORT CO. OF AMERICA,
"59 Pearl Street, New York City.

"DEAR SIRS: Re tin plates. We are in receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, and in reply regret to say that in accordance with information given us by the War Trade Board there is no more possibility of obtaining export license for the above commodity from America. We understand that an arrangement has been reached at according to which England is to supply all the quantity of tin plate as required by Norway. Inclosed we return the letter from the Trondhjem Canners' Import Union.

"Yours, very truly,
"LEGATION OF NORWAY,
"Commercial Department."

This arrangement was subsequently rescinded, and we received the export licenses to which we were entitled. In the interval, however, it clearly follows that prospective Norwegian buyers were not covering their requirements in America.

8. On December 22, 1918, we received a cable from our agents stating, "Trondhjem Blikemballage want to cancel, which we refused."

9. On February 13 the Norwegian Legation called up the Norwegian-American Line twice on the long-distance telephone and told them under no circumstances to accept these goods, and subsequently told them to keep very confidential the source of their information. On the same day the Norwegian-American Line in New York confirmed the conversation in writing and stated:

"We have received confidential request from the Norwegian Legation to withhold the forwarding on the ground that the export license is not yet formally in order. Therefore, without disclosing the source of your information, it might be well to have your Washington representative call on said legation and ask them what they know about the license in question, and that we are holding up your shipment."

10. We immediately reported the facts to the Foreign Trade Adviser, State Department, also to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

11. On February 13, 1919, the Norwegian Legation in Washington wrote us as follows:

"DEAR SIRS: Referring to your shipment of 3,000 cases to Trondhjem Blikemballagefabrik, for which we understand you have obtained an export license from the War Trade Board, we beg to inform you of having received a cable from the ministry of foreign affairs stating that the import certificate covering this shipment is canceled. Under these circumstances we should advise you, in case the goods having not as yet been shipped, to withhold shipment until further and a new import permit has been granted or the old one renewed, as otherwise you may risk a refusal of the import on arrival to Norway."

This veiled threat is not supported by the contract, which provides for payment by the Norske Handelsbank against shipping documents and not on arrival.

12. On February 21 we received the following letter from the War Trade Board:

"DEAR SIRS: License was recently granted to you to ship 3,000 cases of tin plates to Trondhjem Blikemballagefabrik, the shipment being covered by import certificate No. 149. The Norwegian Legation has advised us that this import certificate had been canceled, and they further advised us that so far you have not made use of the license. The legation has requested us to cancel that license, and in order to comply with their wishes in the matter we would request that you return the license to us at once.

"Yours, truly,
"WAR TRADE BOARD,
"BUREAU OF EXPORTS."

To which we replied in the negative and that the facts were not correctly stated.

14. Owing to purchasing the goods from us at a time when foreign exchange was so greatly in their favor, the buyers no doubt availed themselves of the opportunity to buy dollars, with a resulting profit of about 25 to 30 per cent. As the exchange market has now reversed itself, if they are permitted to repudiate the contract, they can now use the same dollars to buy kroner, and make both ways on the transaction.

15. The contract was made in good faith, and because circumstances have temporarily placed this country at a disadvantage, and consequently the same lot may be purchased very much cheaper from another country, the buyer is desperately seeking, with every available means and subterfuge in their power, to abandon the contract, with the assistance of official influence which they have procured in some mysterious way.

* * * * * * *

17. We quote the Boston News Bureau, December 10, 1917:

"Subcommittee on tin of the institute was again in consultation with Washington authorities on Monday, and action to release the American industry from further domination of the British tin committee is expected."

At the present time English tin is quoted in New York at 72½ cents per pound and in London about 46 cents, enabling British manufacturers to easily and substantially undersell the American works.

18. The freight from New York to Trondhjem is over 3 cents a pound, and the freight across the North Sea is only a small fraction, and correspondingly less insurance. The boats leave England daily for Norway and the distance is negotiated in about 24 to 36 hours.

* * * * * * *

The very existence of our export trade, which has made this country a creditor Nation is imperilled, and unless the present administration immediately corrects this abuse of our institutions by foreign nations and stops shielding foreign firms at the expense of American citizens we will be a target for the mockery of the world and a shadow of bankruptcy and despair will confront us.

At this very moment, due to a state of somnolence, the foreign nations all over the world are making great strides in their efforts to conquer us in the world's markets, and as the recent speeches in Congress show, some of the Members are fully alive to the dangerous and intolerable situation, but this specific and concrete case * * * should bring every Senator and Congressman to his feet, denouncing in unequivocal terms this unparalleled injustice to our commerce, directed and instigated by a foreign nation.

We exporters, who have patiently suffered during the war inconceivable hardships and prodigious losses, appeal to you for justice and redress. * * *

Yours, most respectfully,
METAL EXPORT CO. OF AMERICA,
Per ALBERT A. MOERS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Whatever may be said about the various boards that are about to terminate their existence, there is one certainly I feel the country owes a great deal to, and that is the Capital Issues Committee. I do feel that they have done a splendid service in this country, and I think we ought really to continue their existence during the next liberty loan. I feel that they would render great service to this country during that loan. I feel that they would prevent a large number of concerns over the country from trading in securities and trading in liberty bonds that would be beneficial to the country, and I was hoping they would allow them to exist until this next liberty loan was over.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that the Capital Issues Committee has no desire to continue in existence——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I know.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But express their willingness to turn this back; and in fact all the committee, except one gentleman, has left the city, and he is exceedingly anxious to leave.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They do not want a job, any of them, and they have been doing good work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can say to the gentleman that the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee reveal the fact that the Treasury officials are entirely satisfied with the force they now have for disposing of this new $7,000,000,000 loan. They are perfectly aware that the Capital Issues Committee have ceased to function, and they are resigned to that, and they are satisfied that the money appropriated in the loan bill will accomplish the sale.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I know the members of the committee do not want to continue their occupation at all. They are not hunting a job. The question is whether or not there is anybody or any other organization that can perform the services and protect the American people in the way they have been doing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You mean in the matter of investments and issues of investments?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think they have served a useful purpose during the war.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I say they ought to continue.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, at this closing hour I would like to call attention to the fact that notwithstanding all appropriations passed by this Congress have been passed by a Congress that was practically evenly divided between the Democrats and Republicans, and notwithstanding the Republicans, in the face of that proposition, have voted very largely for the appropriations, they have criticized the Democratic administration for extravagance in office and the waste of money to an unheard-of extent. As a matter of fact, the greater portion of the legislative days of this Congress have been devoted to a criticism on this Republican side of the House, where I now stand, of the administration on the question of extravagance and inefficiency. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the Democrats have not appropriated any money except the amounts that were largely approved by the Republicans in this House, here, in these few small items, the Democratic administration, by reason of its efficiency, has been able to turn back into the Treasury out of these small sums that have been appropriated with the approval of the Republicans the large sum of $7,290,000. And I congratulate the Democratic administration for its efficiency, and I feel that we ought to be proud of the success that has attended their efforts to economize and conduct the Government in a way the Republic has approved.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the gentleman who has just taken his seat make some remarks about the efficiency with which the administration has conducted the affairs of the country and his reference to the items we have in hand. I observe one item which I read with a great deal of satisfaction, with reference to the Fuel Administration and of the appropriations from which $775,000 is to be stricken out. With reference to this particular board there is nothing that becomes it so much as its passing away. We will all hail it with a great deal of pleasure. It is like the funeral we have so often heard about, as to which somebody asked what complaint the deceased suffered from, and the reply was that there was no complaint; everybody was satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, in times of war, and possibly on other occasions, we can endure being tyranized over by men of talent and ability who do great things; we can even endure arrogance and haughtiness from a really big man whose work is a model of efficiency in the public service. But when some pinhead who fancies himself great, but whose ability is in inverse ratio to his own estimate of himself, putting on the airs of an oriental potentate, messes and muddles our affairs with not half the sense that an ordinary busybody would manifest, it is really too much.

Mr. Garfield thought himself of such importance that he kept about his person such restrictions as the most haughty autocrat would use. The orders which he issued might produce all sorts of oppression and hardship. What of that? His serene highness must not be disturbed with reports of how the actions of his department were interfering with or ruining business, freezing entire communities, nor even told of the utter folly of his pet projects, nor the extreme hardships which were being inflicted. Why should he, the all powerful, listen to any complaints? Had he not already applied his infallible intellect to the problems of his office? He had spoken, and that settled it.

If the consequences had not been so dangerous to the country a more ludicrous spectacle of a man attempting to elevate himself with nothing to build upon would have ever existed. The results of Mr. Garfield's actions were serious enough in the winter of 1917–18, and if the war had continued and the winter of 1918–19 been of ordinary severity, untold calamities would have befallen us. A kind Providence that tempers the wind to the shorn lamb preserved us by sending one of the mildest winters ever known. The war ended and we were saved through no fault of his. During the summer and fall he was busily engaged in directing hard coal to Canada and in making arrangements which resulted in stopping to a large extent the mining in my State and Illinois.

The Fuel Administration has been criticized by nearly everyone and praised by nobody. The only thing those most anxious to excuse it could say was that it had a "difficult task." It had, indeed. The job of making one continuous round of blunders must have been something terrific, and how it could have succeeded in bringing about a more wretched mess of the fuel situation than it did last winter is more than I can imagine. It had some able men connected with it, but the utter incompetency of its chief made complete failure inevitable.

Mr. Chairman, in the course of the procedure of this particular bureau all of us have had their griefs, and I have had mine. This board undertook the management of the fuel of this country, and one of the first discoveries its chief made was that, in order to prevent the congestion of freight at our ports, it would be an excellent plan to shut down the factories for about two weeks. In the same manner it could have been easily arranged to entirely stop the factories by burning them down, so that the ports would never again get congested. The latter system would have been a little more effective than the first which was proposed, and just about as sensible. As it was, this foolish performance cost the country not less than $25,000,000. Without rhyme or reaon it undertook to change the route of shipments for the whole country and cast all previous experience to the winds.

But if this board had made its blunders universal all over the country and treated everybody alike there would not have been so much complaint. Unfortunately it distributed special favors and placed all sorts of discriminations throughout the country. In the distribution of coal in my section of the country I ascertained some time last fall that notwithstanding Garfield had made orders that Illinois coal should not go into the part of Iowa where I lived, certain favored individuals were receiving their coal right along, and others, that they chose to discriminate against, were not receiving it. Other gentlemen have reported to me numerous other discriminations, and like myself found they could get no remedy. Mr. Garfield surrounded himself with a sort of bodyguard of highly paid assistants, whose chief function seemed to be to keep common individuals like Congressmen, governors, and judges away lest he should find out what the people were thinking of him. In fact, he was wastefully supplied with help, both in this city and everywhere, but the millions which his bureau expended in this way were but a small part of what his régime cost the country. He seemed to fancy that the circle of his presence was so sacred that ordinary mortals should not venture into it, but stand far off and submit their complaints to some underling so far down on the official ladder that he could give no remedy if he would and would not if he could.

I went to see his royal highness, who presided over this institution, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. This is the first time I have occupied the floor on this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I was about to state, I attempted to call on the head of the Fuel Administration, to remonstrate with him against these proceedings. I thought perhaps I would be able to see his majesty without much trouble. I was informed that possibly I might see him in a couple of days. I went there a couple of days afterwards, and I succeeded in seeing the fourth assistant buffer, who inquired as to the nature of my visit; and after having seen the fourth assistant buffer I was subsequently permitted to see the third assistant buffer. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. I was going to ask the gentleman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was then told that possibly I might see the secretary upon the next day. I called the next day, but did not see the secretary, but I saw the second assistant secretary [laughter], and then I was informed that I might see some one else, possibly the next day. So I went on for about a week in my effort to see the royal duke. It was more difficult to see this little self-constituted magnate, who had shut himself up to manage the fuel service of this country, and who did more to confuse things and disturb business than anything else, than it would have been to see the President himself; and I never did see him, and the people of my region never did get any relief. The same discrimination occurred, the same breaking of the law, the same utter disregard of principles of right and justice on the part of this administration was continued until the end.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not yield. It is very late, and I want to get through.

Mr. LOBECK. Who was your fuel administrator in Iowa?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I decline to yield.

Mr. LOBECK. Of course, you will not say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There was no possibility of getting any redress. It seemed that this little minion, dressed in a little brief authority, assumed that he might be able to Prussianize this country, and, to a certain extent, he succeeded, so that millions of the money of the people has been wasted to no purpose except to annoy, harrass, and disturb business. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I view with great satisfaction the demise of the Fuel Administration. [Applause.]

I wish to say, however, that in one respect the Fuel Administrator was highly efficient. That was in looking after the operators of the mines. The governor of my State, the executive council, the delegation in Congress, and nearly everybody insisted that the operators of mines in Iowa were making extortionate profits. Mr. Garfield insisted that their cost sheets showed that they were not, but refused to make public the cost sheets. As a matter of fact, these operators were simply guilty of legalized robbery. Mr. Garfield defended and protected them. I do not charge corruption on his part, but if there had been corruption the results would have been no worse. Let the Fuel Administration go. It has no friends and few apologists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions to the Committee on Appropriations——

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BURNETT. I am not.

The SPEAKER. If anybody who is opposed to the bill wants to offer a motion to recommit, the Chair will recognize him. If not, the gentleman from Alabama will be recognized.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Has not the minority a representative who is entitled to offer this motion?

The SPEAKER. Anybody who qualifies by stating that he is opposed to the bill has the right of way. If nobody does that, then the gentleman from Alabama will be recognized. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURNETT moves to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendments: Amend, by adding at the end of line 20, page 150, the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in salaries or expenses of any officer, clerk, or employee who authorizes, permits, or aids in the admission of any alien who falls within the excluded classes named in section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States,' passed February 5, 1917."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WHEAT GUARANTY.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay before the House the wheat guaranty bill (H. R. 15796), with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. LEVER. I move that the House concur in all the Senate amendments except Senate amendment No. 12 and Senate amendment No. 24.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, Mr. Speaker, we will have a separate vote. We can not vote on them both at the same time. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to send the bill back to conference?

Mr. LEVER. I am going to try to concur in such amendments as I do not think are vital to the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the bill goes to conference, the gentleman ought to send all the amendments to conference. That is the usual way of doing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that I would like a disagreement to amendment 9.

Mr. LEVER. I will be glad to send that back.

Mr. HAUGEN. How about amendment No. 3?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Send them all back.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us send them all back to conference.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desires to tie up this bill in conference on inconsequential amendments, I will ask that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. LEVER. Except Senate amendment numbered 24, which has to do with the cotton proposition. I want to offer a motion to concur in Senate amendment 24 with an amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to concur in Senate amendment 24 with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEVER moves to concur in Senate amendment 24 with the following amendment:

"That the United States cotton-futures act, approved August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 476), is hereby amended as follows:

"In the fifth subdivision of section 5 of said act, strike out the words 'good ordinary' wherever the same occur and substitute therefor the words 'low middling'; strike out the words 'low middling' and substitute therefor the word 'middling'; and strike out the words 'if stained, cotton that is below the grade of middling' and substitute therefor the words 'if yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, or, if blue stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling,' so that the said subdivision shall read as follows:

"'Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character, or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of low middling, or cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of strict middling, or, if yellow stained, cotton that is below the grade of good middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.'

"Strike out the sentence comprising the seventh subdivision of section 5 of said act and substitute therefor the following:

"'Seventh. Provide that all tenders of cotton and settlements therefor under such contract shall be in accordance with the classification thereof made under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture by such officer or officers of the Government as shall be designated for the purpose, and the costs of such classification shall be fixed, assessed, collected, and paid as provided in such regulations. All moneys collected as such costs may be used as a revolving fund for carrying out the purposes of this subdivision, and section 19 of this act is amended accordingly.'

"Strike out the last sentence of section 5 of said act and substitute therefor the following:

"'The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section, and the certificates of the officers of the Government as to the classification of any cotton for the purposes of said subdivision shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between the parties to such contract, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true classification of the cotton involved.'

"The foregoing amendments to section 5 of said act shall become effective on and after the approval of this act, but nothing herein shall be construed to diminish any authority conferred on any official of the United States necessary to enable him to carry out any duties remaining to be performed by him under said act as unamended, or to impair the effect of such act as to any contract subject to its provisions entered into prior to the effective date of said amendments, or to impair the effect of the findings of the Secretary of Agriculture upon any dispute referred to him under said section 5 as unamended.

"Effective on and after the date of the passage of this act, insert at the end of section 8 of said act the following:

"'Provided further, That it shall be the duty of any person engaged in the business of dealing in cotton, when requested by the Secretary of Agriculture or any agent acting under his instructions, to answer correctly to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, all questions touching his knowledge of the number of bales, the classification, the price or bona fide price offered, and other terms of purchase or sale, of any cotton involved in any transaction participated in by him, or to produce all books, letters, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any such person who shall, within a reasonable time prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture or such agent, willfully fail or refuse to answer such questions or to produce such books, letters, papers, or documents, or who shall willfully give any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from California withhold that until I make the parliamentary motion?

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall move a call of the House if he insists on the point of no quorum.

Mr. NOLAN. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment by striking out all of the Senate amendment and substituting the amendment that has just been read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the motion. As I understand, it is the gentleman's intention to move to disagree to all the other Senate amendments and ask for a conference except on this amendment 24?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill goes over to the Senate with all other amendments disagreed to except amendment 24. Does the gentleman expect that the Senate will accept amendment 24 as amended by the House in case the House adopts the amendment, or does he expect that the Senate will move to disagree to Senate amendment 24 and ask for a conference on that?

Mr. LEVER. I have the assurance of the chairman of the committee that the amendment I have proposed will be acceptable. I have also the assurance of a prominent man representing the Southern States, interested in this proposition, that this amendment is satisfactory to him. So I think there is no question but that the Senate will accept it. I think it is agreed that the Senate amendment is so very narrow in its lines as to the delivery of contracts that it might have an effect to greatly depress the contract price and probably might result in closing some exchanges.

The purpose of the amendment I have offered is to put the matter in conference, so that if there are any defects in the proposition I offer, we have a proposition broad enough so that we can work out a reasonable solution.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you are not putting it in conference; you are forcing upon the Senate in the closing hours of the session the necessity of the Senate asking for a disagreement to amendment 24, as proposed by the House, and asking the House to grant a conference.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say that this amendment I have proposed was unanimously agreed upon by the cotton members of the Committee on Agriculture on yesterday and also by the full committee. I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the Senate, and the amendment proposed here is satisfactory to him. If I may be permitted, out of order, I will say that I have talked with Senator SMITH of Georgia, who has been interested in this proposition, and he feels that the Senate will promptly accept the proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am only pointing out that in case the Senate should not accept the House amendment to the Senate amendment it would require further action on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Can not that be obviated by sending amendment 24 to conference and instructing the conferees to agree to that amendment with an amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that is the better way, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am informed unofficially that a filibuster has been going on for five hours in the Senate. The gentleman does not want to get into that snarl.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have just come from the Senate, and I want to say that the filibuster is over and they have agreed on a program.

Mr. LEVER. I will state that if this proposition endangers the bill I should recede from it, for I do not propose to lose the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman would disagree to all Senate amendments and then make a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to Senate amendment 24 with an amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think that would be the better solution.

Mr. LEVER. I am quite willing to do that. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion that I made.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] suggests that might make it subject to a point of order under the Senate rules. I stand by my original motion to strike out the Senate provision and substitute the matter that has been read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order from the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to concur in the Senate amendment 24 with an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Striking out the amendment and inserting——

The SPEAKER. Striking out the Senate amendment and substituting the matter read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I heard the provision read. It does not limit the contract in the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges in the number of bales that may be delivered on any contract of various grades. For instance, I do not know how many, but my information is that there are several hundred different kinds of cotton that can be delivered now under the law.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Twenty-one.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think it is at least ten times 21. I think that can be clearly demonstrated. That number can be delivered now, and the vice of it is that on a contract for the delivery of 100 bales of cotton 25 different kinds of cotton can be tendered, which makes it utterly unacceptable, and, therefore, forces a settlement on margins. That, therefore, converts the exchange purely into a bare gambling establishment. It occurs to me that there ought to be some limitation on the number of bales of any particular type that can be delivered on a contract, and I just want to submit to the gentleman unless he does that he is not getting very far toward the elimination of the very undesirable features of the contract now.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Mississippi that under the present law there are 20 different grades deliverable upon contract, ranging from the highest grade to ordinary. Under the terms of the proposal here the number of grades tenderable would be 10 instead of 20. The Senate proposition is 7 instead of 10. In addition to that, this proposes that instead of having agents or employees of the various cotton-future exchanges classify their own cotton, we propose in this that the Government shall classify this cotton through its own agents, to do two things, first, to save the time of appealing the dispute to Washington and the expense, and, second, to do away with the constant complaint that they are delivering very low-grade cotton upon contracts such as dog-tail and the like of that, and thus enhance the confidence of the public in the contract, which in turn enhances the value of the contract. The other proposition is to see to it that some agency is set up which will gather from the various spot markets of the country quotations which shall be published daily as to the value of these various untenderable grades. If you do not do that, you put these untenderable grades, which may sometimes amount to 15 or 20 per cent of a crop in abnormal conditions, and under normal conditions 5 to 10 per cent, absolutely at the mercy of the big spot-cotton merchants and spinners.

We have set that machinery up to take care of that situation and we have reduced the number of tenderable grades from 20 to 10.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Here is the thought I had in mind, that if they are permitted to offer any of the types that they may offer in lots of 50 bales, say—that can be handled, that would take care of all the low-grade cotton, that would not depress that at all—if they can deliver on a contract for 100 bales of cotton 100 different kinds of cotton——

Mr. LEVER. They could not do that under this provision.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. One or two or three bales of a kind, it would be utterly unacceptable to anybody who is in the cotton business. I have not got it in my pocket, but I am going to insert in the RECORD, if I may, a letter from a very large cotton merchant——

Mr. LEVER. And a cotton miller?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. He is not interested in mills. He is a large cotton planter and what we call a cotton buyer, a cotton merchant. I will introduce that into the RECORD, and if the gentleman will read it he will find that under this contract you now prescribe they will be able to deliver not 21, which the gentleman says they can deliver now, but at least 50 different types of cotton.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. I am going to move the previous question on this right now.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman will withhold that point for just a minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I will not. If this is to continue until 12 o'clock——

Mr. LEVER. No; I am going to move the previous question just now.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to move a call of the House; I give notice now.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman just withhold his point for a moment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withhold it for a moment.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just withhold that for one moment. I want to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think after having worked so long to-night we will do very well if we go to work at noon.

Mr. KITCHIN. We hope to get through a little earlier to-morrow night. We have a contested election case to-morrow that will take, I would say, at least six hours, at least five and one-half hours of debate.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand as much time as that is desired?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I understand it.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is true——

Mr. KITCHIN. Then, we would like to get this little luxury tax bill through, which will only take a few minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand we are to take up the contested-election case the first thing in the morning?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have a little luxury tax bill which will take about two minutes.

A MEMBER. It is agreed the election case is to be taken up?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that the House meet at 11 o'clock?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that to-morrow the business in order will be, first, the repeal of the luxury tax in the revenue bill passed and then the contested-election case?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. Then, you can not come in with conference reports and shut out an election case. That is of the highest privilege.

Mr. LEVER. I recognize that.

Mr. WALSH. I want to know if it is understood that the first thing is the luxury tax repeal bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have one or two uncontested conference reports that ought to be disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. Wait until after the election case.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina answer the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. KITCHIN. I was going to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts I understand there is a conference report that certainly could not take over 5 or 10 minutes, and we would like to dispose of that. If it takes any time over that, I will withdraw it.

Mr. SNYDER. I object to meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we have the election case and the luxury tax bill——

Mr. WALSH. I will object to running in any conference reports. We started out with a conference report to-day with the understanding it would only take 10 minutes and they talked over 2 hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. We will not have conference reports until we finish the contested-election case.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to concur.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with an amendment to section 24.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, did my objection stand as to the 11 o'clock meeting to-morrow?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman withdrew it.

Mr. SNYDER. I did not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to meeting at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow?

Mr. SNYDER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to other Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN announced the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] be added. I overlooked that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, those names will be added.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] withdraw his point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I do not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes a point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw that a moment and let this message come in——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his point momentarily.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I withdraw mine.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the executive board of the Kansas State Federation of Labor, favoring Government ownership of railroads, telephone and telegraph lines, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send to the desk a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Raleigh, N. C., February 27, 1919.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am instructed by the General Assembly of North Carolina to send to you a copy of the within resolution.

With best wishes,
Respectfully,

J. BRYAN GRIMES,
Secretary of State.

Resolution 31.

Joint resolution indorsing the bill now pending in the House of Representatives of the United States providing an appropriation for preparing lands in the various States to be occupied by discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States.

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States, the same being House bill 13651, providing for an appropriation of $100,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the investigation, irrigation, drainage, and development of swamps, arid, waste, and undeveloped lands, for the purpose of providing employment and farms with improvements for honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States; and

Whereas the State of North Carolina has a large acreage of land that could profitably be used for this purpose; and

Whereas the people of the State of North Carolina would welcome any opportunity to make provision for the comfort and prosperity of the returned soldiers, sailors, and marines who have taken part in the recent world war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring)—

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of North Carolina approve and indorse the provisions of House bill 13651, now pending in the House of Representatives of the United States, providing for an appropriation of $100,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the investigation, irrigation, drainage, and development of swamp, arid, waste, and undeveloped lands for the purpose of providing employment and farms with improvements and equipment for honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in the National Congress at Washington, with request that they use their efforts to bring about the passage of the bill referred to in section 1 hereof.

SEC. 3. That this resolution be in effect from and after this ratification.

In the general assembly read three times and ratified this 25th day of February, 1919.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Pro tempore President of the Senate.
D. G. BRUMMIT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Raleigh, February 27, 1919.

I, J. Bryan Grimes, secretary of state of the State of North Carolina, do hereby certify the foregoing and attached (two sheets) to be a true copy from the records of this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done in office at Raleigh this 27th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919.

[SEAL.] J. BRYAN GRIMES,
Secretary of State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Friends Monthly Meeting, of High Point, N. C., favoring the establishment of a league of nations, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the members of the Friends Monthy Meeting, of High Point, N. C., do heartily indorse the constitution for a league of nations which has been presented to the allied peace conference, and that we pledge our support to President Wilson in his strenuous efforts to establish a basis for permanent world peace.

Signed on behalf of the meeting.

O. E. MENDENHALL, Clerk.
Mrs. H. A. WHITE, Recording Clerk.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Berwick, Me., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Maine Society of Civil Engineers, favoring an adequate construction of national highways, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pratt, Kans., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Ohio Vegetable Growers' Association, remonstrating against any reduction being made in the appropriation for the Market News Reporting Service of the Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MOSES presented petitions of the Congregations of the First Baptist Church, of Exeter; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Exeter; of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Manchester; of the Congregational Brotherhood, of Milton; of the Women's Club of Contoocook; of the women's committee of the Council of National Defense, of Plymouth; of Asquamchumauke Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Plymouth; of the New Hampshire State Federation of Women's Clubs; of the Unity Club, of Lancaster; of sundry citizens of Rindge; and of Marian O. Wilbur, principal of the grammar school of Charlestown, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Merrimack Lodge, No. 27, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Concord, N. H., favoring Government ownership of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Lodge No. 118, International Association of Machinists, of Somersworth, N. H., favoring the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ansonia, Derby, and Shelton, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ansonia, Derby, and Shelton, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Army and Navy Association of the Great War, of Stamford, Conn., praying for the retention by soldiers and sailors of their uniforms, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Excelsior Lodge, No. 257, International Association of Machinists, of Derby, Conn., and a petition of the Organized Machinists of New London, Conn., praying for the extension of Government control of industry where such control is necessary to insure useful employment at established Federal Wage Board standards for all willing and able workers, especially for discharged soldiers and sailors, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Waldemere Council, No. 6, Order United American Mechanics, of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the proposed restriction of immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of the Commonwealth Club of New Britain, of the Civic Union of Watertown, and of the faculty and students of Connecticut College, New London, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Westchester and Fairfield Horticultural Society, of Greenwich, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation of foreign plants and bulbs after June 1, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Britain, Conn., praying for the repeal of the daylight-saving law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, protesting against the extension of the boundaries of Yellowstone National Park, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled joint memorial No. 2, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original house joint memorial No. 3, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office on the 22d day of February, A. D. 1919, and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 25th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS, Deputy.

[Enrolled joint memorial 2, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.]

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, relating to public lands within the State of Wyoming.

Whereas the State of Wyoming has been forced to concede many of its rights to the United States Government in the way of oil and timber; and

Whereas a movement is on foot at Washington to enlarge the boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park, thus taking valuable land from the State of Wyoming which should be left to the State; and

Whereas said lands are partly and should be further developed into revenue-producing acres by farming and the development of the live-stock interests of the State of Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be urged not to extend the boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of the memorial be sent to each member of the Wyoming delegation in Congress and urge their cooperations.

E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.
T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.

Approved.

ROBERT D. CAREY, Governor.

Feb. 22, 1919—10.48 p. m.

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, relative to the construction and maintenance of national highways, which I ask to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled joint memorial No. 3, Senate, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original senate joint memorial No. 5, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office on the 24th day of February, A. D. 1919, and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 25th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS,
Deputy.

[Enrolled joint memorial No. 3, Senate, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.]

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, requesting Congress to provide for the immediate construction of a system of Federal highways.

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Wyoming is firmly convinced that the present is the most opportune time to commence immediately upon the construction of a system of main Federal highways, to be constructed and maintained by the Government of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring) That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to take immediate steps in providing the necessary legislation: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representatives in Congress from the State of Wyoming.

T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.
E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.

Approved.

ROBERT D. CAREY,
Governor.

February 24, 1919—9.26 a. m.

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present a memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming, favoring an appropriation for the erection of a soldiers' and sailors' home in the Big Horn Hot Springs State Reserve, Wyoming, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled joint memorial No. 1, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original house joint memorial No. 12, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office on the 22d day of February, A. D. 1919, and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

[Enrolled joint memorial No. 1, House of Representatives, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.]

A joint memorial to the Congress of the United States to appropriate funds to be used with the State of Wyoming in establishing, equipping, and maintaining a war veterants' memorial in the State of Wyoming.

Whereas the country is greatly indebted to the soldiers and sailors who have served in the Army and Navy in the preservation and defense of their country; and

Whereas the debt of gratitude to these heroes has not been repaid by the inadequate monetary consideration appropriated for the payment of their services; and

Whereas many of our soldiers and sailors have become incapacitated for active service in their usual vocations through sickness and injury, thereby placing the supreme obligation upon the country to soften the life and lighten the burdens of these heroes through the period of their various incapacities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth State Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to appropriate the sum of $125,000, to be used jointly with a like amount to be appropriated by the State of Wyoming, for the purpose of erecting and equipping a war veterans' memorial upon the Big Horn Hot Springs State Reserve, in the State of Wyoming, to consist of such building or buildings and equipment as may be suitable for the care, comfort, and recreation of returned soldiers and sailors who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States, together with an annual appropriation for the maintenance of such institution. And that the erection, equipment, maintenance, and management of the said institution be placed under such joint control of the United States and the State of Wyoming as may be determined by the Congress and the Legislature of said State.

E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.
T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1919 and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 790) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5284) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) directing the United States Coast Guard to resume its operations under the Treasury Department, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 788) thereon.

MATTIE R. MAYER.

Mr. RANSDELL. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3699) for the relief of Mattie R. Mayer, and I submit a report (No. 789) thereon. It is a private bill and will take only a few seconds to pass it. I should like to have it put on its passage if there is no objection.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5668) for the relief of Barneybas Eastridge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 5669) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Tribune, Kans.;

A bill (S. 5670) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Smith Center, Kans.;

A bill (S. 5671) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Junction City, Kans.;

A bill (S. 5672) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Thayer, Kans.; and

A bill (S. 5673) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Paola, Kans.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment to provide for the development of the submarine base at Key West, Fla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive fully itemized and verified claims and reimburse contractors and their subcontractors, including material men, for the construction, improvement, special repair, equipment, or furnishing of post offices and other buildings or work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,102.92 to pay to the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to contracts on public works by the Secretary of the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INVESTIGATION BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I must ask pardon of the Senate for bringing up a matter, but it will take only a minute.

The Senate ordered a committee to investigate bolshevism and the activities of the Brewers' Trust. It has been impossible for us to get out our report on account of this jam. We want about 10 days to continue our work; that is all. We can finish it and get out our report and at the next session file our report. It is impossible to file it at this session. I ask unanimous consent to take up House resolution 710, which gives us a short time to examine about half a dozen witnesses and complete our report.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish the Senator would withdraw his objection. It would not take more than a minute. I want to say, if I can not get the resolution through there will be no report in the matter. I do not care whether the report is in or not, it will not be my fault. The Senate ordered the investigation, and if the Senator from Nevada wants to object and have no report on bolshevism, it is all right with me. I shall be very glad to go home.

CONFERENCE ON PENSION BILLS.

Mr. WALSH. In the case of House bill 14894, House bill 14945, and House bill 15706, passed by the Senate yesterday, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House upon the bills and amendments, and that the Vice President appoint the conferees upon the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On February 28, 1919:

S. 932. An act to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 3571. An act granting lands for school purposes in lots No. 111 in each of the townsites of Forts Shaw and Simms, Sun River reclamation project, Mont.;

S. 4103. An act to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto;

S. 4244. An act for the relief of entrymen within the Castle Peak irrigation projects in Utah;

S. 5279. An act to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes;

S. 3646. An act granting the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 198. Joint resolution to suspend the legal requirements of assessment work on mining claims in Alaska for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, and extending to that Territory the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, and public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes.

On March 1, 1919:

S. 5627. An act to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas.

REPORT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 6 of the trading with the enemy act, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a detailed report by the Alien Property Custodian of all proceedings had by him under said act during the calendar year 1918 and to the close of business on February 15, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 February, 1919.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 16104. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. I present the second report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of oil, gas, phosphate, potassium, and sodium on the public domain, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon national park, and the Mount Olympus national monument, but excluding those in other national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter povided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, exclusive of those in Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair: Provided, That improvements or development work of the aggregate value of not less than $8 per acre upon the coal lands so entered shall be made or done upon the lands annually for two years after such award, when patent shall issue therefor. Upon failure to comply with the terms of this section within the required period said lands shall be subject to entry by any other qualified applicant.

"No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area, at any one time, nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation, or stockholder of such corporation, shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition and not longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

"That any person, association, corporation, member of such association, or stockholder of such corporation who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not exceeding two years, or both.

"That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General in the courts for the purpose.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, outside of the Territory of Alaska, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract, and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term 'railroad' or 'common carrier' as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier, but shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

"SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases or holdings through the surrender of the original leases or holdings and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease sections or parts of sections which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporation: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease or sale shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivision of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of public lands, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought, a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits, not more than five in number, may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eighth in amount of value of the production, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 18. Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just.

"SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert-land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the survey of public lands. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid location to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1918, shall, upon the relinquishment of such location, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section, for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil-shale bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 21. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, or his successors or assigns, who prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases in Alaska under this act whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Cal.

"SEC. 23. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 22 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting limit, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer-mining claims. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the preference right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 22 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease or sale, and may be leased or sold by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulations theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development, and minimum production, and a patentee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 24. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area, for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 26. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18 and 19 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines or railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same.

"SEC. 27. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves, of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act to the exent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 28. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made, it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"SEC. 29. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 30. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

"SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

"SEC. 32. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

"SEC. 33. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 34. That all moneys received from sales, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts."

"SEC. 35. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment to the title: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain."

And the House agree to the same.

KEY PITTMAN,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
JAMES D. PHELAN,
By KEY PITTMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

CONSTITUTION OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, the Official Bulletin—printed daily under the order of the President of the United States—has published, under date of Friday, February 14, 1919, and under the title "Text of covenant on league of nations," the report of the peace conference commission on the league of nations. The document was read to the plenary session by the President, chairman of this particular commission, who accompanied his reading with comments. This document and the league plan which it outlines, in so far as they can be understood, may include so much that is strange to our traditional foreign policy, contrary to our fundamental principles of international intercourse and conduct, destructive of treaty rights, indispensable to the safety of ourselves and other nations of this hemisphere, and so much that would require—before and in order that it could become operative—such basic changes in our Constitution to enable us to make the necessary surrender of high sovereign rights on which our great liberties rest, that not only the Senate, which in due time may be called upon to advise and consent to the ratification of the plan, but the entire Congress and the whole people of the United States must give thereto the fullest and most mature, careful, and calm consideration. The submission of this plan for adoption will constitute for our people far and away the greatest and most important matter placed before them since the Nation was founded. We are now invited to assist in forming and become a part of the united States of the world.

As I have already stated, the document which we have before us is, in its present form, merely the report of a commission; it has been laid on the conference table at plenary session, from which, as Mr. Clemenceau has assured the members, it may be removed for debate, amendment, and adoption or rejection. In view of these facts, we might well forego its discussion until the conference in plenary session has adopted it, except that the report itself has acquired for this Nation a peculiar significance by reason of the fact that the President presided over the body which drafted it; that he participated in the proceedings incident to the drafting; that as president of the commission he read the report submitting it to the plenary session of the conference; that he indorsed the document and thereby committed himself as National Executive to it; and that he has officially assured, in his cable to the members of the Foreign Relations Committees of the two Houses of Congress, that there are good reasons even for the verbiage of the document, crude as that is.

By way of clearing the ground and that no doubt may exist as to my own personal attitude on war and the pacific settlement of international disputes, I crave indulgence at this point for a few words of explanation in order that such negative conclusions as I may reach shall not be charged to unfriendliness or bias. I may, in the first place, observe that I am, and always have been, against war and all its attendant woe, misery, horrors, and crime. In common with all Christians, I can not and would not do otherwise than condemn it in terms as extravagant as language can frame.

Feeling thus, I shall at any and all times do my utmost to bring into the world a reign of law, of order, and of universal peace. No man dreams loftier or feels more intensely than I on these matters. I realize, moreover, that with nations as with individuals sacrifice brings growth, moral and spiritual, and, further, that when all is said and done the moral and the spiritual things are all that are worth while in life, national and individual. I am willing, therefore, personally to sacrifice, and to see my country sacrifice, the utmost possible to the establishment of peace and righteousness in the world. But my country's sacrifice counts for so much in the world that, since mere sacrifice itself availeth little, I wish to make sure before placing our national offering on the alter that, when the fire is kindled and the offering is burned, we shall have measurably and proportionately advanced the cause of human liberty and happiness. It is in this spirit that I approach the discussion of the present project.

After the most mature deliberation it is possible for me to give, I am convinced that you may place the case as high as you will, yet you can not in the present state of society spell out an attainable end which would justify the destruction of our great country and Government—the greatest democracy of all recorded time. Our liberties, our free institutions, our civilization, traditions, and ideals are all worth all we have ever given to get them and all we could possibly give, even to the point of extermination, to preserve them. Conjure in your mind, if you can, a world without the Declaration of Independence, without our Constitution and free institutions, without our proclamations of emancipation of races and of nations, without this Nation itself, which all these things have builded and made mighty, and then tell me, I challenge you, what is in that now put before us which would fill in terms of blessing—not to ourselves but to the world—the gap caused by their blotting out. The world has nothing more precious for man to-day and for the myriad generations yet unborn than our own great Government, institutions, and people—a people which, without the obligation of treaty or alliance, without thought of gain, and with only the thought of protecting eternal right, put on the full accouterment of war and went to battle that the inalienable human rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness might still have a dwelling place among men, "that government of the people, by the people, and for the people might not perish from the earth."

Holding our Government and its institutions in this fervent reverence, and profoundly averse to war for its own sake, I must for myself demand that any plan proposed shall, to secure my support, meet these simple and reasonable tests:

Do its provisions abolish war and make it hereafter impossible? For I would be willing we should go far and risk much to accomplish this. Do its provisions strike down our Constitution or destroy our sovereignty or threaten our national independence and life? For if the plan proposed does these things, then it must receive the condemnation of every loyal citizen. And I tell you here in all soberness that these matters must be approached by all of us in a spirit of candid fairness, without cavil, bias, or partisanship, for our fate and the fate of the world, if this matter go certainly forward, waits upon our decision. And one word further, let me say, if we are to go forward with this plan it must be whole-heartedly and with absolute good faith. Neither we nor those who represent us in the league bodies must trifle with our sacred plighted word. For weal or for woe we must stand by our covenant. We must never leave in our history the taint of the "scrap of paper."

Having thus made my explanation, I proceed to the plan itself, which I shall discuss without heat or color and with such judicial calm and fairness as I am able to bring to my command.

Any definite and precise examination or criticism of the covenant is made immeasurably difficult because of the looseness of expression which characterizes the document throughout; and, while I shall not take your time to discover mere matters of verbiage, there are two such matters to which I invite your attention, because they relate to matters more or less basic. The first is the language of article 1, which provides that "the action of the high contracting parties * * * shall be effected through the instrumentality of meeting of a body of delegates." This, as a matter either of language or of logic, is sheer nonsense, and yet this article purports to lay down one of the fundamental precepts of the plan. One is tempted to believe on casual reading that this is mere infelicity of expression and that, after all, the meaning may be plain; but further study raises a serious doubt, because it is not at all clear whether the document sets up one or two operating entities for its enforcement, as the following extracts will show:

Article 1 prescribed that "the action of the high contracting parties under the terms of this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of meeting of a body of delegates representing the high contracting parties," and not of the league.

Article 11 declares that any war or threat of war is a matter of concern to the league, and that "the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations." Assuming the language is carefully chosen, it is obvious that it is quite impossible for the league itself, which is the creature of the high contracting parties, to reserve a right against the parties creating it, and yet it is quite intelligible and accurate to say that the high contracting parties who create the league reserve a right as against the league itself.

Again, in the last paragraph of article 19 the high contracting parties "agree to establish" a mandatory commission, which shall, inter alia, "assist the league in insuring the observance of the terms of all mandates."

Article 15 provides that in case a dispute "between States, members of the league," has not been submitted to arbitration under article 13, and possibly 12, then "the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the executive council," but "either party to the dispute may give notice of the existence of the dispute to the secretary general" of the league.

Under article 18 "the high contracting parties agree that the league shall be intrusted with general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunitions," and so forth. It would be absurd here to substitute "league" for "high contracting parties," so that the sentence would read, "The league agrees that the league shall be intrusted," and so forth.

Again, in article 21 "The high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league." Obviously here the high contracting parties and the league can scarcely refer to the same operating entity.

How important this matter of a possible double international entity is becomes at once apparent when it is observed that the provisions of the supercovenant of article 10 reads, "The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league."

I shall later comment upon other covenants of the high contracting parties, when it will become increasingly apparent how indispensable it becomes to have this point cleared up, because if the high contracting parties do not comprise every State that is a member of the league, then the burden assumed by the high contracting parties, whoever they may be, possibly the "big five," is crushing in its weight.

One other point closely akin to the two foregoing should be considered here. The text, as printed in the Official Bulletin, is entitled "Covenant on the league of nations." Now, the term "league of nations" as applied to the organization contemplated by this covenant is, if judged by popular conception, a deceptive misnomer. The popular thought is that a league of nations means a league of all the nations of the world. Such, however, is not the league provided for in the document now before us, save in remote contemplation, for under this proposed plan the nations of the world are divided into three classes:

First. "Signatories" of the covenant; these are not named, but it is assumed they will include and possibly be confined to the five great entente powers; that is to say, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States.

Second. "States not signatory to the covenant but named in the protocol attached to the covenant." No information is given as to who these States are, though surely they will include such entente powers, if any, as are not signatories as well as certain other States neutral in the conflict now closing; and Third. Those States which are neither signatories nor protocol States and which must, to be admitted to the league, be prepared to give certain effective guaranties as to their intention to be bound by their international obligations. These latter are outcast States and presumably include the central powers and their allies in the war.

Thus a league of nations in the sense of all the nations is not created by this document, nor are the States members of the league treated as equals, as is apparent, and will be more fully shown when it is considered that the governing body of the proposed league, namely, the executive council, is made up of representatives of only nine States.

But the term league is a misnomer in another and really vital matter. For a league connotes a confederation, and a confederation implies a right in the several parties to withdraw at their will. But there is no right of secession within the four corners of this covenant. On the other hand, the association here provided for is a union in the full sense of that term as applied to our own political institutions. Once in this union and we remain there no matter how onerous its gigantic burdens may become. No matter how great the distaste and revulsion our people may have for it, we must remain members until either we persuade all the States represented in the executive council and three-fourths of those represented in the body of delegates to bid us depart in peace or until the league crumbles of its own weight or is destroyed by its enemies or until we fight our way out against the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and all the lesser States they are able to persuade to join the league.

It is well that all discussions of this project should be had with the foregoing preliminary matters in mind.

In proceeding with my analysis it will be convenient to examine first the machinery set up by this document for carrying out its covenants, noting the powers and duties of the respective parts, and then to consider the broad matters of substance. The document before us establishes six operative league bodies as follows:

Body of delegates.
Executive council.
Military naval commission.
Mandatory commission.
Bureau of labor.
Permanent secretariat.

1. BODY OF DELEGATES.

The body of delegates is to be made up of representatives of the "high contracting parties," each party to have not more than three delegates but to have only one vote.

The specific jurisdiction given to the body of delegates in the instrument bestows roughly three broad powers—first, to entertain reports made by any of the "high contracting parties" of "circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends"; second, to take jurisdiction of a dispute not settled by arbitration which is referred to it by either party thereto or by the executive council providing this reference is made within 14 days after the dispute is submitted to the executive council, in respect of which reference the body of delegates has the same actions and powers concerning the dispute as would the executive council if it continued to entertain jurisdiction; and third, to advise the reconsideration by members of the league of those treaties which have become inapplicable and of international conditions the continuance of which may endanger the peace of the world. The body of delegates is also ultimately to choose the four other States not named in the document, who shall be represented on the executive council, and is also to vote on the admission to the league of certain outcast states to be noted later.

But the document contains no provisions whatever regarding the appointment, removal, compensation, or tenure of these representatives who are to exercise these powers. Neither is there any provision covering the organization of the body or how it shall vote or function, nor what number of States or delegates constitute a quorum for doing business, whether distinctions shall be made as to the number necessary to transact different kinds of business, beyond the provision of article 4, which puts matters of procedure and the appointment of committees into the hands of a "majority of the States represented at the meeting."

2. EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The executive council is to be made up of representatives of the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States, and of four other States to be selected "by the body of delegates on such principles and in such manner as they think fit," that is nine States in all.

The jurisdiction of this superbody, thus made up of representatives of nine out of the half hundred States, more or less, which compose the world, is stated to be "any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world." But in addition to this general grant of jurisdiction certain specific powers are bestowed, the more important of which may be stated in general terms as follows:

Making plans for the disarmament of the world, determining what is fair and reasonable military equipment and armament for each nation, and deciding regarding any increase in armament of any power; formulating plans to cure the evils of private manufacture of munitions of war; devising means for fulfilling the obligations to preserve—if necessary by armed force—the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league against external aggression; sitting in judgment on and making recommendations regarding any dispute whatsoever arising between the high contracting parties; proposing steps for the enforcement of arbitral awards; formulating plans for establishing a permanent court of international justice; proposing measures necessary to give effect to their own recommendations; recommending what effective military or naval forces each member of the league shall contribute to protect the covenants of the league, seemingly, not only against league but nonleague members, that is, as a practical matter, the power to declare war; determining the conditions upon which nonmembers may assume the obligations of the league for the purpose of any particular dispute and examining and making recommendations concerning any dispute which may arise between members of the league and nonmembers or among nonmembers themselves; taking such action and making such recommendations as will prevent hostilities between two nonmember disputing States who have declined to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purpose of dispute; and defining in a special act or charter "the degree of authority, control or administration to be exercised by the mandatory State over the colony or territory placed under its protection.

Obviously, as already suggested, this is the real governing body of the league, yet such essential matters as what shall be the number of representatives from each State, who shall fix the number, shall the States be represented by an equal number of representatives, what shall be the manner of organization and of voting, are not stated in the document. Neither does the document provide for the appointment, removal, compensation, or tenure of these representatives, though the document provides that procedure at the meetings of the council, including the appointment of commitees to investigate particular matters, is to be regulated by the council "and may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting." Who shall call the meetings, except the first, how many States or representatives shall constitute a quorum, what, if any, matters would require more than a majority vote, and all other vital matters connected with the deliberations of this world-ruling body are entirely unprovided for. And yet, this is the body which is hereafter to determine whether we, the people of the United States, shall go to war, and what our participation therein shall be.

Nor are these all the defects of the instrument in respect of the operations of the executive council. There are absolutely no principles, rules, or regulations laid down in the covenant by which this world-governing body is to be guided. It makes its own principles, rules, and regulations; it hales before it every power, whether league member or not, whom it believes has violated any such principle, rule, or regulation; it sits as a court to determine whether any violation has actually occurred; it passes judgment upon a violation when found; and it determines the means which shall be used in enforcing its judgments or recommendations, the league being bound to furnish the means so determined upon.

I am not unmindful of the fact that by the "covenant-preamble" international cooperation and international peace and security are to be promoted, inter alia, "by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments." But this provision merely accentuates the difficulty, for there is no universally recognized body of international law and no provision is made in the instrument for even an attempt to secure one. Indeed there are many great and fundamental differences of opinion as to what is the rule or principle of international law on many grave questions, and even the customs of nations, not generally regarded as having yet ripened into international law, are greatly at variance. Thus the executive council in reality stands in a position, as already stated, to make its own law, rules, and regulations. To sum up, the executive council is legislature, court, and in a large part, executive, all in one. A body clothed with powers such as this is an anachronism. It belongs not to the enlightened age of the twentieth century but to the days of the Medes and Persians. A union more abhorrent to our traditions, to our free institutions, to the trend of all civilized government, could not be devised.

3. MILITARY NAVAL COMMISSION.

The permanent military naval commission provided for in article 9 is to "advise the league on the execution of the provisions of article 8—which relate to disarmament—and on military and naval questions generally." That is to say, it is the great general staff of the league, and seemingly is to be laden with the entire military responsibility thereof in whatever military activities the league may undertake. The document submitted contains absolutely no intimations as to the composition of the commission, the number of members, the method of appointment, the States from which they shall be appointed, their removal, their compensation, or their tenure. Neither are there any rules, beyond the most general, laid down for their guidance and control.

4. MANDATORY COMMISSION.

The mandatory commission is to be established by the high contracting parties, and it "is to receive and examine annual reports of the mandatory powers and to assist the league in issuing the observance of the terms of all mandates." The same indefiniteness exists as to the organization and operations of this commission that exists with reference to the military naval commission.

5. BUREAU OF LABOR.

The high contracting parties agree to establish "as part of the organization of the league a permanent bureau of labor," which is set up to carry out the undertaking of the high contracting parties that they "will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations" extend. Here again are no details as to the composition, organization, appointment, removal, compensation, or tenure of the members of this bureau.

Read in the light of the provision of article 21, which requires that the high contracting parties shall make provision through the instrumentality of the league "to secure and maintain * * * equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league," the question arises as to whether or not it is the intent of these provisions to put the labor of all countries upon an equality, and if this be the intent and purpose of the document, then the labor of this country may well consider, inasmuch as France has already given notice that it will be impossible for French labor to be put on an equality with American labor in hours of work, whether American labor is to be brought to the level of French labor in this regard, in order that there may be equitable treatment of the commerce of the two countries.

6. PERMANENT SECRETARIAT.

Finally, there is the permanent secretariat which apparently is to perform the ordinary secretarial duties both for the body of delegates and for the executive council.

The duties of the secretariat are, in addition to the secretarial services necessary for the body of delegates and the executive council, to receive from "parties" in dispute statements of their cases, with all relevant facts and papers and to register and publish all treaties hereafter entered into by regular members.

This is the machinery of the league. The mere narration I have made shows great gaps in indispensable provisions and procedure. I assume I need make no argument to establish that before we become parties to any such plan as herein proposed, we must know something, must have some assurance on these vitally important matters now unprovided for. Nor can it be properly said that these are mere details which have no place in a great document, for all are of the kind which are provided for in our own Constitution, which certainly is entitled to rank fully with this covenant as to novelty of plan and provision and as to importance and far-reaching consequences.

Referring again to the possible distinction between the high contracting parties and the league, and the fact that seemingly the document provides for these two international entities, each with its own rights, duties, and obligations, it is most important to note the nature of the covenants which under this document are to be entered into by the high contracting parties—and we must remember that what the high contracting parties covenant we covenant; their obligations are our obligations—and by the league, respectively. The proceeding may prove tedious, but it appears to me necessary that these covenants be fresh in our minds for the discussion with which I intend to follow them. In listing the more important of them I shall follow the order in which they occur in the document, without attempting to correlate those of like nature. Those of the high contracting parties are as follows:

The high contracting parties agree, in connection with the program for disarmament, not to conceal from one another the condition of their industries capable of being adapted to war-like purposes; to give a full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval programs; and not to exceed the armament limits proposed by the executive council and adopted by themselves except with the consent of the council,

The supercovenant of article 10 obligates these parties, including ourselves, to respect and to preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all league members. It is to be noted that this guaranty runs not alone to the existing territory of nations, but to any territorial extent to which they may hereafter attain. If, for example, any of the German colonies shall ultimately be incorporated into the territory of any of the parties, this guaranty will run to this extension. It should be here further observed that if there is a difference between the high contracting parties and the league, then it is high contracting parties, including ourselves, and not the whole league, which guarantee not only their own territorial integrity and independence but the territorial integrity and political independence of every other member of the league.

By article 12 the parties agree not to resort to war against any high contracting party over any dispute whatsoever until the matter has been submitted to arbitration or subjected to inquiry before the executive council, and not then until three months after a decision by either; and, further, not to resort to war in any event against any member of the league which complies with the award of arbitration. It may be remarked in passing two things are obvious: First, that this does not prevent but merely delays war by the high contracting parties, except that, second, if a member of the league obtaining the judgment before the arbitration tribunal or the council accepts the benefit of the judgment—as, of course, the winning party would all but universally do—then the losing party shall not under such circumstances go to war against the winning party.

Article 13 contains a narrower covenant to arbitrate difficulties with an undertaking to carry out the award in good faith.

By article 15 the high contracting parties agree to refer to the executive council any dispute not submitted to arbitration and likely to lead to rupture which may arise between States members of the league; "the parties" agree to communicate to the secretary general "statements of their case," with all relevant facts and papers, which the executive council shall forthwith direct to be published, and, further, that they will not go to war "with any party" which complies with any recommendation of the executive council which is unanimously concurred in by all members of the council except the parties to dispute. Seemingly they may go to war over a recommendation of the council which is not unanimously concurred in by all members of the council, except the parties in dispute. Finally, this article stipulates that the high contracting parties agree that if any party refuses to comply with any such recommendations so made the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to their decision.

Under article 16 it is agreed that if any of the high contracting parties breaks or disregards its covenants under article 12—the article in which the parties bind themselves not to go to war except under certain conditions—that then the parties shall subject the offenders to a severance of trade and financial relations and of intercource between nationals of the offending State or States, and to the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of offending States and the nationals of all other States. Moreover, the high contracting parties bind themselves mutually to support one another, first, in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under article 16 "in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience" resulting from the measures outlined in this article, and, second, in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by a covenant-breaking State.

In article 17 the parties agree that in disputes between members of the league and nonmembers thereof, or in disputes entirely among nonmembers, the involved nonmembers shall be invited "to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purpose of such dispute" upon conditions fixed by the executive council. If this invitation be accepted, the preceding provisions shall be applied with modifications deemed necessary by the league. If the power so invited refuses to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, and if such power takes against a league member any action which, if taken by such a member, would constitute a breach of article 12—that is the article which contains the covenant against a resort to war—then the provisions of article 16—the article which contains the sanction by which observance of article 12 is to be compelled—shall be applicable as against the unwilling State. With reference both to this article and to article 16, it should be recalled that it is the duty of the executive council in case the prescribed peaceful means of coercion do not suffice to bring the offending State to terms, "to recommend what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league."

By article 20 the high contracting parties undertake to endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor in member States and among nonmember States and agree to establish as part of the organization of the league a permanent bureau of labor—a somewhat drastic potential interference, not merely with our Federal but with our State powers as well.

In article 21 the high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all members, with special arrangements in regard to the necessities of regions devastated in the present war.

Under article 23 the high contracting parties agree that every treaty hereafter entered into shall be registered with the secretary-general, and that no such treaty shall be binding until so registered.

And by article 25, probably the third most important in the entire document, the high contracting parties agree that this covenant shall abrogate all obligations inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and that they will not enter into any other engagements which are thus inconsistent. In case any powers make, after entering the league, inconsistent obligations, they must take immediate steps to procure release from such obligations. In passing I raise this as a question of no little importance: Since the covenants of the league guarantee territorial integrity and political independence of league members, then a similar covenant between any two members of the league would probably be considered an inconsistent obligation; and if this be true, I invite the attention of the Senate to the possible abrogation of the Platt amendment treaty between ourselves and Cuba—a treaty heretofore regarded as indispensable to our national welfare and safety—in case both Cuba and the United States become members of the league.

The foregoing are the most important covenants which run in the name of the high contracting parties.

I wish now to direct your attention to the powers which run in the name of the league as such, and to renew my invitation that you consider well the differences between the two sets of covenants and powers, and to my question as to whether the plan contemplates two international entities, namely, the high contracting parties and the league.

By article 7 the league is to prescribe conditions of entry into it of the outcast States; by article 17 the league is to be intrusted with the general supervision of trade in arms and ammunition in countries where a control of the traffic of such is necessary to the common interest; by article 19 the league, assisted by the mandatory commission, is to insure an observance of all mandates; and by article 21 the league is to be the instrument through which the high contracting parties shall secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment of commerce of all members, together with special arrangements with regard to the necessities of regions devastated in the present war.

These are the sum total of the powers and obligations which in this covenant run to the league as such. How great the undertakings of the high contracting parties, how meager the obligations of the league itself is evident from this enumeration.

Nowhere is it more important to determine whether the high contracting parties are operating as an international entity than in the construction of article 11, which reads:

> Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

It is obvious that if the reservation of the right to take action under this article is to the high contracting parties as an entity, that they thereby have assumed jurisdiction of the world; whereas if the reservation of the right of the high contracting parties to take action is a reservation of the right to the nations as individuals, the whole proposition is a rope of sand.

And in considering all this it must be remembered that once we enter this league and assume these obligations, we can not secure any modification thereof except with the consent of all the States whose representatives compose the executive council and of three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates. What a magnificent field we would thus create for grandiose international political manipulation by ambitious men and groups!

With this analysis before us, we are now in a position to consider the application of the rules by which, in my judgment, this proposal must be tested:

First. Do its provisions abolish war and make it hereafter impossible? There is not an important article in the document which does not specifically answer that question "No." And, further, the scheme provided therein holds out a higher promise—nay, assurance—of a futuro world-wide war, greater than any which has gone before, than any other document in the history of recorded time.

I have already pointed out that the covenant provides for three sorts of States; first, "signatories" of the covenant; second, protocol States; and, third, outcast States, which I take it are the central powers and their allies.

Now, it is unnecessary to labor an argument to show that the inevitable result of outlawing the central States will be to drive them more closely together for mutual self-protection, and that this in turn will make the formation of a second league of nations almost an assured certainty. It may well be that this second league will not at the outset be constituted with all the formalities which mark the one we have under consideration, but in all human probability such a league will be somehow formed, by informal understanding or otherwise, and when so formed will bid for the adherence to it of neutral States. We would thus have in no distant future two great leagues of nations, which will become two great camps, each preparing for a new and greater life and death struggle. Our only escape from this result, under this plan, would be through the exercise of such a tyrannical despotism over the peoples of the central powers as we, with all our traditions and ideals, must not become a party to, for it would be violative of all of those human rights for which our fathers fought and which our own Constitution guarantees. Moreover, to keep peoples in such a state of subjection as would be necessary to obviate the result above pointed out, would require such an expenditure of effort, treasure, and blood as never would be permanently tolerated by our people. Thus the plan proposed, instead of being a plan by which the permanent peace of the world would be assured, becomes a plan under which a constant warfare or a potential great world-wide conflagration becomes an assured fact.

In other words, this plan, as the prescriptions of the document demonstrate, is in effect merely an offensive and defensive alliance between certain picked powers as between themselves, and a coalition among them as against the balance of the world, and this coalition is formed with an avowed and published purpose to impose upon the stranger powers the will of the coalition, not merely in matters relating to the prevention of war but in all other matters in which the conduct of the stranger powers affects the members of the coalition. This is tyranny, nothing more, nothing less. Has history ever answered an attempt to do this thing save in one way, and has that way ever spelled anything but disaster for the coalition? Is such a proposal not monstrous, and, if so, can it have our support? Must our every effort not be to avoid so dividing the world into two warring camps? In what respect will the situation so formed differ from that created by the centuries-old doctrine of balance of power, save only that now, for the first unhappy time in our history, we are to be placed in one side of the balance?

"But," it is said, "this is all merely potential, it may not happen, and therefore the league should not for that be condemned."

Grant this, for the sake of argument: What then?

In the first place, the league plan still regards war as legal and as possible in the following more obvious cases:

First. Under article 12, if two of the high contracting parties have a dispute which is submitted to arbitration and with the award of which neither party is satisfied, they may properly go to war after an interval of three months from the date of the award.

Second. Under the same article, if there is a like dispute between like parties, and the matter is submitted to the executive council, which makes a recommendation which neither party is willing to accept, then the parties may after three months properly go to war.

Third. Under article 15 if a dispute goes either to the executive council or the body of delegates, and either body gives a decision unanimous, except as to the parties in dispute, and this decision is unacceptable to both parties to the dispute, then they may legally go to war.

Fourth. It would seem, under the same article, that if neither the executive council nor the body of delegates can reach a decision which is unanimous except for the parties to the dispute, that then the parties thereto may legally go to war.

Fifth. All conflicts between States not members of the league would under the covenant appear to be legal under the covenant, though the league declares its right and intention to interfere in them if it desires.

Sixth. The high contracting parties may take a hand in any war under the stipulations of article 11, that "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations."

Seventh. Under the provisions of articles 17, 12, and 16, disputes between States members of the league and States not members of the league may lead to legal wars either between the two States themselves or between the disputants—one or both—and the league, or the high contracting parties.

In all of these cases the covenant recognizes the legality of a state of war. But the covenant goes way beyond this and provides for and requires that in certain far-reaching controversies the parties must go to war. Without attempting to spell out from this instrument the full number of cases in which war is mandatory, I confine myself to three:

First. By this document we, as one of the high contracting parties, obligate ourselves to preserve by force of arms, if necessary, the territorial integrity and political independence of all States members of the league.

Second. If any of the high contracting parties breaks or disregards its covenants under article 12—the covenant dealing with resort to arms—then, as a member of the league, we must fly to arms to protect the covenants.

Third. If any nonmember of the league, either accepting or not accepting the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of the dispute, acts in such way as would constitute a violation of article 12, if the State were a member of the league, then we must go to war to protect the covenants of the league.

And in all these three cases, whether or not we participate and the amount of our participation in belligerent operations is determined not by ourselves but by the executive council in which we have seemingly, at most, but one voice out of nine, no matter what we think of the merits of the controversy, no matter how we view the wisdom of a war over the cause, we are bound by this covenant to go to war when and in the manner the executive council determines. Thus it is seen that in this alleged instrument of peace war is legalized in seven cases and made compulsory in three.

And in this connection, as bearing upon our financial and economic burdens outside those connected with carrying on our share of the war, I ask your consideration of the last paragraph of article 16, by which "the high contracting parties agree further that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under this article, in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures." What our contributions will be under this, how much our citizens must be ground down by taxes to take care of wild and extravagant expenditures which we did not and would not initiate and over which we would have no control, only an all-wise Providence can foresee.

Thus the proposed covenant, instead of abolishing war, actually sanctions, breeds, and commands it. Moreover, it absolutely requires that every future war shall be a potential world war, and that we shall be an active participant in every such war. We are thus thrust fully into the terrible cauldron of European politics, and every outbreak in the Balkans—even domestic, if it threaten international war—will call for some expenditure of treasure, for some shedding of American blood, for some loss of American life. It is idle to say and fatuous to hope or believe these outbreaks will not occur, for ambitious men do not hesitate to waste life in order to punish an enemy or gain a goal.

The plan, therefore, fails to meet the first test.

We come now to the second question I proposed: Do the provisions of the proposed covenant strike down the precepts of the Constitution? A mere listing of some of the more conspicuous provisions of each show that it does.

Under the Constitution the Congress of the United States has the exclusive power to declare war. The proposed covenant puts the power of declaring war in the hands of the executive council, in which, it is true, we have a voice but not the constitutional voice. Thus, whether Congress wishes or not, whether the people wish or not, we may be forced into war, with all its sacrifices of life, in a cause in which we have no real concern and with which we may be out of sympathy, under the penalty that if we do not go to war we shall, by breaking a covenant of the league, bring war upon ourselves by the balance of the world.

Under the Constitution the Congress of the United States has the exclusive power to raise and support armies and to provide and maintain a Navy. The covenant provides that the executive council shall formulate plans limiting the size of our Army and Navy, that the council shall then "determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and these limits when adopted shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council."

If we act in good faith under this agreement we shall, of course, adopt the armament limits, which, as a member of the executive council, we shall have assisted in formulating. Thereafter, no matter what our necessity or what its urgency, no matter what Congress or the people themselves may think the situation requires, we can not raise a single man beyond our limit save and except it be approved by the executive council in which we are one of nine participating States. If war were abolished this might be tolerable, but with war legalized even between members of the league and actually commanded in certain contingencies this may spell for us overwhelming disaster.

Under the Constitution, a treaty becomes effective upon its ratification, following the advice and consent thereto of the Senate. Under the covenant no treaty becomes binding until it has been registered with the secretary-general of the league.

It seems reasonably certain, moreover, that situations calling for unconstitutional action by this Government might arise under the provisions of article 16 relating to financial and economic measures of support and article 20 relating to freedom of transit and equitable treatment for commerce, because under these provisions the league might demand the making of laws which in the sound discretion of Congress ought not to be made and yet Congress might find itself under the compelling force of war with the entire league to enact such legislation. And next to the powers of war, no powers are more far-reaching or vital than those which control the financial and economic life of the Nation.

One other matter demanding consideration, the question of mandates, may be appropriately dealt with here. The provisions of the covenant relating to this subject are so loosely drawn, purposely or otherwise, that one can not tell just how the mandatory States are to be selected. It is true that, with reference to the communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire, it is stated that the wishes of the communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power, but this provision is not made as to any of the other colonies or territories for which provision is to be made, and this notwithstanding the principle of self-determination adopted, as have been reported in the press, by all the powers now in conference. Are the mandatory States to be chosen by the high contracting parties, by the members of the league, by the body of delegates, or by the executive council? Or is the State protected, for stripped of the new-day verbiage a protectorate is really provided for, other than the Turkish Empire communities, to indicate or to pick out from the league membership or from States not league members or from the high contracting parties that particular State which the protected State wishes as a protector? It is clear, however, that the protecting State, the mandatory, will have in the matter no choice or voice other than that which it exercises in the body of delegates or in the executive council or as a member of the high contracting parties, whichever makes the choice. But no matter who picks the mandatory power, clearly some one beside ourselves has the power to say whether and when our boys and how many of them shall be sent to the arid regions of Armenia, or to the sleeping-death regions of central Africa, or to the wildernesses of southwest Africa, or to the inhospitable South Pacific Isles, and when they get there it will be somebody else besides ourselves who will determine how long they shall remain, by what laws they shall govern the people, and what shall be their measure and rules of protection. For it is clear—that is as clear as the covenant makes anything—that the terms of the protectorate are to be determined not by and between the protecting and protected States, but by the high contracting parties or they failing by the executive council in a special act or charter.

Moreover, it seems a matter of certain deduction that as parties other than ourselves are to determine the size of the army of occupation which we shall send, the methods and nature of its operations, the length of time it shall remain there, the rules and principles by which it shall govern the peoples of the occupied territory, and the kind and extent of the upbuilding work which shall be performed by the protecting State, then somebody else besides ourselves must decide how many billions—for we speak now only in such terms—we shall wring from our own people by taxation and spend in the territory over which he have been made mandatory, perhaps against not only our own free desires but the will of the protected peoples themselves.

I take it to be unnecessary to point out how destructive all these things would be of our Constitution, which lodges in the Congress the power to raise and equip armies, to raise revenue, and make appropriations—in both matters solely in accordance with the discretion of Congress, and which lodges in the National Executive the power to control and direct the operations of any army in the field, including the power to lay down the rules which shall operate and control between the occupying army and the inhabitants of the territory occupied.

Thus this covenant will, if it becomes operative, strike down most vital provisions of our Constitution, and here again it fails to meet the test.

I am now to the third question I have put: Are the provisions of the proposed covenant destructive of our sovereignty?

Cast up in your mind the collosal powers granted to the executive council, in which, be it always remembered, we are but one of nine participating powers; recall the far-reaching and vital covenants into which we shall enter as one of the high contracting parties; and hold in mind that we are to give up the power to say when we shall have war, when peace, what shall our Army number, how many vessels of war shall we have, how, when, where, and under what conditions shall our Army and Navy be used, when shall our treaties be binding, what shall our treatment of commerce be, how great shall our gift of funds to other powers, and, therefore, how great the tribute we shall pay? Consider all these, and you can not but say that our sovereignty has in matters of national life and death been destroyed.

Pause, Mr. President, and consider what it is proposed to do—to take from the social organism not alone the right but the power of self-defense. We shall stand not only naked but bound and helpless.

Why, sir, it is contrary to the eternal course of nature, exhibited in all her works since the dawn of time, for a defenseless organism to survive, whether that organism be plant, animal, or social. How, then, shall we hope to live?

I come now to the fourth and last of my tests: Will this plan, if put into operation, threaten our national independence and life?

Judged by all the standards of the past, by history and by experience, we must answer that it does.

It threatens our life in respect of all those matters in which our sovereignty is impaired, because when sovereignty goes, life as a nation goes. Independence goes when our conduct is dictated by others, when our continued existence depends upon the will of others, when we are no longer able to avail ourselves of our wonted means of defense, actual or by anticipation.

That under this plan our conduct is dictated by others can not be gainsaid when we recall that we may be launched into a world-wide war without the power of determining what our participation shall be, either in men, armament, or money. That our continued existence depends on the will of others is clear from the fact that, disarmed by the mandate of the league, we shall not be permitted to increase our armament save by the consent of the executive council, no matter how great or pressing the emergency or the danger.

That we may no longer avail ourselves of our wonted means of defense, actual or by anticipation, is not to be successfully denied, as one illustration will suffice to show.

It was Thomas Jefferson who said, "Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs." On this latter principle Monroe announced later the doctrine which bears his name, namely, "We should consider any attempt on their part—the part of European powers—to extend their systems to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety"; and, "We could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them—the young American Republics—or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States." It was Secretary Olney who said, "To-day the United States is practically sovereign on this continent and its fiat is law upon the subjects to which it confines its interposition."

To say that the elaborate plan now before us which contemplates and provides for the mastery of the world does not run counter to these announced principles, is to be blind to the plainest meaning of plain language. Moreover, to contend that this great doctrine, which embodies a vital principle of policy not a mere tenet of international rule or law is saved by the vague and general prescriptions of the covenant preamble or by the poorly worded declarations of article 1, is either to convict of a failure to understand the question or of a deliberate attempt to impose on the credulity of those who have not had opportunity to read the document themselves. No. Mr. President, if we adopt this plan we take from the Monroe doctrine its life, we do not longer control the destinies of America, and the great national security which for a century has thereby come to us, has gone, perhaps forever.

Thus the plan fails to meet each and every of the tests I have applied. It does not abolish or prevent wars and it does sanction and commend them. It does strike down great constitutional principles, bulwarks of our protection. It does rob us of the most vital attributes of sovereignty. It does threaten our independence and life.

Why, then, and I ask it in all sincerity, this feverish anxiety for the adoption of this plan? Why is there this racing up and down over the face of the whole land by propagandists urging its adoption? What benefit is to come from such a sale of country as is urged upon us? Who are the beneficiaries of this betrayal of our people? No nation threatens us; no group of nations seeks our destruction; never before were we relatively so strong. War itself, the great curse of mankind, is further away to-day than it has been in centuries. Have we shown ourselves recreant when the world labors big with potential disaster? Let our billions of treasure poured out as from perpetual fountains, our tens of thousands of young lives nobly sacrificed in a great cause, answer. Has famine failed to appeal to us? Count the millions of tons of food we send to feed the starving. Have we been deaf to the cry of the oppressed? Count our young men in France. Have we failed to love liberty and humanity better than life itself? Ask the mothers whose sons lie on the battlefields of Europe.

Can we not be trusted again to come to the rescue when again popular government, civilization, and human right threaten to be overwhelmed? I challenge any man or nation to say nay. Why, then, this plan to strangle and crush us? Mr. President, there is here something amiss. We stand here in the Senate of the United States, and soberly and anxiously, debate, plan, and consider, not as did our fathers before us, on how can we best preserve and augment our liberties and make ourselves and our posterity free men, but on the dark and gloomy problem, what is the greatest bondage which we can put on our backs and live.

"But," we are told, "look at the mighty wastage, the sorrow, the suffering and agony, the slavery, and the death of this great universal war—is there not some way to prevent the world from being again so cursed? Our industrial and economic relations we can cover by separate trade agreements with individual countries, but can we not do something to avert the horrors of war?"

Yes; there are ways, some of them simple and well tried.

One way is to provide for the compulsory arbitration of all disputes under some such plan as that provided for in the international prize court, or the unratified American-British and American-French arbitration treaties of 1911, or the Olney-Pauncefote treaty of 1897, or a union of the best in all of them.

We need not worry about the enforcement of the awards of the arbitral court, for I recall no case between great powers in which an award made has not either been carried out as given or has not led to an adjustment mutually satisfactory to both parties. We may forget armed force in this and look to the reign of law and order. If small States should be recalcitrant as between themselves, means of persuasion can be found that will satisfy all needs.

This will adjust peacefully the great bulk of our disputes, including questions of territorial extent and thus prevent war. we had the proud privilege, by the Jay treaty of 1794 with Great Britain, to usher in "the modern era of arbitration." From then till the present, almost a century and a quarter, arbitration has saved us from all but three relatively small international wars, barring this last, and compulsory arbitration might have saved us even this. Let us not discard or think lightly of arbitration as a means of preventing war.

A second way would be this: If we feel that world interests and power are reshaping in such way that we need to be protected and that we need to protect others, then let us form an alliance with the strongest other power or two powers of the world for mutual protection. That we be not thrown into quarrels in which we would have no sympathy, we must choose as our allies those powers whose traditions, institutions, ideals, and people are most like our own. If we are as ready to fight for them as we will be—under the present supposition—to have them fight for us, let us make this as strong an alliance as can be written, because from a shadowy one we shall have all the disadvantages and few of the advantages of a strong one. In either event, such a definite understanding between ourselves and our allies will obviously and inevitably drive the balance of the world into a counteralliance, which can not but bring trouble in the future.

Or, in the third place, if the people of the United States—not a clamorous part of them, but a great majority—desire to establish a true league of nations; if they feel either the need or the desirability of creating an organization to stop war and not merely to build a coalition to further trade or to preserve and expand territorial possessions; and if so feeling, and to this end they are willing, to make the present necessary sacrifice in independence and sovereignty and the inevitable future sacrifice of untold American treasure and life, then we may proceed as follows:

At a convenient and proper time in the relatively near future we shall cooperate with the representatives of all the other powers in the formation among all, not a portion, of the nations of the world an international league. Among the first articles of the constitution which shall create this league should be one which shall provide that war is thereby declared to be an international crime and that any nation engaging in war, except in self-defense when actually attacked, shall be punished by the world as a international criminal.

This constitution should also provide that all disputes relating to international matters as defined by an international code should be decided by an international court.

The code would define what war is and would discriminate between aggressive and defensive war, between assault and protection, and would outlaw one and not the other, for no system of law ever enacted or wisely projected has penalized self-defense by man or by State. Existence ceases when the right and power of self-defense is gone.

This code would also provide that one nation could not summon another before the international court, except in respect to a matter of international and common concern to the contending nations, and that the jurisdiction of the court would not extend to matters of governmental policy, which would be excluded from arbitration unless one of the disputing parties had by treaty or otherwise given another country a claim that might involve these subjects. Under such a code we would not be called upon to arbitrate the policy involved in our Monroe doctrine, our conservation policy, our immigration policy, our right to expel aliens, our right to repel invasion, our right to maintain military and naval establishments, or coaling stations within our own borders or elsewhere, as the protection and development of this country might demand, our right to make necessary fortification of the Panama Canal, or on our frontiers, our right to discriminate between natives and foreigners in respect to rights of property and citizenship, and other matters of like character.

The international court should be authorized by the league constitution to call upon the powers signatory to enforce its decrees and awards as against unwilling States by force, economic pressure, or otherwise.

The court should sit in the hemisphere of the contending nations; and if the disputants lived in opposite hemisphere, then in the hemisphere of the defendant power.

The constitution should further provide that if it were necessary to enforce a decree against an American power refusing to follow the decree of the court that such decree should be enforced by the countries of this hemisphere; that if a decree of the court must be enforced against a country of the Eastern Hemisphere, then it should be by such means and methods and by such forces and powers as the court and the powers of that hemisphere should decide.

A league framed on these broad lines would carry with it a minimum of loss of our sovereignty; it would relieve us from participation in the broils of Europe; it would preserve the Monroe doctrine and save America from the results of European aggression and intrigue; it would reduce to the minimum the causes of war; and would make the waging thereof otherwise than in self-defense when attacked a public crime, punishable by the combined forces of the world.

But, Mr. President, these are not the problems which now press urgently upon us. As I have recently proposed to the Senate, let us have an end of all this. Let the discussion of a league of nations be postponed for later consideration not alone by the victorious belligerents but by all the nations if and when at some future time a general conference on this subject may be both possible and useful. Professing as we do to have all humanity for our concern, let us not in our league outlaw a great part of the civilized world. Let us see to it that this league which is to usher in a reign of righteousness upon the earth shall comprise all peoples that dwell upon it, including our regenerated, democratized enemy.

Meanwhile our cobelligerents need have no anxiety, for so surely as the sun rises if the Hun flood again threatened to engulf the world, we shall again be found fighting for the right, with the same complete accord and cooperation as in the past, all for the defense of civilization.

And why should this be our course, because, Mr. President, a million and a half of our boys are marking time in Europe, waiting patiently, anxiously, their eyes turned across the water, for the signing of the treaty of peace that shall allow them to return to the homeland, to the family hearths which need them and which they need. How much longer shall their return wait on academic discussion of unattainable dreams? How much longer shall they for this suffer exposure and hardship and endure disease? How many more of them must die "over there"? While the Hun thrust forth his cruel, bloodthirsty hulk, they gladly abode there and gave their all, even to life itself, but now that he cowers, like a whipped cur in his kennel, they feel that their work is finished. They want to come home.

Remembering what they have given, what they were willing to give, and what their dead comrades have given; remembering the wan-faced waiting mothers, wives, and children; remembering the wrack, the weariness, and the heartache of it all, we must find a way to grant their scant but deep-felt wish.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am going to make a very few remarks on the pending measure, the mineral leasing bill, which is now before the Senate, because the time is limited within which to vote upon the measure.

I realize, as does each Member of the Senate, that under the peculiar rules of this body any two or three Senators may kill a bill toward the end of any session of Congress. It is a rule that is not founded in reason. It is a rule that is disgusting to the people of this country and undemocratic. It is a rule that no man of progressive tendencies has a right to utilize; and yet I am not saying but that it has become so general in this body that no one is subject to criticism in using it. The fact, however, is that by reason of the unlimited debate upon any subject that is permitted in this body, we find now that when the constitutional duration of this Congress is about to expire there are eight or nine great governmental measures that have been agreed to by both Houses of Congress that are about to die because Senators have it in their power to defeat the will of Congress by unlimited debate.

I am not saying this in the way of a criticism of the distinguished Senator who has just closed, because he has only followed the practice that others have followed. He has made an able contribution to this discussion. He was probably, from his standpoint, entitled to take up the time by reason of the fact that others had spoken on the subject. Nevertheless, we have but a few hours left of this Congress, and the great bills that are necessary to support this Government, to maintain our Army and our Navy, are dying. It is for that reason that I asked of those having charge of bills that will follow this bill to permit us, with regard to this great measure, a small period of time.

Immediately following this measure will be the bond bill, the passage of which is essential to the power of the Government to sell bonds to bring home our troops, and other necessary matters. The Senator in charge of that bill has consented not to move to take up that bill until this conference report has had four hours' consideration. I will say that it was a concession to those who are seeking the passage of this bill. I know that had he come in here this morning and moved to take up the bond bill a majority of the Senators in this body would have voted to take it up. It would have ended the conference report on the general mineral leasing bill. I am stating that for the reason that I know that at the end of four hours the Senator in charge of the bond bill, so-called, will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bond bill. I am confident that that motion will carry.

I will not oppose that motion, although I know the result will be that the Senate will take up that bill and displace this bill forever, unless it is voted on prior to that time.

This is a conference report. This is legislation that is completed. This is a bill that has carried, by 207 to 109 votes, in the House of Representatives. There are 65 votes in this body committed to vote for the conference report. It is a more liberal bill than has three times passed this body and three times passed the House on the same subject; but this is the first time that the two Houses have gotten together on the bill. There were five conferees appointed from each body. Nine out of those 10 men agreed to this bill. The only one who did not agree to this bill, who did not sign the conference report or authorize the signing of it, was the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whose objection to the bill is that its provisions are too drastic, if anything, and that he is opposed to leasing as a principle——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I know the Senator does not want to state anything but just what the facts are.

Mr. PITTMAN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that there was virtually an understanding, an agreement, reached that one-half of the royalties collected should go to the State. Now, is not that a fact?

Mr. PITTMAN. Is that the only objection the Senator has?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the greatest objection.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is that the only objection?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not the only objection, but I do not want to take the time of the Senate now to refer to the others. I have had only a few minutes to explain the matter, but I do not want to take another moment of time on it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not want to misstate the Senator's position.

Mr. SMOOT. Another thing that I said on the floor of the Senate the other day was this: The Senate, when it passed the bill, had in it a provision for a minimum rate, and a maximum rate of 50 per cent. That is entirely changed now. The Senator must admit that when we had that bill before the Senate it was virtually agreed that those two provisions would remain in the bill, and yet both of them went out; and I think they are very vital points.

Mr. PITTMAN. That sustains exactly what I said, so I shall not have to comment any further. The Senate limited the amount of the royalties the Government could charge. We have taken out that limit. The Senator from Utah is not satisfied.

Mr. SMOOT. That limit was 50 per cent.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that is exactly what I said. The bill is now more favorable to the Government than it was.

Now, let me say this: There have been attacks on this bill, and yet they have not been specific. I should like to have some one point out wherein this bill is unjust to the Government. Why, you find articles in the Christian Science Monitor attacking this bill in general terms, and yet it is evident that the person who wrote the article never saw the bill. You find resolutions here from some society attacking the bill; and yet, if you will read the resolutions, you will know that those adopting the resolutions never read the bill. That character of propaganda should cease to have effect upon Congress. They say they are in favor of a leasing bill. Every provision in this bill is a leasing provision. It provides that all of the coal, gas, oil, phosphate, and sodium lands now withdrawn and owned by the United States shall be disposed of and operated under leases.

There is not a provision in this bill for the sale of any oil, gas, phosphate, or sodium lands. Not only is it a straight leasing bill in regard to those minerals, but it allows the Government to take just as much of the profit as it chooses, or all the profit if it sees fit. There is no limit to the amount of rent that the Government may charge for these lands.

What is the complaint against it? I want to put in the RECORD, without reading, from the House hearings on the bills H. R. 3232 and S. 2812, the proposal of the Department of the Interior and the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS ON H. R. 3232 AND S. 2812.

DEPARTMENTAL PROPOSAL AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE RELIEF SECTION OF H. R. 3232 AS IT APPEARS ON PAGE 12, SECTION 12, BEGINNING WITH THE PROVISO IN LINE 24, AND THE REMAINING PORTION OF THE PARAGRAPH ON PAGE 13.

That any claimant who, either in person or through his predecessor in interest, entered upon any of the lands embraced within the Executive order of withdrawal dated September 27, 1909, prior to July 3, 1910, honestly and in good faith for the purpose of prospecting for oil or gas, and thereupon commenced discovery work thereon, and thereafter prosecuted such work to a discovery of oil or gas, shall be entitled to lease from the United States any producing oil or gas well resulting from such work at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the oil and gas produced therefrom, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, but without the right to drill any other or additional wells: Provided, That such claimant shall first pay to the United States an amount equal to not less than the value of one-eighth of all the oil and gas already produced from such well: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any well involved in any suit brought by the United States, or in any application for patent, unless within 90 days after the approval of this act the claimant shall relinquish to the United States all rights claimed by him in such suit or application: And provided further, That all such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas already produced shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations.

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

JANUARY 8, 1918.

Mr. PITTMAN. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading the leasing provision of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled; and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

OIL AND GAS.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the uncentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eighth in amount of value of the production, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

SEC. 18. Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just.

SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert-land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to the time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

Mr. PITTMAN. Having that in the RECORD, I challenge anyone to show that there is any difference between the proposals submitted by the department or the Government and that adopted with regard to the Navy. I defy anyone to show that there is any difference between the proposition submitted by the department and that agreed to in this bill outside of the naval reserve. Inside of the naval reserve only the wells are leased because they ought not to hold the oil in the ground. Outside of the naval reserve the aim is production, and there they have lease to the land.

In discussing the provision I have just had inserted in the RECORD, which was submitted to the Committee on the Public Lands of the House with a recommendation, I will read from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of February 27, 1919, which was put in the RECORD the other day:

I did agree with the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior upon a provision sometime ago that would protect the naval reserves and would confer upon the President power to operate the going wells. I did this because I did not wish to assume to be standing in the way of the passage of legislation of importance, which I favored, and I write you because I hope you will correct the impression that I have changed in my attitude. I believe that the naval interests require that whatever in the naval reserves belongs to the Navy by law should go to the Navy, though the final matter should be settled by the courts, unless the provision referred to, which the Attorney General and myself agreed to sometime ago, is incorporated. I think it would be a great mistake to go further than that. I will be glad if you make my position known.

The provision requested by the Secretary of the Navy has been incorporated in this bill. I have inserted in the RECORD the exact agreement of the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of the Interior, so that you may see what each proposes and what the committee have agreed to; and each Senator may form his own opinion as to whether or not there is ground for complaint.

It is a waste of time for us to argue whether this report agrees with that or not. You can read it and you will see that the language is practically identical. But I can right now hear the argument being made that "you added to what the Secretary of the Navy suggested." How? The President of the United States, if he sees fit in the interest of the Government to require more development in the naval reserve, shall have the right to permit sinking additional oil wells. That was not suggested in the first place by the Secretary of the Navy, because the Secretary of the Navy forgot that you had to develop land to get oil. That is the change.

There is still an addition to the proposition by the Secretary of the Navy, and that is, if the Government does lease any of that land in the naval reserve, these men, to whom the wells are leased, shall be entitled to a preference right of lease upon the same terms and conditions that are established for bidders for the land. That is all there is to this whole language.

I am going to surrender the floor now, although I have had charge of this bill. I am going to surrender it so that the remaining time may be taken by those who oppose the bill. I do not intend to speak any more unless Senators may desire to ask me questions. I ask permission now to have inserted as a part of my remarks the bill as reported by the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon National Park, and the Mount Olympus National Monument, but excluding those in other national parks and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas to municipalities.

COAL.

SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, exclusive of those in Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair: Provided, That improvements or development work of the aggregate value of not less than $8 per acre upon the coal lands so entered shall be made or done upon the lands annually for two years after such award, when patent shall issue therefor. Upon failure to comply with the terms of this section within the required period said lands shall be subject to entry by any other qualified applicant.

No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area, at any one time, nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation, or stockholder of such corporation, shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition and not longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

That any person, association, corporation, member of such association, or stockholder of such corporation who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not exceeding two years, or both.

That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General in the courts for the purpose.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, outside of the Territory of Alaska, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract, and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time, upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term "railroad" or "common carrier" as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier, but shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases or holdings through the surrender of the original leases or holdings and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

SEC. 6. That where coal lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease sections or parts of sections which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use, but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporation: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

PHOSPHATES.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

SEC. 10. That each lease or sale shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of public lands, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

OIL AND GAS.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed, the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits, not more than five in number, may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eighth in amount of value of the production, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

SEC. 18. Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to but not in excess of said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just.

SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to the time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

OIL SHALE.

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the survey of public lands. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid location to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1918, shall, upon the relinquishment of such location, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section, for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil-shale bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

SEC. 21. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, or his successors or assigns, who prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases in Alaska under this act, whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise, shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

SODIUM.

SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Cal.

SEC. 23. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 22 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting limit, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the preference right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 22 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease or sale, and may be leased or sold by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including convenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development, and minimum production, and a patentee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

SEC. 24. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

SEC. 26. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases, and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18 and 19 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines or railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same.

SEC. 27. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves, of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

SEC. 28. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made, it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

SEC. 29. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent, surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

SEC. 30. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

SEC. 32. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

SEC. 33. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

SEC. 34. That all moneys received from sales, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserve shall be deposited in the Treasury as "miscellaneous receipts."

SEC. 35. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws.

Mr. HARDWICK obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that I do not intend to take a minute, but I do not want it to appear because I have not made a speech that I shrank from the challenge that was issued by the Senator. If it can be done, I am perfectly willing that the conference report shall be adopted, and not a minute of time shall be taken by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, for a few brief moments, and possibly for the last time in my career here, I crave the indulgence of the Senate while I undertake to present as briefly and as compactly as I may what I regard as the most momentous issue that has ever confronted the American people since that July day in 1776 when our fathers declared to all the world that these United States are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States.

It is my purpose to discuss the proposition generally known as the league of nations, to endeavor to present to the Senate and to the people of this country, as far as my voice may reach and carry, exactly what I believe, with all my heart and soul, this proposal means to the people of America.

Mr. President, at this moment we are standing in a twilight zone between peace and war, with no fighting in progress, with no cannon sounding, with no armed hostilities in progress, and yet with no peace officially and legally declared and determined upon. I submit to the calm thought and sober judgment of the people of this country first that the most important duty of the commissioners who represent the United States of America at the peace conference is to speedily conclude a just and honorable peace with our late adversaries, to bring us out of this twilight zone, to bring our boys home once more, and to let this great peaceable and peace-loving Nation speedily and completely resume its peaceful vocations and its peaceful work.

I thought, sir, at the beginning of this session, that the first and most important service the American Congress could render to the American people would be to repeal at once every one of the great war measures that had been adopted under the stress of war conditions, that were in violation of the genius and spirit of our institutions, and that were in derogation of the fundamental propositions upon which this great Government of the free rests.

With that view in mind, on the very first day it was my honor and privilege to attend this session, I introduced several bills to accomplish that purpose, to repeal the espionage law adopted under stress of war conditions, and I think and thought then unnecessarily, but to repeal it now that peace has come once more, and to repeal many of the great war measures that had given to the Government of the United States for the purpose of prosecuting the war great powers that are utterly inconsistent with the genius of our institutions and with the form and structure of the American Government itself in ordinary peace times. Unfortunately, these bills have not been acted upon.

While these great questions are in no sense partisan, while they strike to the very root of fundamentals and appeal to Americanism rather than to partisanship, I do not hesitate to say to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber that in my judgment you have committed the most serious mistake that men instrusted with power, representing a great party, ever committed when you did not repeal these measures at once, as soon as your President had negotiated the armistice and had notified us officially that the war was at an end. You waited, you elected to wait, until the 4th day of March should come. You elected to wait until the Republicans were given power, in the most remarkable election ever held in any country, when the administration that had conducted a great war to a glorious and successful climax was yet repudiated, at the very moment of its victory, at the polls by the people of America. Confronted with that knowledge and with that knowledge in your minds, you deliberately elected to wait until the 4th of March should come and the Republicans, our friends on the opposite side of this Chamber, given power as a result of that election, should proceed to restore the rights and liberties of American citizens and to bring the country back to a normal peace basis again.

However that may be, it is not pertinent to this discussion. The water that has passed turns no wheels. If we made a mistake along that line we can not remedy it now. I merely mention it to show you the importance of our proceding at once, without an instant's delay, to make a satisfactory and reasonable and just treaty of peace with our late adversaries in this war and to restore this great Nation to the paths of peace once more and permanently.

Mr. President, there ought not to be coupled with the conclusion of peace any other proposition on this earth whatever as an international legislative rider. We have seen the mischief wrought in the two Houses of Congress with legislation on that score and from that practice. The peace treaty ought to be made speedily, completely, and then if another and further proposal relating to permanent peace throughout the world, an object that all good men desire, is to be considered, that ought to be considered on its own merits and without delaying the consummation of that peace which the world so devoutly desires and so urgently needs.

We come now to a consideration of the proposal embodied in the so-called constitution of the league of nations that has been framed by the committee having the matter in charge and reported to the body of representatives of the entente powers who are engaged in preliminary meetings with each other before the convening of the official peace conference.

Mr. President, I expect to demonstrate to the Senate of the United States three main propositions; at least it is to be my endeavor to do so to-day. First, that the league of nations as proposed, instead of keeping this country out of war and keeping the world out of war, is far more likely to lead this country into war and keep the entire world at war than not.

Second, that in at least four particulars the proposed constitution of a league of nations violates the fundamental and organic law of this land, the Constitution of the United States. No Senator can support it as long as the oath which he took at yonder desk remains in his memory, unless he believes that the Constitution of the United States is no longer of vital living force and has no longer a standing either in the forum of law or morals.

I propose to show that the proposed constitution of a league of nations delegates to that body the power conferred by the Constitution of the United States on the Congress, first, to provide an army and a navy for the country; second, to declare war and to decide when war is to be declared; third, it limits the treaty-making power provided in the Constitution by delegating some of the functions of that power to the league of nations composed in major part of the representatives of foreign and alien powers; and, fourth, that there are certain provisions in this constitution of the league of nations that are utterly violative of the provisions of the tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which propose to delegate to the league of nations powers that the Congress itself has not, powers that belong to the States and that are expressly reserved to them and their people under the written terms of the Constitution of the United States.

I propose to show, Mr. President, in the third place, that the proposed league of nations not only is violative of the Constitution of the United States but it violates the basic and fundamental principles upon which this Government of the people was formed, and that it violates traditional and correct American policies from the beginning of the Government up to this present moment, or certainly up to the very recent past.

The strength of this proposal before the people rests upon one proposition, and just one, and that is the anxiety of every right-thinking man and woman throughout this country and throughout the world to promote the cause of universal peace and to prevent the recurrence of wars. But for that sentiment and but for a vague, undefined, loose belief, incapable of either exact definition or accurate expression, in the minds and on the tongues of many people, there would not be a scintilla of support for this proposition anywhere in the United States.

It is not remarkable that that should be true either in this country or in Europe or throughout the world. We are standing at the close of the greatest war this world has ever seen; a war that cost the nations engaged in it 7,000,000 lives of men killed on the battle field and 6,000,000 more men who are utterly and permanently destroyed, utterly useless and helpless, although not dead. It cost the world $167,000,000,000, represented and reflected in the increase of the debt of all the great nations that fought in it on one side or the other.

Under circumstances like these, although fortunately in the providence of Almighty God the American blood loss was not heavy, comparatively and relatively speaking, it is not strange that every right-thinking man and every right-thinking woman throughout this country ardently desires that whatever practical thing can be done with reason and with safety, with common sense and with ordinary prudence, shall be done in order to prevent a repetition of this awful carnage; in order to prevent their sons being sent in some future war into the depths of another hell. They are right, everlastingly right; and it is the duty of this Nation and of every civilized and particularly of every Christian nation, practicing the doctrines and invoking the name of the Prince of Peace, to do everything that reasonable men, prudent men, and practical men can do which will tend to remove this danger from the future and which will tend to keep this country and all other countries, as far as may be, out of war.

But I assert, Mr. President, in spite of many assertions to the contrary from high authority, that this league of nations as proposed, as it now stands, instead of keeping us out of war will put us in every war of the world for all time to come, if we live up to the covenants and agreements that we assume when we sign it; and no honorable and high-minded person can contend that we ought to sign or become a party to it unless we intend in good faith to live up to the contracts and covenants which it contains.

I am not going to undertake a complete and thorough analysis of this constitution as a whole. It has been done by other men far more able to do it than I. You can take the able speech that the Senate heard this morning from the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. It will live in the history of this discussion, in the consideration of this question, as one of the most luminous and forceful and convincing analyses that any mortal man can make of the questions involved in this matter. The Senator from Pennsylvania and I differ as radically as two men can and are as apart as the poles can be on most questions of ordinary politics, but I confess it is a matter of regret to me that the country can not have at Paris in this emergency, at this crisis, the services of such distinguished, able, and well-equipped statesmen, Americans, as the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] instead of having unknown and untried people like Col. House, for instance, and Barney Baruch, whoever he may be—— [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the gallery will be in order. The rules of the Senate prohibit demonstration in the galleries. It is the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule. The occupants of the galleries, I trust, will not abuse the privilege of the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Without undertaking, especially after the splendid analysis of this document as a whole given by the Senator from Pennsylvania this morning, to submit a complete analysis of it, I wish to emphasize in connection with the point I have particularly in mind certain provisions of the constitution of the league of nations.

Article 11 of the constitution pledges the United States, if it signs it, to any action that the league may deem wise and effective whenever war occurs anywhere or is threatened anywhere. Let a war occur in the Balkans between Serbia and Montenegro, let us say, for the purposes of illustration, and that is not an impossibility nor even an improbability; if a dozen or so men, all of them except one a foreigner, all of them except one an alien as far as this country is concerned, determine that we ought to take one side or the other, to whatever extent those men say you have got to conscript—because that policy seems to be well established now in this country and in its legislative development—American boys from the farm and the factory and the foundry and the workshop and the bank and the store and everywhere else, and send them over to do what these men say is right about a Balkan boundary line.

Not only that, but if no war actually breaks out, if one is threatened only, and unless we are misinformed by the current press wars are being threatened even now in more than one quarter of the world, then if this league of nations, acting first and primarily through its executive council and secondly and as a last resort through the body of delegates itself, determines that one or the other party to this dispute which threatens war is wrong, we are to send our boys so conscripted and take whatever side these men determine is right. If any member of this league of nations declines to arbitrate any dispute or fails to abide by any award as provided in article 12 of the constitution of the league of nations, then under the provisions of article 16 of that same instrument—and I quote now the language—

Such conduct is ipso facto an act of war.

Such conduct is ipso facto an act of war, and every member of the league must enter the war under such terms as may be prescribed either by the executive council or by the body of delegates.

Let me illustrate what might well happen. Suppose our sister Republic of Mexico should make a claim before this league of nations or its executive council that some 60 or 70 years ago we went down on a little freebooting expedition, waging war upon her, taking away great areas of her territory, Texas and New Mexico and California and Arizona; that it was a gross injustice, and that they are entitled to have these territories restored; and suppose we then said: "We will not arbitrate such a question," or if we did arbitrate it and the award went against us, then we should decline to submit to it, then under this constitution of the league of nations every member of this league would be bound to wage war against us in order to take back what we took away from Mexico in the forties.

Article 16 not only provides for the carrying out of these awards by military force, but it provides also for a commercial blockade, and that is really the first and primary way of dealing with it if any nation fails to comply with the conditions of any award. I can without any very great stretch of imagination conceive very well what may happen in such a contingency. If England was the party that had this blockade declared against her—I do not suppose that is very probable as a practical proposition, when I consider how the British delegates have the real control of the league; but if it did happen, then what would become of the cotton planter of the South? He would be deprived of his most profitable customer, he would have to do without the principal customer that we have for the great staple of the South. So it is if this commercial blockade were declared against any power that was any considerable customer for our cotton or wheat or any of the great American products of agriculture or mining or manufacture. We would find it causing here at home all sorts of unanticipated and unsurmountable trouble.

I think the best thing to do is for this country to continue to control her own commercial policy according to her own idea of what is right and best.

Under article 16 it is provided that whenever any member of the league does not go into this arbitration proceeding or this appeal to the league of nations and this executive council, or, having gone into it, does not abide by the decision, it is ipso facto an act of war; and the executive council or the body of delegates themselves shall determine exactly what force, military and naval, each power as a member of the league shall supply.

But under article 17 what happens? Under article 17 the same thing is precisely and exactly true of every nation on this earth that is not a member of the league of nations. So I do not now see why they drew that distinction between nations that were members of the league and those that were not, for they propose to apply the same drastic remedies to them all. That means that we, with three or four other considerable powers, are to undertake to guarantee the peace of the world with the lifeblood of every American citizen, wherever he lives, however rich he is or however poor he is, or whatever he does.

What will be our duties, let me inquire of the Senate, under the mandatory provision in article 19 of this proposed constitution of the league of nations? The Senator from Pennsylvania, I think, is exactly right. I have studied that provision, I think, as hard as anything else in this constitution, and I must confess that it is the most vaguely drawn and the most loosely drawn of any provision of this sort that I ever saw engrafted in any constitution or in any statute. It might mean a great many things, and it may mean almost nothing. It is left capable of many constructions, many of them conflicting with others that might be adopted.

Now, let me ask you, are we to undertake police duty all over this world under this mandatory provision? Let me tell you what I believe I know, and what I deliberately charge in my place as a Member of this body on this floor. I believe that it has already been virtually agreed that the United States of America is to be the mandatory for Armenia. Of course, the United States, if it goes into this compact, must take its fair share of the duties and responsibilities growing out of it and of the situation created by it. They are already discussing over in Paris, through the processes of secret diplomacy, exactly what that part shall be.

I do not know how other Senators feel, but, so far as I am concerned, I am utterly unwilling to see this country made, in whole or in part, the policeman of the world, and to see our boys drafted from factory and from farm, from hillside and from valley, and sent all over the world to administer government in East Africa, in Central Africa, in Armenia, in Turkey, in the islands of the South Sea, on account of the vague, theoretical ideals of a thoroughly impracticable man.

Mr. REED. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I should like to have the Senator's views as to about how large an army it might take to police Russia alone. Napoleon once tried that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Napoleon tried it, and Napoleon was unable even to vanquish the snows of Russia. If the Bolsheviki are as active and restless over there as I believe them to be, if they are as hungry as was represented to us when they were asking for a hundred million dollars to help feed them, if they are as dangerous as they now paint them and portray them, there will be no limit to the size of the army that we shall have to raise for that purpose alone.

Mr. President, it is an open secret, arrived at, it is true, through leakings in the processes of secret diplomacy, that the nations of Europe are already insisting, since the United States of America, relatively, did not bear much of the burden and brunt and lose much of the blood in the war, that we must take the major portion of these police duties that are to come after the war and as a result of this league of nations project.

Article 10 pledges this country to fight to maintain the political independence and the territorial integrity of every member of the league of nations. That will get us into untold wars, in my judgment. While I am willing to vote every drop of blood in this country and every cent of money in this country to fight in any war that is necessary to be fought in order to vindicate American honor or to establish American rights, I say to the Senate of the United States that I would be unwilling to vote a single cent of money or a single drop of American blood to maintain the political independence of any nation on this earth, except that of the United States of America, or to keep intact the boundary lines of any country on this globe except our own.

Now, the issue is pretty plainly drawn there. The President, who, in conjunction with former President Taft, stands to-day as the principal sponsor and proponent of this project, understands full well what it means. He is not deceiving himself as to what this peace league is. When he presented this report to the delegates of the various powers that are engaged in this preliminary conference at Paris, he used these words:

Armed force is in the background in this program, but it is in the background, and if the moral force of the world will not fight, the physical force of the world shall.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Who said that?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Wilson. It is the dogma of a thoroughly impracticable man. The physical force of the world has always settled these question and always will, when it comes to the last analysis, until the millennium shall arrive, and all the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares, and the lion and the lamb shall lie down in peace together.

Still, the President does not deceive himself on this proposal. He says that physical force is in the background, but it is there, and that if moral suasion will not do the work the combined physical force of the world will.

Again, in his speech at Boston the other day, while he was urging us not to speak, the President undertook to lay down his views on this question; and, although I know that Senators are familiar with them, as I want the country to understand what those views are in connection with this very position which I am now taking, I will read what the President said then. He said in the course of that speech:

Any man who thinks that America will take part in giving the world any such rebuff—

That is, rejecting this league of nations project—

And disappointment as that does not know America.
I invite him to test the sentiments of the Nation.

Well, the invitation is going to be accepted by every true American in this country who believes in American fundamentals and is willing to stand out like a man and define and analyze and dissect this proposal regardless of party. The President and Mr. Taft are standing together.

In a telegram sent to President Wilson from Mr. Taft in Atlanta, in my own State, on yesterday or last night Mr. Taft referred to the fact that he was glad, in speaking at an early date to a New York audience, that he and President Wilson, belonging to two great parties who were opposed to each other, could stand side by side and shoulder to shoulder on this great question. So they do, for they think alike. So we are going to find, before this thing is over, that men in the North and in the South, in the East and in the West, who think alike on it are going to stand together, side by side and shoulder to shoulder, no matter how anybody else stands and no matter what the ordinary party alignments are on ordinary political questions. The President continued:

I should welcome no sweeter challenge than that.

All right. The gage is accepted; the battle is joined. The President will find that men who believe in the sturdy principles of Americanism throughout this Republic will not hesitate to accept his challenge, and that everywhere in this Republic where human reason can be appealed to, where human intellects can be informed, where human courage can be rallied, the battle cry will be raised for the preservation of American sovereignty, for the preservation of American nationality.

Again, reading the President's language:

I should welcome no sweeter challenge than that. I have fighting blood in me, and it is sometimes a delight to let it have scope—

I believe it will have full scope. He will have all he wants before this thing is over—but if it is a challenge on this occasion, it will be an indulgence. We set this Nation up to make men free, and we did not confine our conception and purpose to America, and now we will make men free.

When the President was urging this Congress to go into war he said officially that we ought to declare war on Germany, and on Germany alone, because Germany was the only power that had committed an overt act against us, had fired on our flag, and had murdered our citizens, and he resisted the proposal that we should declare war on Austria-Hungary until Austria-Hungarian troops and ours had come into armed collision. He resisted even to the bitter end, and successfully, the proposal that we ought to declare war on Turkey and Bulgaria. So the President, in his present contention that we went into this war in order to set all men free, is not speaking in accordance with the facts of history, as everybody will know before this performance is over.

Think of the picture, think of the utter blackness that would fall on the world. America has failed. America made a little essay at generosity and then withdrew. America said, "We are your friends," but it was only for to-day, not for to-morrow. America said, "Here is our power to vindicate right," and then the next day said, "Let right take care of itself and we will take care of ourselves."

I am pretty strong for the right, but it is a pretty good principle of common sense that the first thing everybody ought to do is to take care of himself, and in that way the general right and the general good will be best promoted. The first duty we owe in this matter is to ourselves, to this great country of ours which God has given us, and to the people that live in it and to their children and to their children's children that are to come after them for the generations that are yet unborn, and I am not willing to sacrifice those considerations for anybody in German East Africa, in Armenia, in the islands of the south seas, or anywhere else—even in Russia.

And think of the world that we would leave. Do you realize how many new nations are going to be set up in the presence of old and powerful nations in Europe and left there, if left by us, without a disinterested friend?

Do you believe in the Polish cause, as I do?

That is what Mr. Wilson asks. I do not know; but I believe in the American cause; I believe in taking care of ourselves; I believe in looking out for our own Nation; I believe in avoiding foreign entanglements and foreign obligations. I believe with all my heart and soul and strength in the doctrines and sentiments of Washington and Jefferson and Monroe rather than in those of Woodrow Wilson. I do not know whether I love the Poles as well as he does or not, but I do know that I love the people of America as well as he does.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator remembers that Poland was divided in 1770?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; between Austria, Russia, and Germany.

Mr. GORE. That was six years before the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. REED. There was not much left when she was divided.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not expressing any view about that; but I say that we do not owe as a sovereign Nation any guaranty of the permanence of Polish political independence or the territorial integrity of whatever nation may be set up there.

Are you going to set up Poland, immature, inexperienced, as yet unorganized, and leave her with a circle of armies around her? Do you believe in the aspirations of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs as I do?

I do not know whether I do or not. I do not know what they are, but I believe in the aspirations of free Americans, and I believe in the right of the people of America to attend to their own business, and not to mix up in every quarrel on this earth and do police duty all around the globe.

Do you know how many powers would be quick to pounce upon them if there were not the guaranties of the world behind their liberty?

Well, I do not believe it. Germany is not apt to pounce on anybody in a thousand years to come. They may have troubles about boundary lines and boundary waters with their neighbors; they have had all through their history, and I do not suppose they have changed entirely; but if they have I do not think it is any of our business and I do not want anything to do with it.

Again, the President asked:

Have you thought of the suffering of Armenia?

Yes; and I have thought somewhat about the sufferings of the people of America, too, and I think more about the sufferings that will occur here while we are conscripting our boys to send them to Armenia and the South Sea islands and other countries of the world. I am not so much concerned about Armenian sufferings as I am about American rights and liberties.

You poured out your money to help succor the Armenians after they suffered.

Yes; but I do not propose to pour out any American blood to do it, if I can prevent it, unless somebody jumps on us.

I wish to read next from one or two earlier addresses of President Wilson on this question. Speaking before the League to Enforce Peace in this city on the 27th day of May, 1916, President Wilson used this language:

If it should ever be our privilege to suggest or initiate a movement for peace among the nations now at war I am sure that the people of the United States would wish their Government to move along these lines: First, such a settlement with regard to their own immediate interests as the belligerents may agree upon.

Well, that is all right.

We have nothing material of any kind to ask for ourselves and are quite aware that we are in no sense or degree parties to the present quarrel.

That was before this idea struck us that we were going to democratize the world and save the liberties of the world. We had not got that far along then. That was while we still had on our peace robes and were convincing the American people that we ought to reelect Mr. Wilson because he had "kept us out of war," thereby implying that he proposed to continue to keep us out of war.

First, such a settlement with regard to their own immediate interests as the belligerents may agree upon. We have nothing material of any kind to ask for curselves, and are quite aware that we are in no sense or degree parties to the present quarrel. Our interest is only in peace and its future guaranties. Second, a universal association of the nations—

At that time all nations were to be included—Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and all the others—

Second, a universal association of the nations to maintain the inviolate security of the highway of the seas—

What has become of that? Somebody ought to take out a search warrant to find what has become of that great contention for which he first went to Europe—for the common and unhindered use of all the nations of the world, and to prevent any war begun either contrary to treaty covenants or without warning and full submission of the causes to the opinion of the world—

That part of it is very good, but listen to the conclusion—

a virtual guaranty of territorial integrity and political independence.

That is where I part company with President Wilson on this question. I am not willing to guarantee, and this country ought never to guarantee, the political independence or the territorial integrity of any one of these peoples or nations.

Again, on the 22d day of January, 1917, President Wilson made an address to us, to the United States Senate, on this floor from that rostrum. This was his "peace without victory" speech. I think it is possibly a little cruel to quote this, and I do not intend to quote too many of President Wilson's speeches at once, because they present too many and too varied angles of contemplation. But then the President's idea was that it was best for this war to come to an end without anybody winning; in fact, there was no other way to secure the future peace of the world; and that, if the war did not come to that sort of an end, a renewal was probable. On that occasion the President said:

I think it will be serviceable if I attempt to set forth what we understand them to be—

That is, the principles on which he thought this war ought to be settled then—bear dates in mind—

They imply, first of all, that it must be a peace without victory. It is not pleasant to say this. I beg that I may be permitted to put my own interpretation upon it, and that it may be understood that no other interpretation was in my thought. I am seeking only to face realities and to face them without soft concealments. Victory would mean peace forced upon the loser, a victor's terms imposed upon the vanquished. It would be accepted in humiliation, under duress, at an intolerable sacrifice, and would leave a sting, a resentment, a bitter memory upon which terms of peace would rest, not permanently, but only as upon quicksand. Only a peace between equals can last.

Now, if that be true, if the President fears that this war will be renewed and seeks to commit this country to a policy which is to prevent the renewal even in a cause or quarrel utterly remote from us, utterly dissociated from any American issue, utterly disconnected from any American interest, we ought to prevent it even to the point of spilling our blood and sending our own men by force across the seas to fight all over the earth and to establish "peace on earth, good will to men" at the point of bayonets and from the mouth of cannon.

Again, he said in this same speech to the Senate:

Mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations, could face or withstand it.

So, Senators, instead of a league to secure peace, we have got a league proposed to be set up to establish, as final and controlling throughout the world, the decisions of this executive council and of this body of delegates, in which we only have a small and fractional voice, and which proposes to put behind those decisions, on whatever subjects they may be rendered, the organized power and force of every nation that signs this agreement, no matter how trivial the dispute may be.

The plan is intensely practical in one respect. It is not ideal or idealistic on the proposition that moral suasion alone can accomplish this purpose; it is frankly admitted and conceded by the President of the United States that force, armed force, soldiers and sailors, ships and cannon, are necessary to carry out what this proposal really means. So I want our good church people throughout the country who are hailing this proposal—and some of them are doing that—as something that is second only to the dispensations of the Savior of Mankind, the great Prince of Peace, who initiated the doctrine of love and peace among all men and throughout all ages, I want them to realize that what is really proposed is not a league for peace but a league maintained to prosecute war whenever what they want can not be had instantly without it.

Senators, until the millennium arrives, until the nations of this earth are willing to substitute internationalism for nationalism, to abandon the countries they love and the Governments they have created, until that time shall arrive, then, I say, Mr. President, that it is utterly inconsistent with the principles of common sense that they can or will surrender the sovereign powers of nations in order to constitute a supernation that shall decide issues of peace and war and that shall exercise every vital power of government in behalf of them all.

Mr. President, as I said to the Senate some days ago, I thoroughly favor the proposal that this Nation shall agree with every civilized nation on earth—and there is none, I think, so uncivilized or so barbarous that I would not be willing to make a similar agreement with them—that we will not go to war with any one of them, the engagement being reciprocal, as far as we are concerned, until we make an earnest effort and an honest effort to arbitrate and settle peaceably the differences between us. That will give us pause, if we get into a dispute with another nation; that will give us cooling time; that will give an opportunity for the calm and sober voice of reason and justice to assert itself; and I think in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred it will probably avert war. But further than that, further than a treaty agreement back of which only there shall stand plighted the national faith and the moral suasion that come from the sentiments and opinions of mankind, we can not go without surrendering our nationalism to internationalism, and without substituting for this Government a supergovernment over all nations and governments.

Now, Mr. President, as briefly as I may, I wish to point out four respects, item by item, specifically, wherein this proposed constitution of the league of nations is in conflict, and in irreconcilable conflict, with the Constitution of the United States, where it is proposed to grant to this body that we reorganize and create, this so-called league of nations, powers conferred on the Congress by the Constitution of the United States which the Congress has no right and no power, either in law or in morals, to delegate to any body on this earth, in this country or outside of it.

First, I say that the provision—and I am not going to elaborate these things, because they have been stated by other Senators with more strength than I can hope to state them, but I am going to try to rifle them—first, the provision in the constitution of the league of nations embraced in article 8 of that instrument, authorizing this league to limit the armaments of the powers that are signatory to this agreement, is in utter and irreconcilable conflict with Article I, section 8, clauses 12 and 13 of the Constitution of the United States, which authorize the Congress, and the Congress alone, to organize and maintain armies and to provide and equip navies for this country. The Congress of the United States has no right, in law or in morals, to delegate that power to any other agency on this earth, or to surrender it to any domestic agency or to any foreign agency.

Second, it is in irreconcilable conflict with the Constitution of the United States, because it impinges the treaty-making power provided in the Constitution of the country, which is that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may negotiate whatever treaty he and they please with any power on this earth; and yet articles 23, 24, and 25 say that if we do not list our treaties with this secretariat they shall not be any good at all, and that we shall not make any except certain ones of a certain character which they may approve. As far as I am concerned, if I were a member of this body, I would stay here until I rotted before I granted anybody else on earth the power that is conferred on the Congress by the Constitution of the country that I have sworn at that desk to support.

Third, it impairs the right of Congress to determine when this country shall go to war, and it is in irreconcilable conflict with the Constitution of the United States on that question. Articles 10, 12, 16, and 17 are all in irreconcilable conflict with that provision of the Constitution of the United States embraced in Article I, section 8, which says that the power to declare war is given to the Congress of the United States, and to it alone. Congress has no power on earth, no authority, no right in morals or in law, to delegate that power to anybody on this earth, and least of all to a body of delegates the majority of whom are selected by alien powers.

Fourth, the provision for an economic and commercial blockade, which I have already referred to, embraced in this constitution of a league of nations, is in irreconcilable conflict with that provision of Article I, section 8 of the Constitution, which says that the Congress of the United States shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the Several States, and with the Indian tribes. That is a power that we have no right to delegate to any agency on this earth, in this country or out of it, and least of all would I be willing to delegate it to a body the vast majority of whose delegates were composed of citizens of alien and foreign powers.

Fifth, it impairs the rights of Congress and of the States, both, to deal with purely national and domestic questions.

On that subject I am going to particularize for just a moment. I am reading now from the conclusion, the last paragraph of article 11 of the proposed constitution of the league of nations:

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

I should like to know, if we could have open diplomacy about the processes by which these conclusions have been arrived at and this language drafted, who suggested that language. I should like to know if it came from the representatives of Japan in this congress, because it fits the school question in the West, the Japanese and oriental question in the West, like a glove made to order.

It lies within the memory of every Senator in my hearing and of every Member of this body that we have more than once in the last few years stood on the verge of grave trouble with Japan about this matter; and it is proposed by this language to remit to the jurisdiction of this body of delegates and executive council the consideration of a question that the Congress of the United States itself has no power to control, under the provisions of amendment 10 to the Constitution, which reserves these powers to the States and their people. The Congress of the United States itself can not prescribe to the people of California or of Oregon or of any other State in this Union on what terms they will admit children to their schools. We can not confer on any body of delegates, or on any executive council, a power that was expressly withheld from us. I am not without other basis for my belief that this may be the entering wedge for a great many very serious troubles.

Appearing in the Atlantic Monthly, the current issue, I think, and for the past few months, there is a series of articles on "The idea of a league of nations." I want to read you what the introduction is, and then a list of the committee who are furnishing these articles for this American magazine. Here is the introduction:

A small group of qualified Englishmen have long been working toward universal peace from an angle of their own.

I believe that.

Forming the League of Free Nations' Association, they have divided the principal problems among experts for extended study, appraisal, and suggestions for solution. These inquiries, eventually to be published in book form, will, in the Atlantic's belief, form a highly important treatise on world peace; but in the meantime the group has united in the compilation of the following article which may well serve as an introduction to all attempts at a league of nations. The composite authorship of the paper is especially interesting, the names of the collaborators being H. G. Wells, chairman; Viscount Grey; Gilbert Murray; J. A. Spender; A. E. Zimmern; H. Wickham Steed; Lionel Curtis; William Archer, secretary; Viscount Bryce.

Mr. Wells was not able to wait for the committee book, and he has already written one of his own; and I want to show you what his view is of what sort of internal questions this league of nations will have jurisdiction of and ought to be allowed to settle, so that you may see the extent to which it is proposed that these foreign gentlemen shall meddle in our purely local and domestic affairs. He says:

I suppose the proceedings can be brought into court in this way—

That is, to prevent wars—

fall under such headings as these that follow: Restraint of trade by injurious tariffs—

He is going to control that question for you—or such like differentiations, or by interference with through traffic, improper treatment of the subjects or their property (here I put a query) of the plaintiff nation in the defendant State, aggressive military or naval preparation, disorder spreading over the frontier, trespass (as, for instance, by airships), propaganda of disorder, espionage, permitting the organization of injurious activities, such as raids or piracy. Clearly all such actions must come within the purview of any world-supreme court organized to prevent war. But in addition there is a more doubtful and delicate class of case, arising out of the discontent of patches of one race or religion in the dominions of another. How far may the supreme court of the world attend to grievances between subject and sovereign?

Such cases are highly probable, and no large, vague propositions about the "self-determination" of peoples can meet all the cases. In Macedonia, for instance, there is a jumble of Albanian, Serbian, Bulgarian, Greek, and Roumanian villages always jostling one another and maintaining an intense irritation between the kindred nations close at hand. And quite a large number of areas and cities in the world, it has to be remembered, are not homogeneous at all. Will the great nations of the world have the self-abnegation to permit a scattered subject population to appeal against the treatment of its ruling power to the supreme court? There is a much more serious interference with sovereignty than intervention in an external quarrel. Could a Greek village in Bulgarian Macedonia plead in the supreme court? Could the Armenians in Constantinople, or the Jews in Roumania, or the Poles in west Prussia, or the negroes in Georgia, or the Indians in the Transvaal make such an appeal?

And then he goes on and argues for it.

President Wilson will find a pretty sweet time getting any support for this proposal in Georgia or anywhere in the South or the West when the people understand that one of the questions remitted to the league of nations is to consider and redress the so-called wrongs and grievances of negroes in the South and of Japanese and other orientals in the West. I wonder that this talented Englishman did not suggest as equally subject to the jurisdiction and determination of the court, if it were given the powers that he suggested and will have the scope of jurisdiction that he thinks it ought to have, the grievances of Ireland against Great Britain.

Mr. President, I am against this proposal because it violates traditional American policies and principles, as well as utterly conflicting with the Constitution of the United States. As far as I am concerned, I have always believed that Washington and Jefferson and Monroe were right; that Europe had a set of primary interests that were not our concern; and that it ought to be the firm and abiding and unchanging policy of this Government to avoid entanglement in European affairs and to avoid being drawn into European wars. We have only been so drawn in twice during our national existence, and both times because our rights on the high seas were denied, one time by England, in 1812, and the second time by Germany, in 1917. I believe since this last demonstration of America's power to wage a war, of America's great dormant strength that can be relied upon to support a war once it is declared, that no nation on earth is likely ever again to lightly deny America's rights upon the high seas or to lightly infringe upon the rights of her citizens on land or sea, wherever they may be. I think the danger of that has been tremendously lessened by America's participation in this war, and it was for the reason that I knew it would be so lessened, as well as for the reason that I am willing always for this country to declare war on anybody on this earth that fires upon her flag and murders her people, wherever they be, that I unhesitatingly voted for this war.

But now, since the world understands how powerful is America, how mighty is her resentment, and how effectual is the war that she can wage on short notice, I believe there is hardly a remote possibility that any one of these European nations or anybody else is liable to infringe upon our rights on the seas in a good many hundred years to come. In view of Washington's warning, of Washington's basic and fundamental Americanism, concurred in by Jefferson, in the language stated this morning and which I therefore do not repeat, stated by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], warning us to avoid participation in European alliances and warning us against having anything to do with European wars—in view of those things it seems to me utterly unreasonable and wholly unnecessary that this country should reverse its traditional, historic, fundamental, sound, and safe principles and policies of action with regard to this matter.

Mr. President, not so very long ago I was reading a new book, a biography of John Bright, the great commoner statesman of England, the man who had the courage during the Crimean war to stand in the British Parliament and before the people of Great Britain urging that the war was unnecessary and that it was a mistake; a man who lived and died England's most trusted commoner, England's most glorious statesman, during the span of his public activities. I read in that book, while he was in the travail of sufferings of the Crimean war, that he held up his hands and said, "Oh, that my people were like unto those of America, who live far across the waters instead of having only a narrow channel separating them from the Continent of Europe, where they can keep disentangled from these European broils and keep from sending their young men down into the pits of these bottomless hells every time politicians and statesmen and diplomats disagree with each other about some trifle." And yet it is proposed that we give it up! Men are saying that the country has progressed so and is so much closer to the balance of the world that it is necessary for us to assume the double and combined duties of a guardian for all the nations of the earth, civilized and uncivilized alike, and those of policeman at one and the same time.

The issue is going to be joined. The American electorate is to be appealed to in this matter. The people of this country, once you repeal the espionage laws and get away from these methods that were pursued during war times, of intimidation, repression, and suppression, are going to express themselves on this question and are going to control it, and they ought to. Whenever we can ascertain their verdict in the orderly way and manner prescribed by the Constitution and laws of this country, to that verdict every man must bow in contented, even if it is sometimes unconvinced, submission, whether that man be President or Senator or Representative or what not.

Before the American voter passes on this question, before the American patriot answers it in some struggle of the future, I am going to ask him a number of questions and ask him to answer each one of them. I am going to ask him:

Are you willing to pull down the Stars and Stripes?

Are you willing to furl the flag that makes you free?

Are you willing to silence forever the song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and substitute for it some tribute to this supernation, this league of nations?

Are you willing to revoke and deny and renounce the Declaration of Independence?

Are you willing to strike from the American calendar the glorious American Fourth of July?

Are you willing that the American eagle shall shrink back into its shell?

Are you willing to surrender, in whole or in part, the sovereign power and the sovereign dignity of the United States of America?

Are you willing for this Republic to become a vassal state?

Are you willing for the American people to lose their identity and become a part of a great international bolshevism?

Did the fathers who created this Constitution and framed this Government make a mistake, and has all wisdom come in later days?

Would Washington enter into an entangling alliance of this sort?

Would Jefferson—who said he could hardly withhold himself from the wish that an ocean of fire rolled between Europe and America—enter into a league of this sort with Europe and Asia?

Could Patrick Henry have fired American patriotism by exclaiming, "Give me a league of crowned heads and foreign powers or give me death"?

Were the Tories good Americans?

Are you willing to surrender your own right of self-determination in order to insure a theoretical self-determination to other peoples in other lands?

Are you willing to treat the Constitution of the United States, Senators, that you have sworn to support, as a "scrap of paper"?

Are you willing to intrust to foreigners the determination of our destiny?

Are the American people incapable of self-government?

Are you willing for kings and emperors and foreign powers to tell our self-governing people in free America what they shall do and what they shall not do?

Are you willing to enter into a covenant with death secretly arrived at?

Are you willing to resume the chains which our fathers burst asunder?

Are you willing for the United States of America to become the policeman of the world?

Do you believe that the ambitions of Europe have all of a sudden been foregone?

Do you believe that human nature has been in an instant changed and revolutionized, and that the lion and the lamb are about to lie down together in a league of eternal peace?

Do you believe in the fairies? Do you believe in the "new magic"?

Are you willing to plunge our people forever into the maelstrom of European and Asiatic slaughter?

Are you willing to bind our people in advance to undertake, like Don Quixote, to engage in every war against every windmill that happens, whether it touches our rights and interests and honor or not?

Are you willing to draft our boys to die in wars that concern us not, on the burning deserts of Arabia and on the frozen plains of northern Siberia?

Are you willing to enter into a league for perpetual, unending, interminable, and innumerable wars?

Are you willing to let our commercial rivals close our ports by a majority vote in this league of nations, destroy our markets, ruin our commerce, and bankrupt our people?

Would Great Britain consent to a scheme of economic isolation if her mighty fleet did not command the seven seas?

Is there any American who would become a bondman?

Is there anyone in this country who would be so base as not to be free?

Mr. President, just a word more, and I shall have finished.

Within the last few years I have witnessed the astonishing climax of, I might term it, the evolution of what is misnamed progressive democracy. Shades of Jefferson, of Madison, of Monroe, of Washington, look down in horror on the profanation of the holy words and of that sacred term! Progressive democracy! I have seen here, through 16 years of service in the two Houses of Congress, first the rights of the States, in which are bound up the eternal and vital principles of local self-government, disappear and vanish before the marauding encroachments of the Federal power, and too often have I seen southern Senators and southern Representatives, tempted by the fleshpots of Egypt, joining in the iniquitous raid on the holy principle of local self-government, that ought to be fundamental with all Anglo-Saxon peoples.

Next, I have seen during this war what amounted for the moment to the temporary destruction of the rights and liberties of the individual citizen of America. Many Senators, many Representatives, equally honest and, in my own opinion, far more intelligent than myself, thought it was necessary, and I am not quarreling to-day with their judgment. I did not so believe, in many cases. I thought that a country which was fit to be free, that a country which was capable of self-government, should be just as free in war as in peace, and I thought that if the Constitution of the United States amounted to nothing except in the fair-weather days of peace and became a mere scrap of paper under the stress and strain of war, our institutions were threatened with failure.

I have seen next the taking over by the Government, one by one, of many functions that properly belonged to private enterprise and individual initiative, to the extent that the State has been socialized and communism enthroned here in Washington, and the end is not yet.

Next, after we gradually absorbed, gradually reached out and took all the powers and all the rights of the several States and put them in the arms of this Federal Moloch, I have seen the three coordinate branches of the Federal Government itself broken down, their independence and integrity and coordination destroyed by an Executive who, with the lash of war in his hands, has usurped the powers of Congress and paid no attention, in some cases, to the decisions of the courts. No attention was paid to the decision of the Circuit Court of the United States at Louisville with reference to the taking over of these railroads before the enabling act was finally passed.

I have seen the executive branch of this Government absorb and magnify its own powers at the expense of other branches of the Government until the Congress of the United States stands abashed and ashamed before the American people without standing, without credit, without self-respect, without power. Your bills are drawn in the executive bureaus and are merely passed up to you for your complaisant acquiescence, their rejection not being permitted.

I have seen this country Prussianized in order that we might maintain the proposition that free America was unable to fight a war unless she adopted the methods of despots.

And now, last of all, Mr. President, the fitting climax comes. Having absorbed all power that belonged to the States, having taken all rights that belonged to the citizens and lodged them all here with the Federal Government, the Executive, then proclaiming his indifference in some cases to judicial opinion and his contempt always for congressional sentiment, proceeds to take them all to Europe with him in a ship named by mockery the George Washington, and proposes to hand them over to a league of nations dominated by foreign powers.

Mr. President, I am not a pessimist. I believe the American people will remedy these things. I believe God's eternal truth will triumph in this matter. I believe that in the end sober, thoughtful, honest, self-respecting people of America will remedy this thing in the right way. I am not sure but what—and I say it with all personal kindness to my colleagues—there will have to be a different breed of men in office than we have had. I am sure they will have to fill both Houses of Congress with men with some iron in their souls who can stand up for the rights and liberties of the people when they are assailed from within or from without.

But whatever the remedy, I am sure, Mr. President, that the principles of freemen will triumph in this country. I am sure that the American flag is not to be hauled down in this country in order to substitute for it the banner of some foreign league of nations.

Oh, Senators, I beg of you to stand firm in this great fight for American rights and American liberties. I will not be here to share it with you. Personally, I am glad. I have nothing of personal regret about that matter. But I beg of you to stand firm for the rights and liberties of your own constituents of your own States. Stand firm, so that you may, in the days that are yet to come, transmit to your children and to your children's children those same rights and liberties that your fathers and your fathers' fathers left to you.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3 to the bill (H. R. 15979) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say that this amendment is the only one in disagreement. I do not think it is worth while to carry one amendment in disagreement to conference, and although I think the Senate was right in its position it is a minor matter, and I do not care to hold up the bill. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may recede from the amendment and allow the bill to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Senate recede from the amendment in disagreement with the House. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I regard this amendment as a matter of very great importance to the country, and I regret exceedingly that it was disagreed to by the House. It carries appropriations which provide for the protection of our coasts. I know of no item in the bill more important, but I agree with the Senator from Alabama that at this late day and hour in the session we may lose the bill altogether if we refuse to agree to the action of the House. I am hopeful that at a very early day at the next session this matter will be taken up and provided for. It ought to be done so as to protect our coasts against any possible attack by an enemy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Alabama is granted. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg the privilege at this time to tender a manuscript by R. A. Widdowson, of Chicago, Ill., on the Anglo-American league of nations, which I desire to have made a public document; but in order to do so I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, in order that they may examine it and reach some conclusion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I fear that my statement was subject to misconstruction in regard to the time for the consideration of the conference report upon Senate bill 2812. It was originally understood that for the purpose of facilitating business last night and in the future I would not on last night move to take up the conference report upon the bill with the understanding that the Senator in charge of the so-called bond bill would not move to take that bill up until the conference report had a hearing before the Senate of four hours. At that time it was supposed that the two Senators [Senators HARDWICK and KNOX] who have spoken to-day would not speak during that time, but it was also understood that I would have the full four hours, which, of course, would give three hours and a half longer now.

I simply wish to correct my statement of this morning so that the Senator from Wisconsin will understand that there will be no effort on the part of the Senator from North Carolina to displace this measure during that period of time.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For what purpose?

Mr. GORE. To offer a Senate resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for that purpose, if I may.

Mr. GORE. In view of the fact that the morning hour was taken up by the speeches to which we have listened, I submit the following Senate resolution and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say that I merely wanted to get the President's speech and certain other speeches made a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	New	Simmons
Bankhead	Henderson	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Nugent	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Page	Sterling
Colt	Kenyon	Pittman	Sutherland
Cummins	King	Poindexter	Swanson
Dillingham	Kirby	Pomerene	Thomas
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
Fletcher	Lewis	Reed	Trammell
France	McKellar	Robinson	Underwood
Gay	McLean	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gore	McNary	Shafroth
Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard
Hale	Moses	Shields

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Wisconsin was recognized before the present occupant assumed the chair, and he is therefore entitled to the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am afraid the Senator from North Carolina was not present when I made a statement in reference to this matter just a few minutes ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will repeat the statement, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin. It was that last night for the purpose of facilitating business and also facilitating the passage of the bond bill, I, having charge of the conference report, was induced not to move to take it up last night, with the understanding that I should have four hours to-day on the conference report. It was expected that I would have from 10 until 2 o'clock on the conference report. It was also expected and hoped that Senator KNOX and Senator HARDWICK would make their speeches after the four hours had expired and on the time of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not present, but I wish to state that I was not apprised of any such arrangement. I had given notice that I would follow the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the notice was given many days ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. I realize that, but that not transpiring the Senator from North Carolina recognizes the necessity of letting us have the total of four hours, no matter when it happens. I therefore ask the Senator who has the floor to understand that the agreement is to remain until it has been carried out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Wisconsin has been recognized, as the RECORD will show.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am making no question with the Senator from Wisconsin, but I should like to say to the Senator that I would be glad if he would let me have my bill be made the unfinished business, and then I will agree to lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. The conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; I will wait.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for three hours,

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to take the Senator off the floor, but there was an understanding that at the expiration of four hours I would call up the bond bill. Of course, when that bill is taken up and made the unfinished business the Senator can continue his speech. I ask the Senator if he will not yield now long enough for me to ask for the present consideration of the bond bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to say to the Senator I understood that that is to be done in pursuance of an arrangement made last night, but the four-hour period was to begin at 10 o'clock this morning. I would be very glad if I am mistaken about that, but I should like just a moment to confer with some of my associates to be sure that I am not acting in violation of their understanding of what the arrangement was.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that a call might be made for a quorum, and the Senator would then have an opportunity to converse with Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will move, with the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I yield for that purpose, with the understanding that, having yielded, I shall not be considered to have exhausted my privilege to speak twice upon the conference report if it is brought up again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule provides that any Senator may speak twice on the same subject within one day, and that means every day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then it is not necessary for me to make a reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Carolina modify his resolution to a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will put it in that form. I request unanimous consent.

VICTORY LIBERTY LOAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. SNYDER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 7 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 7 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Gay	Jones, N. Mex.
Bankhead	Colt	Hale	Jones, Wash.
Borah	Curtis	Harding	Kenyon
Brandegee	Fletcher	Hardwick	La Follette
Calder	France	Henderson	Lewis

Martin, Va.	Reed	Smoot	Warren
Moses	Robinson	Sterling	Weeks
Norris	Shafroth	Sutherland	Wolcott
Nugent	Sheppard	Swanson
Overman	Shields	Thomas
Page	Simmons	Thompson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, so much has been said by the proponents of the oil and coal leasing bill about the merits of the legislation, the hardships bound to fall upon the people of the great West if it were not passed, the difficulties that have been encountered by conflicting interests in arriving at the understanding and agreement that at last had permitted a report by a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and something suggesting criticism of anybody who at this stage of the session interposed any objection to the enactment of this measure as being a proceeding upon the part of the objector trenching upon unfairness and an attempt to abuse the limited time for debate at this late stage of the session, that I am compelled, Mr. President, at the outset of what I have to say to devote a few moments of time to the legislative situation which confronts the American Congress.

This is the 1st day of March. A limited number of hours lie between the present moment and the time when the term of this Congress will expire. That hour of expiration of the life of this Congress is fixed by the Constitution. It is within the knowledge of everybody that on the 4th of March at 12 o'clock by constitutional limitation the power of this Congress over legislation shall cease.

That, Mr. President, is a constitutional limitation upon the term of every Congress. When the two years' period of the life of a Congress has elapsed, the legislative function of that Congress terminates. There is no Member of Congress who has not understood perfectly that on the 4th day of March the power of this Congress to function upon legislation would cease, and that any legislation not then enacted into law dies with it, and if revived at all must be revived by reintroduction into the new Congress that will assemble whenever it be called, either by the Executive into extra session or under the Constitution on the first Monday in December, 1919.

Mr. President, that brings me to say something about the practice we have fallen into in dealing with important legislation. I have been a Member of this body actively since 1906. I was elected in 1905. I do not recall a single session when the calendar has not been crowded the last few days of the session with bills carrying the most important legislation of the whole Congress, deferred to that time. Mr. President, an examination of the RECORD will confirm what I say, that near the close of the term of every Congress you will find that much of the very important legislation, about which there is any controversy whatever, not only of the short session but of the whole Congress, is held back until within 10 or 15 days of the close of the Congress, and then it is suddenly brought forward and we are asked to pass upon it.

Usually it is brought in at that time under peculiar and exceptional privileges. It comes usually in the form of a conference report. All Senators understand what I mean when I say that. But what I am saying I am saying not alone to the Senate but to the country as well because I hope to awaken, on the part of the public, in a little measure, some general interest in this important subject. I am always, Mr. President, sufficiently repaid if in some small way what I have to say to the public awakens some interest in needed reformation. So what I am saying about this matter is not only addressed to the Senate but it is addressed as well to the country.

What is a conference report? I pause to define it. A bill is introduced in the House of Representatives. It passes through the legislative stages of committee consideration, report to the House, debate in the House, passage by the House, and is sent to the Senate. Then it is referred to the committee having jurisdiction of that particular subject in the Senate for its consideration. It is there considered, finally passed upon, comes back to the Senate in the form of a committee report, is either acted upon immediately when reported or goes to the calendar and is called up later, receives consideration by the Senate, much or little, depending upon the condition of business that prevails at the time it is called up. It may receive a very imperfect consideration by the Senate particularly if it be late in the session, and especially if it be called up in the morning hour when we have a limited period for the consideration of general public business. Little is said about it. Those who were not in perfect accord with the idea expressed in the legislation may not happen to be present, and it slips through. But, be that as it may, it finally matures by our prescribed legislative methods into the form of a senatorial edict with respect to that measure.

Now, then, we will suppose that it differs somewhat from the views of the House as expressed when the bill came over here from that body; that is, we will suppose that the particular measure as passed by the House does not fully and completely agree with the same measure as passed by the Senate. There is a disagreement between the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States upon that particular measure. Hence our rules provide that what are called conference committees shall be appointed, one by the House and one by the Senate, usually consisting of three conferees on the part of each body, to come together as a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in order that, if possible, the differences existing between the two Houses, as expressed in their legislative action, may be harmonized.

When finally those conferees, having given their time to the consideration of the differences between the two Houses, are ready, they report their conclusions to their respective Houses. In the course of the development of legislative procedure rules have been prescribed by the two bodies of Congress with regard to conference committee reports. Certain rules have been adopted regulating the procedure of this body and the procedure of the House of Representatives when the reports of their respective conferees are received upon a measure.

AUTHORITY AND PRIVILEGE OF CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. President, in the course of the experience of Congress it has come about that a certain authority—a certain recognized superiority—has been conferred upon the reports of these conferees until a conference report has come to be invested with certain privileges that permits and enables it to brush aside and to override whatever business may be engaging the attention of the United States Senate at that time. It matters not, Mr. President, how important the business may be upon which the Senate is engaged—you may be considering something vital to the life of the Republic; you may be considering a constitutional amendment; you may be considering something that strikes down to the very roots, that touches the very soul of representative democracy—whenever a conference report passes through that door [indicating] between the House and the Senate, when that conference report comes onto this floor, under the rule, even though it be upon a matter of minor importance, that conference report rises to such dignity and power that the Senator into whose hands it falls, because he is chairman of the committee of conference, may sweep aside anything that the Senate of the United States is considering and present the conference report. It may be a bill to provide for the grabbing of oil lands or coal lands or water powers. The bill may be one that is an expression of the most mercenary spirit and greed that ever actuated man, yet by virtue of the fact that this is a conference report it has privileges in this body under the rule that enables it to set aside any other business and to have the right of way here for presentation.

Mr. President and Senators, in the name of representative government, I beg you to consider what that means. A conference report may thus be brought in; it may be unimportant, but it may dig down into the very vitals of the life of representative government; it may deal with the priceless heritage of all the public lands belonging to all the people of the United States; it may hand the people of the United States to the last generation over to a monopoly of water-power control that shall be able to dictate the price of electricity to our children and to our children's children, and to every generation to come; it may give away the coal and the oil and the phosphates and the other minerals, and the timberlands—all the precious heritages of our great national resources—and be forced to consideration here under conditions that make impossible a study of its terms and its effects.

It has the right of way; it has a supreme legislative prerogative; it sets aside whatever the Senate is considering; and here is the troublesome thing about it: It may be brought up for immediate consideration by the Senate. It need not be printed; it need not have appeared in type form; it may be 40 pages long; it may deal with everything vital to the future life of the people of this country regarding heat, light, and power. It may be as important as that; and yet, under the rules, it has the right to brush aside all pending legislation when it first comes into the Senate, and be read from the desk, and the demand made that we proceed to consider and pass upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. There is a great deal of the criticism of the Senator which is unanswerable, and yet I hope he will pardon me for suggesting that there are two sides to the subject.

I recall shortly after my entrance into the Senate that the Senator himself, because of the priority of conference reports, succeeded during the closing days of the Congress, which ended in March, 1913, in securing final consideration for the bill to value railroad property; and shortly afterwards I had the pleasure of assisting in securing final consideration during the closing hours of a session subsequently of a bill to regulate the rights of seamen, both of which, I think, the Senator from Wisconsin originated, and to whom nearly all the credit of their ultimate passage belongs. Now, but for these rules, which the Senator very justly criticizes, I suggest that possibly that important legislation might have failed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very true, Mr. President; but anybody who gets legislation here must get it under the rules.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And I adjusted myself to the rules of the Senate and secured consideration of the bill providing for the valuation of railroad property. I am much obliged to the Senator for introducing that subject. It suggests to me a matter for further discussion. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.] You see, Mr. President—and I digress here a bit now——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the galleries.

REASON OF RULE AGAINST APPLAUSE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let me say that human nature is human nature, and if something that the Senator from Colorado said provoked a little bit of laughter on the floor on the part of Senators, which found a wee bit of an echo in the galleries, I do not think the galleries ought to be rebuked for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit the Chair, the Senate has made a rule which provides that there can be no demonstrations of any character in the galleries.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, let me say a word about that. I am much obliged to the Chair; I will be glad to discuss that rule for a little while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit the Chair for a moment, the rule provides that the Chair must enforce the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And we are all sworn to enforce it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly; but there never was any trouble about the enforcement of the rule about applause or dissent in the galleries of the United States Senate previous to five years ago. I have been a Member of this body since 1906.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator will agree with me that demonstrations of approval or disapproval in nearly all cases begin on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do agree with the Senator, and for that reason I think that there ought to be a human sort of construction of that rule with regard to the galleries.

Mr. THOMAS. So do I.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I never heard during my membership in this body prior to five or six years ago the same invocation of that rule that has been applied since. Do you know how that rule originated? It did not originate in an innocent expression of human sentiment from the galleries of the United States Senate. I have spent a little time in running it down. It originated, Mr. President, in an offensive attempt to do violence upon the Senate of the United States on an occasion when an insane man in the galleries broke forth. It originated because of that experience, which made it necessary to have some rule to apply on such occasions; but it never was intended to be invoked when there was some slight and natural expression of humor from the galleries that did not interfere in any way with the deliberative proceedings of the Senate. I think we will all agree that where there has been an infraction of that sort by the galleries it has been found to have started here on the floor.

The other day when waves of applause swept the galleries of the United States Senate again and again at the conclusion of one of the speeches made here, it was because the unusual and extraordinary spectacle of applause manifested itself upon the part of the dignified Senators, who gave approval to what one of their colleagues had said. That occurred not only upon one occasion, but upon three occasions; but the Presiding Officer did not rebuke the Senate of the United States, because the rule has no application to the Senate. The Presiding Officer took it out on the poor, unfortunate galleries. It was not just exactly fair, in my opinion, for it started down here. Do you not remember it?

Three-fourths of the Members on the floor of the Senate applauded the closing of a speech made here, and when the Senator concluded his remarks crowded around him in a procession such as I used to see in the House of Representatives when I was a Member of that body 25 or 30 years ago at the conclusion of a moving speech. Here was an exhibition of real human feeling; and I wish to say here that I think it was wholesome and good. I think if once in a while we could inject into the slow-moving blood of a United States Senator a little human feeling it would be a right good thing to do.

Mr. President, I do hope we will have a rational construction of that rule of the Senate. I do not care particularly about it, because I never say anything that is good enough to merit applause. I am a very humble sort of a Member of this body, who once in a while addresses the Senate, usually dealing with some economic question or some question involving a principle. I do not meddle much in the general contentions of this body over the details of legislation—perhaps I would be more useful as a Member of this body if I did—and what I have had to say about this rule is just the result of observation and reflection as a Member of the body.

POWER OF CONFEREES OVER LEGISLATION.

Coming back now, Mr. President, to what I was discussing when I was diverted by the manifestations of applause from the gallery because of what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] had said—coming back to the consideration of this vital thing, the power of conferees over both Houses of Congress—that presents an issue worthy of the attention of Senators, of Members of the House, and of the people of the country; it is an issue and if I stood alone I would raise it. I have spent a good part of my 30 years in the public service out on the skirmish line; in the gray of the morning I have heard the sing of the bullets of special privilege; and if I stood alone, absolutely alone, I would venture now, modestly, to challenge to the death struggle the power of conference committees, in defiance of the will of the great people of the United States represented in the two Houses of Congress, to control legislation. I am here to challenge that; and I tell you that from this session on through all the sessions, so long as it is my privilege to be a Member of this body, no important measure shall get through, if it can be stopped, the report on which through a conference committee has been delayed to the last hours of the Congress. It must be brought in soon enough so that the cover can be taken off and it can be thoroughly considered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question or for a short statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I am not in danger of losing the floor. The floor is precious to me now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield just for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. It must have been perfectly obvious that there were grave abuses committed by conferees injecting or inserting into their reports matter not considered by either House; but let me call the Senator's attention to what we call the Curtis amendment to the rules, which was adopted about a year ago and which I think is one of the most salutary and needful rules ever adopted by a legislative body, as well as one of the most drastic. It is so drastic that it prevents in effect what we call in parliamentary law a "full and free conference," which has been known to English parliamentary law for centuries. The rule is so drastic that it prevents full and free conference. I refer to paragraph 2 of Rule XXVII, which reads:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report; and if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

If the Senator will pardon me further, I may have an erroneous view of that rule, but it is nevertheless my view that if the conferees insert in their report a word that was not passed upon by at least one of the two Houses, the report is subject to a point of order; and if they omit a word that was agreed to by both Houses the conference report is subject to a point of order. I say, after some investigation, that it is the most drastic rule known to English-speaking parliamentary bodies. I utterly fail to see how a more drastic rule could be conceived. I think the abuses against which the Senator inveighs were committed up until the time this rule was adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am much obliged to the Senator for giving point to my argument. He did not happen to remember, perhaps, that this very conference report was driven off the floor of the Senate by my raising a point of order under that rule.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator let me further interrupt him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Does not that weaken the force of the Senator's argument that grave abuses are creeping in, owing to our lax rules on conferences?

The point I am trying to make—and the Senator will pardon me if I am taking his time—is that under the so-called Curtis amendment to the rules we have the most drastic rule on conference reports that the human mind can conceive, because, if the conferees inject a word that did not receive the approval of at least one of the Houses, it goes out on a point of order. What more barriers, what more entrenchments or fortifications, could be conceived that would protect the public and protect parliamentary procedure from the injection of extraneous matter into a conference report?

I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there are two answers to the Senator, either of which is quite sufficient. The first is that there may be such a wide difference between the two Houses that the yielding of the conferees of one House to the other in the last hours of a session, in order to get some legislation, may be such a surrender of principle as the House whose views have been yielded would not consent to if it had a time sufficient for deliberative consideration of that surrender. The other is that the rule itself is shown to be necessary because of the exercise of power on the part of the conferees that is a denial of the principle of representative government to the Congress of the United States through the Senators and the Members.

Why, just think of what gave life to that rule. It was enacted because conferees took out of the hands of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives the legislative decision which they had rendered on the subject matter under consideration. The very fact that it was ever necessary to enact a rule such as the Curtis rule, denying to conferees the right to put into a bill new matter, which neither House had considered, or to strike from a bill matter agreed to by both Houses, shows what an utter disregard conferees had come to exercise respecting the limitations on their authority.

Here the Senate had declared itself with respect to some principle in a bill, to some feature of a bill; the House declared itself with regard to some feature of the bill—both, we will say, in perfect agreement—but it did not meet the views of conferees. Assuming an autocratic power, which shows a perfect disregard of the principles of democracy, they would come together and set aside the action of the House and the action of the Senate. There was perfect accord; there was a legislative declaration of perfect agreement upon that feature of the bill; and yet these conferees would sweep that to one side and write a different provision into the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. That may have been true prior to the adoption of this rule; but I fail, in all candor——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, where was the Senator from Arizona when I raised the point of order on this very conference report and drove it off the floor of the Senate because it violated the Curtis rule?

Mr. ASHURST. Sitting in my seat; and that only weakens, in my judgment, if the Senator will pardon me, the force of his argument that the rules are ineffective to protect the public and the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, no; it shows that conferees will not obey the plain rule, and that in the closing hours of a legislative session it therefore becomes necessary for each and every Member of both bodies to scan with critical eyes the reports that are made by conferees, in order to be assured that they have not been betrayed by the conferees.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will further indulge me—and then I will interrupt him no more—it is now, under this rule, within the power of one Senator to compel the conferees on all conference reports to observe the rule that they shall not inject new matter and must not omit matter that has been passed by both Houses.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, of course it is, if his point of order is sustained by the Presiding Officer.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all I want to know. We then have a rule that puts it within the power of one Senator to make conferees obey the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, now, I hope the Senator will just sit down a minute and let me convict him.

Mr. ASHURST. I will do that. I shall not feel any stigma in being convicted by the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Suppose a conference report comes in here, like this report, of 20 or 30 pages. It comes in under a privilege that does not require it to be printed. When it is presented it can be read from the desk, and Senators have to sit here and by their ears judge whether new matter has been put in by the conferees or not. What protection is that?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me answer the Senator's question, if I can.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Surely.

Mr. ASHURST. When a conference report is presented, if the question is raised as to its immediate consideration, that, of course, is determined without debate. It requires a majority of the Senate to do that. A clear majority of the Senate must pass upon the question as to whether or not they shall proceed to the immediate consideration of the report. Very well. The only privilege it has is the privilege of being open to presentation at any time, except when the Journal is being read or the roll is being called. After it is presented, and the Senate by a majority vote has consented to proceed to the consideration of the report, the point of order will still lie, and must be enforced by the Chair, if the conferees have inserted a word that has not been passed upon by either House, or if they have left out a word or a sentence that was agreed to by both Houses.

So, with perfect respect to the learned Senator, I do not see at this time, in all candor, under the rules now, how any abuse can come to the Senate or any injury to the American people if there is one Senator who sits here and listens to these conference reports—if there is just one. We all ought to be here, and I ought to be here more; I admit that; but I do think that the point of the Senator's argument—and I say this with great respect—is very much weakened, that abuses are liable to come from conference reports now, because no human ingenuity can frame a better or a more drastic rule than the one we have now. I will add that I am very much in favor of that rule, and have enforced it when I have temporarily occupied the chair.

That is all I wish to say about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know to a certainty, but I very strongly suspect that if I had not happened to be in my seat, and had not happened to have time to examine this report, the flagrant violation of the rule that the Senate conferees had been guilty of with respect to Alaskan coal would have been overlooked by the Senator from Arizona and other Senators here, and it might have been accepted as being no violation of the rule, and might have gone through. So, Mr. President, under the privilege that prevails with regard to conference reports, it is always possible that there may be no opportunity for Senators to become acquainted with the details of a report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The matter to which the Senator refers was the extension of the provisions of this bill to Alaska, and that provision was requested by the Secretary of the Interior. It was thought that this would be a workable bill for the development of the resources of the West, and, inasmuch as they had tried a leasing bill for Alaska without any privilege whatever of entering the land, that therefore there would be a rectification of the laws of the Territory of Alaska by giving it the identical laws applicable to the United States, and we supposed that nobody would think there was any objection to doing that. Now, the conference report was submitted and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD nearly a week before it was presented over here, because there were delays—delays in getting the signature of one of the conferees, by reason of the fact that a concurrent resolution had to be passed—and that report was on record over in the House. At least, it was printed a number of days before it was called up here.

The power which the Senator refers to was a power that he invoked himself, and he had a right to invoke it; but the invocation of that point of order delayed us for over a week in getting the correction that was made. We have tried to present in this conference report not a single item but what was passed upon in the discussion of these bills, and, in addition to that, we have eliminated everything that could be objectionable under the Curtis amendment to the rules.

Now, Mr. President, I just want to say this with respect to the discussion that occurred——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator can answer me when I get through.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. Will the Senator consent to designate when that will be?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, hardly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I supposed so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator seems to think that it is a sufficient apology to the United States Senate for violating its rules that the Secretary of the Interior or somebody else wanted to change the rule with respect to Alaska from that which had been fixed in the bill as passed by the Senate and by the House; and therefore these conferees, with a hardihood and an audacity that deserved fitting rebuke by the Senate, came in here with a new legislative proposition that had not been passed upon by either the House or the Senate. Who invested the conferees of the Senate and the conferees of the House with power to legislate for the United States? Who, I should like to know, clothed them with power to represent the State of Wisconsin or the State of Illinois or the State of Indiana and say what the law should be?

The Constitution of the United States prescribes that there shall be one Member of the House of Representatives for every unit of population agreed upon, two United States Senators from each State in the Union, and that they shall assemble at the seat of government on the first Monday of December in each year, and there, acting for themselves—never for the Standard Oil Co, never for any other interest, but acting always and only for the people of the United States—they shall legislate, and, through their legislation, they shall record the will of the people.

That is representative government, Mr. President. That is the kind of government that Washington's army fought for. That is the kind of government that men died for at Lexington.

That is the kind of government that the men at Gettysburg died to keep undivided upon the map of the world. It was not a government where three or four men, because they happened to be conferees, could defeat the will of the Senate and the will of the House of Representatives and bring in a measure here in the last hours of a legislative session and rush it through when it could not be properly inspected. That is not the kind of government, I want to tell you, that our forefathers fought for. That is not the kind of government that our fathers fought for, from Sumter to Appomattox.

No, no! Representative government means that every single State in the Union shall have an equal chance in making the law; that every unit of population represented in the House shall have an equal chance in making the law. When you set up a conference committee here that assumes to speak for the people of Massachusetts and Illinois and Wisconsin and Iowa, and to do it in violation of the rule of the Senate, then I say that the hour has come when that sort of thing deserves the united cooperation of Members upon both sides here to put an end to it forever.

DISREGARD OF TRUE PRINCIPLES OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT PROMOTES UNREST.

So, Mr. President, I am here inveighing against a practice that has grown and grown until it has become an organized defiance of constitutional government. Why, sir, up here in the seclusion of this Chamber, walled in as we are, where there is not a window which lets in God's sunlight, sometimes we hear things from the outside world, but mostly we live by ourselves; and when we have been separated from our constituencies for a few months some of us seem pretty prone to forget whom we were sent to represent. And so, Mr. President, it is not to be marveled at that in the seclusion of this retired space in the Capitol of the United States we should wonder that there is unrest and disturbance over this great land of ours. But I venture to suggest to Senators that it is possible that their disregard of the spirit of the Constitution which they have sworn to support may have some remote relation to the wave of unrest and dissatisfaction that is pulsing its way across our great country from ocean to ocean; and I hope my colleagues here, so many of them representing constituencies of great wealth and power in our economic system, may pause to consider whether the conditions which they deprecate as being menacing in this country at this time are to be dealt with by a better regard upon their part of the true principles of representative government as embodied in the Constitution, or are to be dealt with by drastic legislation that shall seek to repress all complaint which has been provoked by our failure to make this Government more truly representative of the will of the people.

I purpose, somewhat later in the present session, upon another measure, to have something to say about the critical situation existing in this country to-day; and I do not wish to be too far diverted, although there beckon to me on every side, as I seek to pursue the line of my argument, digressions bearing not only indirectly but directly upon that situation.

Mr. President, I say it is most remarkable that it was found necessary by the United States Senate to write into its rules a regulation denying to conferees authority to legislate. Why, you would not have thought that three men in the House of Representatives and three men in the United States Senate would presume to put into a conference report legislation which had never passed either of the two bodies that had appointed them to adjust and report upon the differences between those two legislative bodies. You would not have thought it possible that those men would arrogate to themselves the power to set aside the will of the United States Senate and the will of the House of Representatives, and to assert their will and their power as to legislation affecting the interests of the whole people, in total disregard of the will of the Senate and the House of Representatives expressed in the two bills. And yet, Mr. President, so many times, so frequently, had that been done that the Senate was at last compelled to try to protect itself by rule against the practice.

Mr. President, the writing of this rule in the United States Senate stands like a guide board on the highway for conferees. It should forever remind them of the fact that it had become necessary in the United States Senate to restrain members of conference committees from utterly disregarding the legislative action of the two Houses of Congress.

[At this point Mr. PENROSE engaged in a whispered conversation with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator from Wisconsin yielded the floor?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I have not. I do not know of any rule of the Senate that regulates exactly how fast a man shall talk here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator from Wisconsin talking as slowly as he can?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; he is not. He has been covering a good deal of ground, and I hope it will be beneficial to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no doubt about the Senator covering a good deal of ground, but he is scattering it out rather thin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It may so appear to the Senator from Arkansas, but I may venture to guess that there will come a time when it will not so appear generally to the people of this country.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will take some other time to have his conferences with the Senator from Pennsylvania and continue to illumine the subject now before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. About that I shall be guided largely by my own judgment. I will have to be. I can not always——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not just this minute. I can not always conform, you know, to what the Senator from Arkansas might think was exactly suitable. If some Senator comes upon the floor here while I am speaking and desires to communicate with me, I think it entirely proper that I should listen to what he has to say. The Senate does not lose any time by it. We have lost already very much more time than that, and I do not want to lose any time, you know. I am rather particular about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question or not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; in the interest of saving time, I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas, of course, understands perfectly that the Senator is speaking sarcastically when he refers to his purpose of saving time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator understands nothing of the kind. I am speaking upon this bill, and the Senator has no right to make that inference here in my time. He can make it after I get through, but when he asked me to yield he has not any right to use the time for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think the business of the country in its present state should be suspended and that the galleries should be deprived of the value of his luminous remarks in order that he may hold conferences while he retains the floor, discussing an important matter of legislation? Does he not think he might hold his conferences elsewhere and continue uninterruptedly?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is impudent and ignorant of the reason why I was interrupted. I was interrupted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, who told me that the managers of legislation upon this side wanted a recess at 5 o'clock, and that in his opinion I ought to be advised of it.

Now, Mr. President, I am going on with what I have to say——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I thought it might be that the information——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement of the Senator from Wisconsin is erroneous, and that is a moderate characterization of it. No Senator on this side has asked for any recess. A request came from the representatives on the other side of the Chamber that a recess be granted them from 5.30 until 7 o'clock in order that a conference might be held to enable the other side of the Chamber to determine whether or not it would support or oppose the so-called liberty bond bill, which is designed to provide for the raising of funds necessary to bring our soldiers back from France. The statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin that the request came from this side for any interruption of the brilliant and remarkable speech that is now being made by the Senator from Wisconsin is erroneous and can not be characterized on the floor of this body in the language that would properly designate it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I decline to reply to observations made in that spirit by a Senator on this floor, and I decline to yield again to the Senator from Arkansas. A man who will abuse the privileges of another Senator to insult him upon the floor does not deserve anything but contumely.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, I am proceeding within my right upon this floor, and I resume the discussion at the point where I was interrupted. I was entirely innocent, Mr. President, of violating any of the proprieties much less the rules of the Senate, in pausing for a second to listen to the message the Senator from Pennsylvania conveyed to me just as I represented it to the Senate, when rebuked or criticized by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not yield. Once is enough for me. [Manifestations in the gallery.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be order in the galleries. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I come back to discuss the vital importance of representative government, which had been somewhat encroached upon by conferees to the extent that it had become necessary for the Senate of the United States to write into its standing rules something to restrain the hand of these conferees from interfering with the rights of Members of the Senate and Members of the House to represent their constituencies here and their respective States. You can understand that when a conference report comes here, with all the rights and prerogatives that have been accorded to such reports, it may be extremely difficult, if any advantage or if any encroachment had been made upon the legislative declarations of the Senate, for instance, by the conferees, for Senators to protect themselves against that encroachment. Why was it so difficult? I will tell you.

SENATE WAS COMPELLED TO PROTECT ITSELF AGAINST THE USURPATION OF CONFEREES.

Mr. President, in a very innocent way the practice has grown up of giving conference reports certain rights. A conference report embodies what is supposed to be a combination of the legislative ideas of the Senate and House of Representatives upon the subject which is committed to the conferees. As I said, a sort of practice had grown up in both bodies to give very high privileges to a report coming from conferees who were supposed to present in their report the views of the two bodies of Congress, harmonized by the committee to whom the subject of legislation had been turned over. Of course, it is to be recognized that in every legislative measure there must be yielding where there is difference of opinion. It was an established practice, recognized not only by the Congress of the United States but by our legislative bodies in the different States where a similar practice has grown up, that when these differences arise between two legislative branches of government they must be harmonized if legislation is to result.

But, Mr. President, it was always fundamental, it was always the very soul of any action upon the part of those conferees that they should deal with differences between the two Houses. That is all right. They were commissioned to discuss those differences, harmonize them if possible, and report them back to see whether their respective principals would indorse the action of their agents, the conferees. That is rational procedure. Here are two individuals, for instance, who do not agree about their rights. They are in sharp collision. It is important that those differences should be adjusted. Each one appoints an agent, the two to come together and consider the differences.

But, Mr. President, it never was accepted as to any matter of arbitrament between agents of principals, who differed with regard to some matter, that the agents should go outside and take up things that did not concern the controversy. That would be recognized anywhere as a violation of the principle of arbitration. But, Mr. President, conferees took such great liberties with the matters committed to them that the Senate found it necessary to adopt a rule to stop them from going entirely outside of the matters of difference between the two Houses, framing up new legislation and bringing it in. It came to be a very great abuse, because it was repeated so often. Now, there is not a Senator who does not recognize the very conservative character of the United States Senate. The United States Senate is pretty slow to take action in a new direcion. It will stand abuse; it will submit to the violation of legislative principles session after session and year after year; so conservative is this body, that is elected for a six-year period, that it corrects abuses very tardily; and when the United States Senate wrote into its rules a declaration that members of a conference committee should not write into a conference report matter upon which neither body had acted, you may be assured that it did it after that rule had been violated again and again and again, until the subject became one which Senators regarded as such a legislative abuse that it must be corrected in the interest of representative government.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am advised that while I was absent from the Chamber the Senator from Wisconsin made a statement to the effect that he was advised that I had asked the Republicans to hold a conference this afternoon and offered to give them a recess for an hour and a half for the purpose of holding that conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think I said that, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me, in order that I may make a correction?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to make a correction. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to say that the Senator from North Carolina had suggested or desired—I am not responsible if he did not state it to me just exactly as it was—that perhaps there should be a recess taken at about 5 o'clock, and that in the meantime it had been suggested, not by the Senator from North Carolina—I did not so understand it—but by Republicans that there should be some conference on the part of Republicans. I simply stated that as I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to state it, and if I am in error at all about it I shall be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is undoubtedly in error.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement which particularly elicited my interest was the statement by the Senator from Wisconsin that the request for a recess had come from this side of the Chamber. That was the exact language used by the Senator from Wisconsin, as I remember it—that he had been informed that a request had come from this side, meaning the Democratic side of the Chamber, for a recess from 5.30 until 7 o'clock, or about that time. That was the statement which the Senator from Wisconsin made.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, in view of that statement, I am sure he must have misunderstood the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania did not intend to convey that idea; but I think it is due to myself to make a statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Pennsylvania sat here and heard what I said, and if I misstated him he ought to have corrected me.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so, too.

If the Senator will permit me, I desire to state the facts with reference to this matter. Shortly after the Senate convened this morning the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader upon the other side of the Chamber, asked for a conference with me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit that that has not anything to do with whether or not I correctly quoted the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not want to go into ancient history. I am trying to make a connected argument.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator allow me to make a brief statement with regard to the matter? It will not take me more than a minute.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated to me that on account of certain statements in regard to the attitude of certain Senators on that side it had become very desirable that there should be a conference of the minority Senators. He asked me if I would consent to having the bill laid aside temporarily, and take a recess for two hours, to permit that conference to take place. I told him I could not answer him then, but I would do so in a short time. In a short time afterwards I did answer him, telling him that I would accede to that request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the matter is straightened out now. Of course, when a Senator is speaking here on the floor and another Senator sidles up to him and interrupts him——

Mr. SIMMONS. I can understand how that may happen.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And whispers something to him, he may not subsequently state it in exactly the same words in which he received it. The Senator from Pennsylvania, however, as I have stated, sat right here while I did state it, and if I did not state it exactly correct he was in a position to correct me. I certainly did not mean to misstate anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to suggest to the Senator that I had no conversation with the Senator from Pennsylvania about the matter until probably an hour after the Senator from Massachusetts and myself had our first conversation. He then came and asked me to fix a time for a recess at a different hour from the time originally suggested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know anything about any of these conferences. I was making what I thought was a pretty good argument about this conference report. I deprecated the interruption by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I was real sorry, for it would be necessary for me, in order to accommodate myself to the wishes of other Senators, to stop in my argument, and I really wanted to go on. I am just getting under way.

I come back now, if I may proceed, as best I can recollect to connect up with what I was saying at the time of the interruption—and I could save a lot of time if I were permitted to go right straight along—I can see very valid reasons for clothing conferees with certain powers. The conferees represent, or ought to represent, the best legislative judgment of the two bodies; but I say it is absolutely fundamental that they do not touch anything that the two bodies have not acted upon, because, to speak plainly about it, that is usurpation of power that betokens an utter disregard of the high office that they are filling. When conferees write into a conference report matter about which neither of the two legislative bodies acted, I do not think there can be any dispute between us that they are doing a pretty radical thing, one which ought not to be done; and when it is true that that sort of practice has grown up and become so common that it is necessary to enact a rule to stop it, that indicates a pretty flagrant disregard of the principles of representative government and of the principles of democracy about which we have heard so much in recent years.

ANOTHER DANGEROUS ABUSE.

Mr. President, there is another abuse which has grown up here besides the abuse upon the part of conferees which elicited the enactment of the rule. It is that reprehensible practice that has grown up of bringing in conference reports in the closing hours of a Congress. Human nature is in a way accountable for it, I admit, but it is one of the violations of proper legislative action that must be curbed, must be checked, must be stopped, or it is the end of all proper legislation by the Congress of the United States. The life of a Congress is for two years. A bill is introduced here; it goes to a committee; it may not be acted upon during that session or it may be acted upon; it may reach the calendar; it may be passed; it may go over to the other branch of Congress; it may be acted upon there by the committee of that House and go upon the calendar of that body. But suppose that in the House of Representatives a bill which has been favorably acted upon early in the life of a Congress by the United States Senate encounters some opposition, that there is some difference of opinion, which results, after the House has acted upon it, in the appointment of a conference committee to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate, and that conference committee meets in the first session of the life of a Congress, considers the matter, and finds that there are differences between the two Houses and can not come to any agreement upon the matter. Then in the closing hours of the two-year period of the life of that Congress the conferees come together, arrive at an agreement, and bring in their conference report on the measure at a time when the calendar is crowded with important legislation. Legislation which has been permitted to be delayed in conference should put Congress on inquiry. In those closing hours, when appropriation bills involving billions upon billions of dollars must be considered, a measure like the pending bill, involving the disposition of the great public domain in which is treasured the coal, the oil, the gas, and other natural resources, is thrust in here, and we are expected to jam it through without time for proper consideration. This bill, if enacted, will dispose of all the resources that will furnish heat and energy to the people of the United States for all time to come, for there is practically gathered up within the four corners of this proposed legislation all that the people have left of the coal, the oil, and the natural gas underlying our public lands.

Now, Mr. President, when conferees are invested with the high privilege of coming on this floor at any hour, at any moment when the Senate is in session, with a conference report dealing with the coal and the oil and the gas that is the common property of the people of the United States, and a report that contains within it provisions for the acquisition of that property by private interests, as I view it, and as I shall demonstrate later, from the terms of the bill, I do protest against a measure of that infinite, that sweeping importance to the people of this country being brought on for consideration at a time when the calendar is crowded with measures of the highest importance.

NOT THE TIME TO BRING IN IMPORTANT LEGISLATION.

Yet, when the currents of legislation are running at high flood with measures of the greatest and most vital importance we have thrust in here during the last hours a report privileged to come up for action at any moment of time, and involving the legislative action of the House and the Senate upon which they passed months and months ago. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is a member of the conference committee, informs me that these bills were acted upon last year and the year before by the respective bodies of Congress. But this conference report comes in here at the last hour of the two-year period of this Congress, and at a time when Senators are obliged to give their time to other legislation of the most vital importance.

Now, Mr. President, there is no possible excuse for the long delay upon this measure. The very fact that the bill appears here in the last hours should be notice to the Senate to carefully examine it. I say this without meaning any reflection upon the members of the conference committee. I know personally some of the members of the House conference committee, and all of the members of the Senate committee, and I would say no word that would reflect personally upon any of them. But I want to say that a judgment that resisted for a year or more must have been in the end more or less coerced into agreement.

Why, the Senator from Colorado, and I do not know but the Senator from Nevada, and other Senators who are concerned in this legislation, very properly and very vitally, because of their constituencies, have again and again risen on the floor here and said: "After six years we have gotten together. There have been the widest sort of differences, but we have come together on this thing." Mr. President, I tell you that that statement in itself must compel every Senator on this floor who feels responsibility for his vote to vote with care on a decision arrived at in that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to make just a little statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not want to endanger my right to the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; I do not want the Senator to do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator does not want me to, and I do not propose to. I understand the rule to be that I can yield for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask this question, then:

The conferees on this matter have been acting in a most careful manner with respect to this bill. The Senate bill was passed here after a discussion of several days, I think, in January, 1918. The provision in the Senate bill was different from the House provision that had passed the House several times. The House bill had passed three times and had come over to the Senate, and in some instances was not acted upon by the Senate.

Now, I want to state to the Senator, if he will permit me, the difference between the two bills.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no, no, Mr. President. The Senator will have the opportunity to do that later. If the Senator wants to ask me some question, I can properly yield, but not otherwise.

Mr. SHAFROTH. When the conferees have been laboring hard for the purpose of getting an agreement, and we have agreed upon a matter that seems to be fair to both sides, and we could not get the agreement until, say, the 1st of February—that was the date that we agreed—I want to ask the Senator if he thinks there is any unreasonable delay in it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was just what I was discussing and just what I was proposing to discuss.

Mr. SHAFROTH rose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, I am going to answer the Senator. The Senator has asked his question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, no; one question is enough at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator agree that when the head of the managers on the part of the House got sick and failed to get to the House until in January, we could not confer with him in December? The result was that it has been tied up by delays of that kind and was tied up by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] going to California and not getting back.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think perhaps it is true that a doctor ought to have been called in very much earlier in this matter; but here is the proposition: The fact that you did not agree until the last few days, after you had had the matter under consideration for months, is an evidence that you have been put in much the same position as a jury where the judge locks them up on bread and water to force an agreement against the judgment of the jury.

STATEMENTS OF CONFEREES SHOULD WARN SENATORS.

Sir, the very statement that the Senator from Colorado has made on this floor that "we have been six years trying to get together on this thing, and have only been able to do so just now," is a statement which should put every Senator on his inquiry to scan this report with the very greatest care. Then, when finally it appears here, and we find that the conferees have done something in violation of the rules, I think we are forced to conclude that they are under such tremendous pressure from their constituents, have been so eager for an agreement that possibly their judgment has been warped and that we would be unsafe in acting on the matter in these rushing, pressing, closing hours of a great Congress. Here we are fagged out by our labors and struggles over appropriation bills and war measures and revenue bills until our minds have lost their edge, and now we are called upon to pass a wise judgment upon a conference report that required a year and some months to compose the divergent opinions of the two Houses. And, Mr. President, when there is involved in that the fuel that is to furnish light and warmth to the people of this country for all time to come, and when you may be starting upon a policy that commits you to monopoly that can grind the people with excessive prices, as I shall argue later——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not just now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to explain to the Senator just a minute with relation to why this difference of opinion is existing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; the Senator can make his explanations after I get through.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We can not talk on our side, because it consumes time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why can you not? If you had brought this bill in when you ought to you would have had plenty of time to talk.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have been trying to bring it in. I have been trying.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator has, and I know how earnest and honest the Senator from Colorado is about this matter and I have a lot of sympathy with him. I know he thinks it is going to do some good to his constituents. I think I can show, before I get through, that it is the ruin——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, Mr. President, we have guarded against monopoly in every way. We have got every clause in here that absolutely prohibits a combination of any two companies in the coal lands of this country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ah! That depends upon who happens to be Secretary of the Interior, who happens to be in the position to enforce the law; and I propose to show that we have had Secretaries of the Interior who have robbed the people of an inheritance with reference to the public domain that ought to forever hand their names down to infamy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not going to run any chance of losing the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not want the Senator to lose the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator does not. I know my friend is too considerate of me for that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But I should like to say——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It can not be with my yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, all right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should be perfectly glad to yield, but I do not want to take any chances.

DEPARTMENTS OF JUSTICE AND NAVY OPPOSE BILL.

Mr. President, I do not want Senators to think that I am arguing for a myth, because I am not. The integrity of the measure which is embodied in this conference report has been challenged by two great departments of our Government. When two of the great departments of our Government protest against the enactment of this legislation, surely, sir, a man is not without some warrant in standing here at this hour to speak against it. So I beg permission, Mr. President, to take it up with some thoroughness.

Mr. President, there is a little more behind this; and I do not want to reflect upon anybody. I have a kindliness of feeling for the people out West. My early boyhood was passed in what we then called the West. I have a sympathetic understanding of the responsibilities and the perplexities that besiege the Members from the West with respect to the disposition of the natural resources—coal and oil. We went through that in Wisconsin when I was a boy, and we took exactly the course that you want to take here, and it did not help us any. It delivered us to monopoly, as I purpose to demonstrate that the course you want to take here will deliver you, not from monopoly but to monopoly; not only you but the balance of the country as well.

When it comes to a discussion of the various provisions of the bill I shall show that its enactment has been resisted step by step from the time it was brought to the attention of the office of the Attorney General of the United States down to yesterday. Senators have been advised that the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy were satisfied with this legislation. Senators and Members of the House have been informed by the zealous advocates of this conference report that these departments that have been resisting its enactment for two years were ready to lay down their hands and welcome its passage.

I offer that as another reason, added to those I have already given, why the advocates of this measure have lost control of their sense of proportion and their judgment of values with respect to it, and that they are not wise counselors to us in these brief and crowded hours.

I, and I know other Senators, have been told that it was all right, so far as the Secretary of the Navy was concerned, that the Department of Justice was satisfied. But on yesterday came the startling information from each of those officers that they were being misquoted in favor of this legislation. Pile those things one on top of the other, the long delay in the conferees coming to an agreement, the reaching out to bring the Alaskan coal fields under the terms of the bill in violation of the rules of the Senate, making it possible to acquire title to the very lands that were in question and which led to the removal from office of Mr. Ballinger as Secretary of the Interior and his retirement in disgrace—coupled with that fact, restive under the reports that were being circulated that the Department of Justice and the Navy Department were favorable to this legislation, a letter from the head of each of those departments was elicited on yesterday disavowing these statements. These letters appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day. Coupling these things together, I say it imposes upon every Senator who feels responsibility for the future of the coal, the oil, the phosphates, and other mineral resources of this country the obligation of scanning this matter with the very greatest care.

HOW THE LIEU LAND MEASURE WAS PUT THROUGH.

In saying that I do not intend to be construed as imputing improper motives to anybody. Men become warped in their judgments. Why, heavens and earth, shall we forget the things that have occurred within these walls? In the closing hours of a Congress there was put through here, against the warning protest of Senator Pettigrew on this floor, attached, I think it was, to an appropriation bill, a provision giving the railroad companies of the United States the right to exchange undesirable lands included within their land grants for lands anywhere in the public domain. The lavish hand of an inconsiderate Congress had given these railroads grants of land for 20 miles on each side of their rights of way, and in the closing days of another inconsiderate Congress a proposition was enacted that allowed the railroad companies to surrender any of that land within their land grants; in many cases it was a barren mountain side; it was not desirable; it was not marketable; but in its closing hours a Congress permitted the roads to turn back that land into the public domain for our soldiers returning from France while the railroads were permitted to go into the public domain and select choice timberlands and coal lands and other lands in exchange. I tell you, Mr. President, Congress itself makes mistakes, and those mistakes are made generally just at a period of legislation such as we are in now, when the channels of legislation are filled to the banks upon either side and when men can not scan things with care and when personal appeals are made to Senators and Representatives. Who has not been called out into the Marble Room in the last few days to be told, "I hope you will not object to this thing; it is all right"; and you say, "What is it?" "Well, it is so-and-so, and so-and-so." You do not have the time to look into it, and if it is somebody you happen to know, some one upon whose judgment you depend, you accept it, but his judgment may be colored a little bit by some stock he has in the thing but about which he does not tell you.

One of the greatest scandals of legislation in the history of the United States Senate and of Congress was that right given to the railroad companies to exchange the bad land along the rights of way for the choicest lands in our great domain.

I am not impeaching the integrity of the Senators who passed that. Sometimes, you know, in moments of indignation reading about that, I have wondered if some of them did not know more than they seemed to know about it. But I think we are all of us prone to believe that everybody wants to do about what is right. A thing comes along at the last minute here, and there is a jury which has been locked up for six months on bread and water, or rather a conference committee, that has argued and struggled until their patience and their judgments are worn to shreds and patches, and then, in haste, at the last moment they take the plunge and agree. It is not an independent, free judgment; in a measure it is a coerced judgment.

So I think we ought to take it with some degree of allowance, and particularly when men who are serving the public interests like the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy for months and months resist the enactment of this legislation, and then, owing, probably, to some misunderstanding that arises from some defect in our cable service, their activities become somewhat curtailed along about the time this conference report comes in.

ATTORNEY GENERAL KEEPS RECORD STRAIGHT.

Then finally when the President came home and saw the bill and talked with the Secretary of the Navy and his Attorney General and got their point of view as to the changes made in conference, the clamps seem to be off. We do not know just what took place. We must surmise; but, anyway, yesterday the Attorney General felt himself free at least to clear his skirts from the seeming inconsistency that the silence which had fallen upon him allowed to be inferred; and there was offered in the House by Mr. FREAR, a Member from Wisconsin, this message found on page 4492 of the RECORD, wired by the Attorney General to Mr. Gifford Pinchot, who had presumably asked him about it and received this answer, which must have been transmitted by Mr. Pinchot to Mr. FREAR. That message from the Attorney General reads as follows. It is dated Washington, February 26, 1919:

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
1218 Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia, Pa.:

In reply to your Western Union wire of the 26th, no one can truthfully say that I have favored the conference report on the so-called coal and oil leasing bill. Members of both Houses of Congress are aware of the fact that I have declined to advocate its passage.

THOMAS W. GREGORY.

Mr. President, before I conclude I shall show to the Senate from testimony of the Attorney General, pages and pages of the record, to the effect that he fought step by step against this legislation. He was on record not once, not in some ill-considered and premature statement, but he was on record as it will appear as I progress to unfold my story, as a result of action brought in the various Federal courts and carried through to the Supreme Court of the United States, to protect the public rights against the encroachment of men who are to-day represented in the lobbies about the Congress of the United States, seeking to secure this legislation, men who have been seeking to get confirmed by legislation rights which the courts have denied to them. Not only the Department of Justice has taken that view but the Supreme Court has passed upon it. That ought to be pretty persuasive with Senators.

Suppose the court had not passed upon it, and the Attorney General had sent word down here that in his opinion this thing ought not to be done; that the Government had rights there; that it had title to the property which these men in violation of the Executive order had sought improperly to gain control over? Why, if we had no more than that, it seems to me we ought to halt and not in the last 72 hours of the life of this Congress enact a legislative proposition that had the opposition of the Department of Justice.

NEED OF ANOTHER RULE.

I say it is time for the Senate to make another rule in addition to that designed to prevent conferees reporting a matter which was not submitted to them. We need another rule; and in my humble judgment, at some time, in the interest of good legislation, we will enact a rule that in the short session all bills originating in either House shall be sent to the other House not later than the 10th day of January, and that after that period no legislation shall be received, and then we will provide—we may vary it somewhat—but we will put a limitation on hasty and ill-considered legislation affecting the public interest, vital to the life, happiness, and prosperity of the people of this country. We will say in our rules something like this, I apprehend, that committees receiving these measures after a reasonable time, to be named in the rule—a month, five weeks, or six weeks—shall report them out. As it is now, committees can hold back legislation until the eleventh hour and the fifty-ninth minute, and then can bring it into the United States Senate or the House of Representatives and drive it through. It goes over to the other body and the pressure behind it secures hasty consideration of it, and it becomes a subject of conference. The powers of the conferees give it privilege; it can be brought in at any hour, and brush aside legislation that has been well considered; it can command a right of way to the consciences and the judgment—the ill-considered judgment—and the vote of Members of the body. You see them scurrying about here, saying, "I do not know what this is; I hardly know how to vote upon this proposition." It comes up under the rule and you are faced with responsibility. You do the best you can; you ask somebody if he has examined it; and if he has not examined it you ask some one else if he has, and beg him to tell you what he thinks about it. You get the best idea you can and discharge your duty as best you can.

Mr. President, you will not do business that way very much longer. Some time or other the House will say to the Senate and the Senate will say to the House, "Whatever legislative measures you propose you shall consider and send over to the Senate by such and such a date of the session"; and the Senate will say to its various committees, "Whatever bills you are to report you shall report for consideration of the Senate by such and such a time." There may be some emergency provision that will relax the rigidity of this rule, but I apprehend that sooner or later the Senate, which wants to do what is right, will provide some way of protecting the integrity of its proceedings by rules, just as they saw the wisdom of a rule to prevent new matter being put in by conferees.

I can turn to the page in the RECORD, when I happened to be making something of the same sort of a speech that I am making here to-day, where I said, "Mr. President, I predict the time will come when we will have a rule which will deny the right of conferees to put new matter in their conference reports." The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], sitting in the chair by which I am now standing, said, "Yes; we should have a rule at once on that subject." It was but a few months after that when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] introduced a proposal to amend the rules, and a little later we had such a rule. I do not mean to say that I am responsible for it. I just happened to stumble on that line of thought while I was talking here one day about some new matter, which we had not considered, that came in under the privilege of a conference report. It had the right to go through; you could debate it—you could protest all you pleased—but our rules did not permit the conference report to be amended.

MUST TAKE THE WHOLE DOSE.

Suppose that 99 per cent of a conference report met the approval of your judgment and that 1 per cent of it was very bad in your opinion; you have no choice; you have to vote to pass the 99 per cent and stand for the bad 1 per cent of it. Of course, you could not amend the conference report, because that would be an endless chain; you would be doing over just what the committees do and just what the Senate does when it considers the bill in the first instance. We will have to work this thing out in some way, Senators; but I tell you that one of the things that we can do to protect ourselves is to provide that the great important measures shall come before the Senate not four days, not a week, not two weeks before the adjourning time, and then come in all together, when, work as you will, you can not discharge your obligations, you can not act intelligently; but we can and must provide by rule that they shall be reported early enough for full and fair consideration. So, Mr. President, I say that this experience, this contest that we are having now, may work out some good for the Senate.

I know it is a thankless task for one to do what I am doing here to-day. I am very fond of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who goes out of this body on the 4th of March, and who I believe to be a thoroughly conscientious legislator. I do not agree with his judgment many times, but he is a conscientious legislator, a man who has a splendid record behind him in his own State. I knew something about his record as executive of that State. I should like to agree with him about this; he has come to me here about it again and again, and talked with me about it. But, Mr. President, at some time or other somebody or other has to make a protest and put up a flag of warning. He may get shot; he is liable to. I have lots of scars; I have lost a good many friends; I have a lonesome time; I have had a lonesome time here in the Senate. I like good fellowship as well as anybody does. I am not claiming any superiority of judgment or any superiority of righteousness. Whatever I have done I have done because I could not help it. I have just kind of gone this way because I had to. I do not stop to analyze it. I yield to other men the same regard for doing right according to their light that I have. But it has been my misfortune all through my political life that I have been with the under dog. I did not, some way or other, just take the easier way; and there is an easier way.

I am just hoping, you know, that out of this labored and rambling and very imperfect effort of mine we shall get some reforms in legislation. I can not tell you about certain personal considerations that make this course of mine very hard for me to-day—unusually so—but for a score of years I have had fixed convictions about these natural resources, and I can not, I dare not, do other than follow my convictions.

SOME COAL CONSERVATION HISTORY.

Mr. President, I do not want to talk vainglorioously or boastfully to the Senate this afternoon. I came to the United States Senate in 1906. I was put upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. One of the first bills that came to my attention was a measure proposing to sell the coal lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in the Indian Territory. According to my recollection, 437,000 acres of coal lands were involved. I was the only member of that committee who resisted the proposition. I had investigated it a little during the brief time that I had been on the committee, and I found that whatever segregated lands belonging to these tribes that had been disposed of had come within the control of certain interests in that country, and had resulted, not in any benefit to the public but in gouging the public and producing high prices for coal. The land had passed out in the same way that this would pass out of the control of the Government, as I see it. So when voted down in the committee on the proposition, I asked leave to oppose it on the floor. They laughed at me in the committee. I was new. The bill came to the floor of the Senate carrying the provision that the committee had put into it. As best I could—and it was a mighty clumsy performance, for it was about the first time that I had raised my voice here, and, as I remember, I was frightened——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Would the Senator kindly indicate the period of time when that happened?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was in 1906. I had not been here long.

Mr. ASHURST. I wanted to make the point that no Senators who were then on the Committee on Indian Affairs are now members of that committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no. I am not meaning to reflect upon anybody.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that; but I wanted the RECORD to show it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The members of the committee at that time were just as good men as I was. I just had this fool notion, you know, of wanting to save that coal for the public; but I was afraid that if it passed into the hands of private interests under the terms proposed that the public would not get the benefit of it; that it would not be a competing proposition with the coal that was already being mined down in that country.

Mr. President, this has a little bit of historical interest, and in a way explains the matter, and I offer it as my reason for my very great interest in this measure. It is a somewhat interesting history of which I have confirmation by private correspondence and by the records of Congress.

That proposition to dispose of the coal which was part of the Indian appropriation bill of 1906 was debated here for two days on this floor. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], if he were present, would remember it. He came to my seat and sat there, and in whispers made suggestions to me to stay my faltering steps in my first effort to walk down the aisle here and say a few words. As I remember, after a two days' discussion, the committee withdrew the proposition and substituted for it a resolution that the committee should go down into the Territory and investigate the situation there. As I have followed it, that coal remains the property of the Indians now just as it was then.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF ALL FUEL LANDS.

That led to considerable comment in various publications. I was surprised that it attracted any attention; it seemed to be such a simple thing; but the Outlook and a number of other publications printed some editorials about it. It happened that I went up to the White House a few days after, and President Roosevelt, as I came into his room, extended his hand to me, and said, "Senator LA FOLLETTE, you have done a mighty good thing with regard to the coal lands in the Indian Territory; I congratulate you." I replied, "The stopping of the sale of that coal until some plan can be worked out that will finally protect both the Indians and the public in that section was worth while, and Mr. President, I beg you to consider whether you should not by Executive order withdraw the coal lands, the oil lands, and the other lands in the public domain containing natural resources from public sale and entry until some plan can be worked out to conserve and protect the public interest there as well." He looked at me, and said, "By Jove, that is a mighty important thing. I like the sound of that. Have I the power to do it?" I said, "Mr. President, I have looked into it somewhat, and, as I remember, there is a precedent back many years ago of the Secretary of the Interior having issued such an order as that—an Executive order—which was sustained." "Well," he said, "I will put the Attorney General at work upon it." Congress was about to adjourn, and I said, "Mr. President, if the Attorney General expresses any doubt about it, do not be afraid. Congress is on the eve of adjournment, give the public the benefit of the doubt, issue an Executive order withdrawing these coal lands, so that they may not be grabbed off at the minimum price of $10 or $20 an acre; hold them until the matter can be investigated, and in the next Congress it will be possible to get legislation on the subject."

I promised President Roosevelt that I would introduce a joint resolution authorizing him to withdraw those public lands underlaid with coal and other minerals, but I said, "We are bound to adjourn in a few days. It probably can not get through. If it does not get through, I hope you will go ahead and do it. I trust that the investigations that you are to have the Attorney General make will confirm the suggestion I made to you that you have that authority and that there is a precedent for it." I suggested to him that when withdrawn the lands should be leased, and that a law should be enacted that the leases should contain provisions preventing waste in the mining operations of coal or oil or any other natural resource; furthermore, that if there was any collusive bargaining between those who had leases, fixing prices to the public on coal or oil or any of the products of these public lands, it should terminate the lease; and I appealed to President Roosevelt not to leave it to the Secretary of the Interior, because the records will show that certain Secretaries of the Interior have been easy and lax in permitting the public domain to be taken from this country, if not in violation of the letter of the law, in plain violation of the spirit of the law.

ADMINISTRATION SUPPORT OF A LEASING BILL.

I said, "I am going to introduce a bill of that sort at the next session." President Roosevelt said, "If you do that, I will take it up in my message and indorse the idea, and I will put the strength of the administration behind your bill." I asked President Roosevelt to request the Attorney General to assign to me the best legislative draftsman in his office. He gave me a note to the Attorney General requesting that that be done, and I worked with that gentleman for weeks and months. We briefed up the legislation of practically all the mining laws of the world on the subject of conserving coal and other resources, and drafted a bill. We went over it again and again and again, and when I left at the conclusion of that session of Congress and said good-by to President Roosevelt I told him I hoped he would issue the Executive orders; that the bill would be ready at the next session.

I was filling speaking engagements during the summer and had not been out over the country more than two or three weeks before I saw in a newspaper on a train that the first Executive order withdrawing from sale or entry the lands containing these natural resources had been issued.

At the end of the vacation I returned somewhat early in order to confer with the President on this subject. I never shall forget his greeting. It was this: "I am glad to see you. I hope you have your coal bill ready. I have presented the subject in the message." I told him the coal bill was ready to be submitted and I should like to have him go over it with me. He made an appointment, and I spent an evening with him. We went over it. He approved of it again and again as he walked back and forth, and smote the table and said at the reading of paragraph after paragraph, "Admirable! Admirable!"

It was not my work alone; it was the work of one of the ablest draftsmen of the Attorney General's office, who had spent months in briefing up the subject. The President asked me if I could introduce the bill right away. I told him that it would be introduced the next day. He said the administration would give support to it, and the newspapers contained a column or so approving of the bill as an administration measure. That was a leasing bill. I reintroduced it, session after session, for many years.

Now, Mr. President, I ventured to state this personal experience and personal narrative as in some measure explaining, perhaps, my exceptional and unusual interest in this subject and the fact that I have looked into the matter, maybe, more than I otherwise would.

NOT A HASTY JUDGMENT.

When I digressed, as I had no expectation of doing, I had called the attention of the Senate to the fact that through Congressman FREAR, of Wisconsin, there was brought to the attention of the House of Representatives the fact that the Attorney General wants it understood that he is not advocating the passage of this legislation, and I am going to show you before I conclude that he has been before the committees of Congress actively opposing it. It is about a year and a half, I think, since the Attorney General asked me to come to his office and discuss this legislation with him personally. He declared his opposition in no uncertain terms, and I was glad to see this telegram in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD yesterday. However much the conferees at the last moment have compromised their judgments and convictions under tremendous pressure in order to effect an agreement I do not know, but I do know that his judgment has not been warped; and let me say to you that his was no hasty judgment such as you are forming here in the Senate and such as we are compelled to form from our superficial knowledge of a matter brought in at this hour. Upward of two years ago the interest of the Attorney General was enlisted in the subject. Now, am I looking at it from a distorted angle? Is there something wrong with my vision? The Attorney General looks at it to-day just as he did a year and a half and two years ago, and he has given more time to it than I have been able to.

But that is not all, Mr. President. He was considering the legal rights of the Government in some of the territory involved, very rich in oil deposits, which had been invaded in violation of law. The Attorney General was called in, as I understand, to protect the interests of the Government against the encroachments of oil companies and individuals who went upon lands that had been reserved by the Government for the people.

Now, then, another one of the great departments of the Government was interested in that subject. I am not going much into detail in this matter, because I have got to take it up again in a more detailed way when I come to go into the testimony of Attorney General Gregory and the testimony of Secretary Daniels. But just preliminary to reading a communication from Secretary Daniels, dated yesterday, I make this statement: That as Secretary of the Navy he became much interested in the Government having a supply of oil to be used by the more modern vessels of the Navy Department, constructed to burn oil instead of coal. It seems that the progressive nations of the world within the last few years, as I understand, have changed from coal-burning war vessels to oil-burning war vessels.

SECRETARY DANIELS WANTS NAVY INTERESTS SAFEGUARDED.

A few years ago, and I think it was pretty nearly coincident with Secretary Daniels coming to the head of the Navy Department, those interested in naval construction were giving vital consideration to the needs of the Navy, to the importance of the United States Government segregating from its oil fields enough of oil-producing lands to insure a supply for the Navy, not for to-morrow or next year or next decade but to guarantee to the United States in perpetuity, perhaps, that there should be always a supply of oil reposing in the reservoirs nature had provided.

Mr. President, I say that was a most commendable spirit. What folly for the Government to part with this oil at the figure that is proposed in this legislation or that has existed in any legislation which it has been possible to put through Congress, and then buy the oil back at Standard Oil prices to supply the Navy and tax the people for the difference. Suppose you individually owned some territory—160 acres of land—that had oil on it, and you could use it for the comfort of your family, for the energy, the motive power required upon your farm, and you had the facilities to do it, and could extract it at a reasonable cost, would you not be a consummate fool to turn that over to some great oil company that could put what price it pleased upon your use of that product?

That is what Secretary Daniels thought. He said the Government has this territory, rich in oil. The President ought to set off a section of this land so that the Navy may be supplied; it ought to be large enough so that there will never be any doubt about the future, and we can hereafter arrange about how that oil shall be taken out; that is not so important; that will develop in time; it may be advisable for the Government to take it out itself; it may be advisable for the Government to make some arrangement to have somebody else take it out, but we can fix all that. But there is one thing dead sure. I can imagine Secretary Daniels saying to himself, "It is not good business for the United States to let these great oil companies acquire that land and then buy at Standard Oil prices the oil which the Government is going to need for its Navy and tax the people of the United States to pay the price. That looks all right to me."

I got a good deal of enthusiasm for it, and so much enthusiasm about it that I talked it over with Secretary Daniels as I had talked it over before with the Attorney General. Attorney General Gregory called it to my attention first, and I took quite a bit of interest in it. My former colleague was very much interested in it. It was my misfortune to be absent from the Senate for many months, owing to sickness in my family last year, but my colleague, former Senator Husting, now deceased, was a member of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and he was deeply interested in this question. He spent months in his investigations, and as a member of the committee he prepared an exhaustive report upon the bill, dissenting from the action of the majority of the committee of the Senate. He did not file that report. Congress adjourned, as I remember, on the 6th day of October. He submitted copies of the report to some of his friends and stated that upon his return to the Senate in December, after conferring with the President and perhaps with members of the Cabinet about it, he should file the report. It was his misfortune to lose his life before the next session began, and that report was never filed.

At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded, that H. R. 16136, the bond bill, might be taken up; after which the Senate took a recess until 7 p. m.

Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Senate. After having spoken a few minutes,

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me that I may submit a report?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I report favorably from the Committee on Woman Suffrage the following joint resolution——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was made with the object and purpose of killing the leasing bill. The Senator is setting up his individual judgment against the voice of three-fourths of the Members of the House of Representatives voting upon the conference report after full debate. The vote was 227 to 75.

The Senator from Wisconsin laid great stress upon the fact that this conference report is before the Senate in the closing hours of the session and he seems to intimate that under no circumstances should a conference report be presented to the Senate at that time.

The two most important measures the Senator from Wisconsin ever had enacted in this body were the seamen's act, a bill which was passed in the very closing hours of the session, and the act providing for the valuation of the railroads, which was passed and approved on the 3d of March as the session closed.

Mr. President, it is apparent that when a man has a measure of his own it makes no difference at what time it is presented to the Senate if he can get consideration of it, but if anyone presents a measure which the Senator from Wisconsin does not approve then he brands as pernicious practice the attempt to put the measure through the Senate in the closing hours of a session. However, these are not the closing hours of the session. There are still many hours left for debate, because we do not adjourn until the 4th of March and this is the 1st of March.

But, Mr. President, how will that practice against which the Senator inveighs compare with the action of the man who is attempting, not by a fair elucidation of the subject, but by pure and simple filibuster, to force his will against the opinion of all the Members of the House of Representatives who voted in favor of this measure and fully two-thirds of the Members of the Senate. This measure was passed by the Senate in January, 1918, after a thorough discussion. The House amendment to the bill was adopted by the House of Representatives after thorough discussion in May, 1918. A conference committee was appointed who at last, after numerous concessions, agreed on February 1, 1919, to the conference report now being considered by the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why did not the Senator move the adoption of the report?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have tried to time and again. I tried to interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin, and I could not get him to yield. He would not surrender the floor. There is a rule of the Senate that is far more pernicious than any other—that is the rule permitting one Senator to defeat a measure by unlimited debate, even if three-fourths of the Senators are in favor of the legislation.

Now, Mr. President, he has taken up this conference report and has criticized it. He has referred to the coal lands of the West which were withdrawn from entry in President Roosevelt's administration and reclassified with such high valuations affixed as to prevent any locations. I might say that the law had always been to permit the entry of coal lands; but notwithstanding that, it was his desire and his suggestion that these lands should be leased. If the Senator lived out West, if he lived in a State that has millions of acres of public coal lands, he would know that coal lands can not be developed under a leasing system. That is plain and clear to any person who understands the situation. Why is it that they can not be developed under such circumstances? It is because development of coal lands involves investment of large sums of money in order successfully to compete with the great coal companies of the country. There must be installed the most modern machinery, sometimes at a cost of millions. Frequently railroad construction must be undertaken, because the coal lands that are close to railroads have generally been taken up. So the only way those lands can be developed is by a bond issue, by going to New York City and saying, "We want to borrow enough money to finance this coal-leasing proposition." The interview then proceeds something like this:

"What kind of a title have you?"

"We have a lease from the Government."

"Can the lease be forfeited?"

"Yes; forfeiture clauses are contained in the lease."

"Then to-morrow we might find that we had no security for this bond issue."

"Yes."

A careful business man, realizing that the security rests solely upon the favor of some officer, naturally would turn down the proposition and refuse to lend money for development. That is the reason why there is no development of coal lands in the West. It is because attempt has been made to force a leasing system upon us, and under a leasing system capitalists will not lend money sufficient to develop the mines.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] suggests to me the effect of the bill that we passed concerning Alaska coal. That was purely and simply a leasing bill, and it was heralded that it would be the great developer for Alaska. But, Mr. President, it has been four years and a half since we passed that bill, and yet, notwithstanding that, only four applications for leases have been made, and two of those fell through because of the very fact that the promoters could not borrow money with which to develop the mines. The other two are small concerns; of course, you can have some development under a leasing system when a mine is small and furnishes coal for the local community.

The Senator from Wisconsin indicated how these lands, about 15 years ago, were withdrawn from entry and then such high valuations placed on them, to the extent of $300, $400, and $500 an acre, as would make it unprofitable for anyone to develop them.

The Senator no doubt was earnest and honest in his desire and hoped to benefit the West, but, instead of proving beneficial, the mines have been locked up so that no development whatever has taken place. How did that affect my State, the State of Colorado? There is a great company there that has 100,000 acres of coal lands obtained by a Mexican grant when that portion of the country was a part of Mexico. With that acreage they have the greatest coal-mining property in the entire State and virtually have a monopoly of the coal production. They take out of the pockets of the consumers of the State of Colorado $1 a ton upon every ton that is produced in that State. So, instead of the defeat of this measure being in the interest of the people, it is in the interest of the coal monopoly existing there. There is enough public coal lands in Colorado to provide 3,000 competing companies each with a mine of the area of 2,560 acres. Wyoming has in its borders sufficient public coal land to provide 4,000 such competing companies.

Mr. President, the Senator says he is very eager to guard against monopoly. I can assure him that this bill provides in the most stringent terms against any monopoly. Here are the provisions affecting ownership acquired by competitive bidding, with a minimum price of not less than $10 or $20 an acre, depending upon proximity to a railroad; here is the provision as to those who make application to the Secretary of the Interior for coal lands and for the opportunity of buying the same:

No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area at any one time nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation or stockholder of such corporation shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition, and no longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

The charge that monopoly would result from the passage of the bill is absurd in view of that provision. It is a charge without any foundation whatever.

Now, let me direct attention to another provision of the bill:

That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stockholdership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General in the courts for the purpose.

Does that sound like monopoly? Is there anything in the bill that justifies the accusation of the Senator from Wisconsin that it would foster monopoly, when the matter is absolutely checked and controlled by the strongest language it is possible to devise?

The Senator has the idea that there is a limited quantity of coal. According to the Geological Survey, we have in the State of Colorado 371,000,000,000 tons of coal, which is enough to supply not only Colorado, not only the United States, but the entire world for 300 years; and yet these resources are locked up and held so that they can not be developed. In effect that policy creates monopoly control in a large corporation, which imposes a heavy burden upon the people of our State.

Mr. President, none of the States of the Union had any royalties imposed upon them by a leasing system. Indiana was given her coal and all of her natural resources so that the State could use or develop them as she deemed proper. So long as the title to these lands remains in the Government they can not be taxed, and you can see what a heavy burden that is upon the people of the State who own property subject to taxation. They must pay all the taxes for State, county, and school purposes. The idea of not taxing lands, of holding them for years and years, and not permitting them to be developed, is something against which the Western States have protested time and time again. There has not been a convention held in the Western States, whether a Republican convention or a Democratic convention, which has not protested in the strongest and most vigorous terms against this prevention of the development of the lands in those States by the leasing system. Mr. President, you know that taxation of land, with a reasonable rate of interest upon each yearly payment, in 30 years amounts to the value of the land.

Our lands have been locked up for nearly 60 years; they have been completely locked up since the orders of 15 years ago fixing prices beyond the reach of reason, and it can readily be seen, while title to the lands is held in the Government and they are not subject to taxation, what a terrible burden it imposes upon us. The people practically pay for those lands every 30 years by having the taxes increased on their own private holdings. So, when we look at the question from the standpoint of what is fair to the States, it becomes an absolute wrong, which very many Senators have recognized, and which, under this bill, we have sought to correct by giving the option to the applicant as to whether he will lease the land or whether he will buy the land upon an offering at public auction.

Mr. President, it is said that under this bill coal may become subject to monopoly. I deny that there can be any monopoly if the bill is enacted. There are enough coal lands in the Rocky Mountain region to permit of the creation of 15,000 competing coal companies which could proceed to develop coal under the system provided in this bill. That, of course, would reduce the price of coal, and consequently would encourage manufacturing and would develop the country, not only by affording a cheaper fuel but in affording cheaper means for the generation of power.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has been frantic in his endeavor to defeat this bill. There is no reason on earth why it should be defeated if we wish to be fair to the States of the West.

In the enabling act of every State that has been admitted into the Union there has been contained a clause to the effect that the State should be admitted upon equal terms with the other States "in every respect whatsoever," and inasmuch as every State, until the States of the Rocky Mountain region were reached, was given the control of its natural resources, it is unfair to the Western States, which are so distant from the markets and are at the disadvantage of being compelled to pay high transportation rates, that they should be denied access to the resources within their borders. It is absolutely wrong that a burden should be imposed upon us in addition to the payment of royalties—even if the lands could be developed under a leasing system—because under perpetual ownership by the Government of the coal lands they can not be taken for State, county, and school purposes. It has been estimated that the value of the public coal lands of Colorado is $500,000,000. What a great wrong it is by perpetual ownership in the Government to exempt them from taxation forever.

It seems to me an outrage on the people of the West that we should be compelled to suffer defeat of this measure by tactics that consist of talking for hours, so that the session will close before the bill can come to a vote.

I promised the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that I would be brief. I should like to go into a discussion of the terms of this bill relating to oil, because a fair and equitable arrangement has been made in that regard. I can demonstrate that it is for the best interests of the Navy that the naval reserves should be treated exactly as they are treated in this bill. The bill is not framed in the interest of any person to permit them to grab any land in the naval reserves. To develop them the only thing that is required is that the wells which are already producing should be continued in operation, for if they are not the result will be that the wells will be drained by adjoining wells in the alternate railroad sections or on other neighboring sections. In addition to that they might fill with water, which would ruin them and to a large extent would destroy the value of the naval reserves.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to give the following notice. I will state that the proposed amendment is the bill reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee and the purpose is to restore to the Interstate Commerce Commission the control and jurisdiction which we took away from it when we passed the railroad-control act.

The notice was read by the Secretary, as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] hereby gives notice that on Monday, March 3, 1919, or when the above bill is under consideration, he will move to suspend the third paragraph of Rule XVI for the purpose of making it in order to offer as an amendment to section 7 of the bill H. R. 16187, the general deficiency appropriation bill, the matter hereto attached and made a part hereof:

Amend section 7 by adding thereto the following:

"That section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. That carriers, while under Federal control, shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws, or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or any other act applicable to such Federal control. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. All final judgments for a plaintiff or plaintiffs rendered in actions for personal injuries or for loss of or damage to property shall be promptly paid by the Director General of Railroads either from the operating revenue of the defendant or defendants or the revolving fund herein created. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control, or of any act of Congress, or official order or proclamation relating thereto, shall, upon motion of either party, be transferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"'That during the period of Federal control the right to initiate or change rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices exercised by the carriers now under Federal control, prior to the 29th day of December, 1917, shall hereafter be exercised by the President or by the Director General of Railroads, but such right shall be exercised under all the limitations and conditions which were imposed upon it by the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have as full and complete authority and jurisdiction to set aside, change, modify, suspend, or otherwise review all such rates, fares, charges, classifications, and regulations as though the Government had not assumed the possession and control of said transportation systems. To that end the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, is hereby declared to be in full force and effect with respect to rates, fares, charges, classifications, practices, and regulations, anything in the act approved March 21, 1918, to the contrary notwithstanding. The procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be the same as formerly, except that the Director General of Railroads shall stand in the stead of the carriers, and all notices theretofore required to be given to or served upon carriers shall be given to or served on said Director General. All orders or findings of the commission shall bind the Director General to the same extent as they formerly bound the carriers.

"'In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, practices, or regulations, or any changes or proposed changes in the same, the reasonableness thereof or any discrimination therein, the rule to be applied shall be the same as existed under the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, and under the general law of the subject as it was prior to the Government's possession and control.'"

VICTORY LIBERTY LOAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty-bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance without amendment.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second liberty bond act is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. (a) That in addition to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness and war-savings certificates authorized by this act and amendments thereto, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to borrow from time to time on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $7,000,000,000, and to issue therefor notes of the United States at not less than par in such form or forms and denomination or denominations, containing such terms and conditions, and at such rate or rates of interest, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and each series of notes so issued shall be payable at such time not less than one year nor more than five years from the date of its issue as he may prescribe, and may be redeemable before maturity (at the option of the United States) in whole or in part, upon not more than one year's nor less than four months' notice, and under such rules and regulations and during such period as he may prescribe.

"(b) The notes herein authorized may be issued in any one or more of the following series as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe in connection with the issue thereof:

"(1) Exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate or inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority;

"(2) Exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations;

"(3) Exempt, both as to principal and interest, as provided in paragraph (2); and with an additional exemption from the taxes referred to in clause (b) of such paragraph, of the interest on an amount of such notes the principal of which does not exceed $30,000, owned by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation; or

"(4) Exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) all income, excess-profits, and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations.

"(c) If the notes authorized under this section are offered in more than one series bearing the same date of issue, the holder of notes of any such series shall (under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury) have the option of having such notes held by him converted at par into notes of any other such series offered bearing the same date of issue.

"(d) None of the notes authorized by this section shall bear the circulation privilege. The principal and interest thereof shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value. The word 'bond' or 'bonds' where it appears in sections 8, 9, 10, 14, and 15 of this act as amended, and sections 3702, 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes, and section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended, but in such sections only, shall be deemed to include notes issued under this section."

SEC. 2. (a) That until the expiration of five years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, in addition to the exemptions provided in section 7 of the second liberty bond act in respect to the interest on an amount of bonds and certificates, authorized by such act and amendments thereto, the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, and in addition to all other exemptions provided in the second liberty bond act or the supplement to second liberty bond act, the interest received on and after January 1, 1919, on an amount of bonds of the first liberty loan converted, dated November 15, 1917, May 9, 1918, or October 24, 1918, the second liberty loan, converted and unconverted, the third liberty loan, and the fourth liberty loan, the principal of which does not exceed $30,000 in the aggregate, owned by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation, shall be exempt from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations.

(b) In addition to the exemption provided in subdivision (a), and in addition to the other exemptions therein referred to, the interest received on and after January 1, 1919, on an amount of the bonds therein specified the principal of which does not exceed $20,000 in the aggregate, owned by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation, shall be exempt from the taxes therein specified: Provided, That no owner of such bonds shall be entitled to such exemption in respect to the interest on an aggregate principal amount of such bonds exceeding three times the principal amount of notes of the Victory liberty loan originally subscribed for by such owner and still owned by him at the date of his tax return.

SEC. 3. That section 5 of the second liberty bond act, as amended by section 4 of the third liberty bond act, is hereby further amended by striking out the figures "$8,000,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000,000,000."

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the fourth liberty bond act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That, notwithstanding the provisions of the second liberty bond act or of the War Finance Corporation act or of any other acts, bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness of the United States and bonds of the War Finance Corporation shall, while beneficially owned by a nonresident alien individual, or a foreign corporation, partnership, or association not engaged in business in the United States, be exempt both as to principal and interest from any and all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States or by any local taxing authority."

SEC. 5. That the privilege of converting 4 per cent bonds of the first liberty loan converted and 4 per cent bonds of the second liberty loan into 4½ per cent bonds, which privilege arose on May 9, 1918, and expired on November 9, 1918, may be extended by the Secretary of the Treasury for such period, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such rules and regulations, as he may prescribe. For the purpose of computing the amount of interest payable, bonds presented for conversion under any such extension shall be deemed to be converted on the dates for the payment of the semiannual interest on the respective bonds so presented for conversion next succeeding the date of such presentation.

SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first liberty bond act, the second liberty bond act, the third liberty bond act, the fourth liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter until all such bonds and notes are retired there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a separate annual report of the action taken under the authority contained in this section.

(b) Sections 3688, 3694, 3695, and 3696 of the Revised Statutes, and so much of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes as provides a permanent annual appropriation of 1 per cent of the entire debt of the United States to be set apart as a sinking fund, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. (a) That until the expiration of 18 months after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to establish, in addition to the credits authorized by section 2 of the second liberty bond act, as amended, credits with the United States for any foreign Government now engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, for the purpose only of providing for purchases of any property owned directly or indirectly by the United States, not needed by the United States, or of any wheat the price of which has been or may be guaranteed by the United States. To the extent of the credits so established from time to time the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make advances to or for the account of any such foreign Government and to receive at par from such foreign Government for the amount of any such advances its obligations hereafter issued bearing such rate or rates of interest, not less than 5 per cent per annum, maturing at such date or dates, not later than October 15, 1938, and containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe. The Secretary, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to enter into such arrangements from time to time with any such foreign Government as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for the payment of such obligations before maturity.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time to convert any short-time obligations of foreign governments which may be received under the authority of this section into long-time obligations of such foreign governments, respectively, maturing not later than October 15, 1938, and in such form and terms as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but the rate or rates of interest borne by any such long-time obligations at the time of their acquisition shall not be less than the rate borne by the short-time obligations so converted into such long-time obligations; and, under such terms and conditions as he may from time to time prescribe, to receive payment, on or before maturity, of any obligations of such foreign governments acquired on behalf of the United States under authority of this section, and, with the approval of the President, to sell any of such obligations (but not at less than par with accrued interest unless otherwise hereafter provided by law), and to apply the proceeds thereof, and any payments so received from foreign governments on account of the principal of such obligations, to the redemption or purchase, at not more than par and accrued interest, of any bonds of the United States issued under the authority of the first liberty bond act or second liberty bond act as amended and supplemented, and if such bonds can not be so redeemed or purchased, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem or purchase any other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States which may at such time be subject to redemption or which can be purchased at not more than par and accrued interest.

(c) For the purposes of this section there is appropriated the unexpended balance of the appropriations made by section 2 of the first liberty bond act and by section 2 of the second liberty bond act as amended by the third liberty bond act and the fourth liberty bond act, but nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit the use of such unexpended balance or any part thereof for the purposes of section 2 of the second liberty bond act, as so amended, subject to the limitations therein contained.

SEC. 8. That the obligations of foreign governments acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act and the second liberty bond act, and amendments and supplements thereto, shall mature at such dates as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such obligations acquired by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act, or through the conversion of short-time obligations acquired under such act, shall mature not later than June 15, 1947, and all other such obligations of foreign governments shall mature not later than October 15, 1938.

SEC. 9. That the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended by adding to Title I thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. (a) That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized, in order to promote commerce with foreign nations through the extension of credits, to make advances upon such terms, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances:

"(1) To any person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in the business in the United States of exporting therefrom domestic products to foreign countries, if such person, firm, corporation, or association is, in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation, unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels. Any such advance shall be made only for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such products, and shall be limited in amount to not more than the contract price therefor, including insurance and carrying or transportation charges to the foreign point of destination if and to the extent that such insurance and carrying or transportation charges are payable in the United States by such exporter to domestic insurers and carriers. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located; and

"(2) To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which after this section takes effect makes an advance to any such person, firm, corporation, or association for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such products. Any such advance shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company to such person, firm, corporation, or association for such purpose.

"(b) The aggregate of the advances made by the corporation under this section remaining unpaid shall never at any time exceed the sum of $1,000,000,000.

"(c) Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1 the advances provided for by this section may be made until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President. Any such advance made by the corporation shall be made upon the promissory note or notes of the borrower, with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, or otherwise. The corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The corporation in its discretion may upon like security extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, the substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond five years from the date on which it was originally made."

SEC. 10. That section 15 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That all net earnings of the corporation not required for its operations shall be accumulated as a reserve fund until such time as the corporation liquidates under the terms of this title. Such reserve fund shall, upon the direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be invested in bonds and obligations of the United States, issued or converted after September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval may be deposited in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or be used from time to time, as well as any other funds of the corporation, in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the corporation. The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositaries for and as fiscal agents of the corporation in the general performance of the powers conferred by this title. Beginning 12 months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States, the directors of the corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and to wind up its affairs; but the directors of the corporation, in their discretion, may, from time to time, prior to such date, sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the corporation. Any balance remaining after the payment of all its debts shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the corporation shall be dissolved."

SEC. 11. That the short title of this act shall be "victory liberty loan act."

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, before the Senator starts—we have reached the point of amendment, I suppose—I should like to offer an amendment, so that the Senator may discuss it, too, in his remarks.

I send to the desk and ask to have stated an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the foot of page 14, to read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the portrait or vignette placed upon any notes or bonds or certificates of indebtedness issued under this act shall be that of Theodore Roosevelt, former President of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not deem it necessary to do more than make a brief statement as to the provisions of the bill. I assume that there will be a good deal of discussion, and I shall, of course, later present some general views with reference to the legislation; but at this time I shall content myself with a mere summary of the different provisions of the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. May I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he give to the Senate his general views relative to this legislation? Nobody, outside of the members of the Finance Committee, knows anything about it, has read the hearings, or knows the reasons for the different features of this bill, some of which are extraordinary. I think the Senator from North Carolina should make a thorough explanation of the bill, so that Senators who have not had an opportunity to acquaint themselves with it may hear from him the reasons for the different provisions of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is very well understood that in order to defray the extraordinary expenses of the great war through which we have just passed the Government has been compelled to contract obligations far in excess of the amount of revenue possible to derive from the ordinary sources upon which the Government relies to defray its ordinary expenses. It was estimated when we were considering the revenue bill that the expenditures of the Government for this fiscal year would amount to about $18,000,000,000. There were Senators who, after having given much study and thought to the subject, reached the conclusion that the Treasury estimates were too low. It was estimated that the expenditures would perhaps reach $20,000,000,000.

As a result of the experience of the Treasury, and since the discussions which took place in the committee room and on the floor upon this subject, I think the opinion of the department is that the expenses will be about midway between the original estimate of the department and the estimate of a number of Senators who addressed the Senate in connection with the revenue bill. It will be not quite twenty billions, yet in excess of eighteen billions. It is now estimated that the expenditures will reach about $19,000,000,000. That liability has already been incurred; or, to speak more accurately, nearly all of that liability has been incurred. Eight-tenths of it, at least, has already been incurred. In order to meet that expenditure we have to rely upon borrowing money, except as to the $6,000,000,000 that we expect to realize from the taxes which we have imposed in the revenue bill just recently enacted.

Beginning with $6,000,000,000 from taxes, it is evident that there will be $13,000,000,000 which it is absolutely necessary, unless the Government is to default in its payments, we shall raise from other sources. We have sold already and applied to this indebtedness $7,000,000,000 of liberty bonds, and $1,000,000,000 of war-saving certificates, making $8,000,000,000 in the total.

Five billion dollars must, therefore, be raised by further borrowing. There can be no further taxation. The rates that we have already imposed upon the people are regarded by everybody as being as high as the great business interests of the country can stand without serious and harmful effects upon the country. No additional taxes of any kind, so far as I know, are contemplated. We must raise this money by borrowing, and raise it within a very short time, because these obligations will all become due before the 1st day of July, and the Government has never yet defaulted in the payment of its obligations. I do not believe that any patriotic American desires under any condition that the Government should default in the payment of its just obligations. If the Government is not to default, then in some way or other we must get this money before the 1st day of July of this year.

Under existing law the only authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to make loans is that contained in the second liberty-loan act as amended. That authorizes him to issue certain bonds. He has issued all the bonds he is authorized under that act to issue except $5,000,000,000. If the Secretary of the Treasury could put upon the market those bonds and could sell them, enough money could be realized from that source, barely enough, to meet the maturing obligations of the Government.

But Senators will remember that liberty bonds which may now be issued are, in the first place, subject to all Federal taxes except normal income taxes. They are subject to surtaxes; they are subject to excess-profits taxes; they are subject to war taxes. The maximum rate of interest prescribed in the liberty-loan act is 4¼ per cent. When the last issue was offered Senators will recall that at first the bonds did not sell readily. They will recall that a nation-wide campaign had to be conducted, that every agency of publicity had to be employed, in order to arouse the patriotic sentiment of the people with respect to sustaining and supporting the Government in the great enterprise in which it was engaged, which at that time had reached a crucial stage. This was necessary in order to successfully float that issue.

If there ever was a time and condition calculated to induce the people to disregard every consideration of profit, to invest their money upon the purely naked basis of patriotic duty, I think Senators will agree with me that that was the condition which existed when we made the last sale of liberty bonds. I think Senators will agree with me further that if it had not been for those conditions, for the fact that in Europe 2,000,000 of our boys were under arms, face to face with the enemy, with the issue hanging in the balance, and with the chances, perhaps, rather against our country, the sales of liberty bonds would have fallen short. Even under those conditions Senators will recall how difficult it was to stir the people up to the point of being willing to invest their money in liberty bonds at a time when the former issues of those bonds were selling in the market at something below par, not as much below par as they are now, but nevertheless selling in the open markets of the country at below par. I do not carry figures very well in my mind. Probably the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who does, can tell me exactly how much they were below par then. I think it was about 2 cents on the dollar.

Mr. SMOOT. At what time?

Mr. SIMMONS. At the time when we were selling the fourth liberty loan bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. The different issues ran from 96 up to about 97 and a fraction.

Mr. SIMMONS. What are they now?

Mr. SMOOT. Ninety-four and a fraction.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the situation has changed. There is sufficient authority in the law as it now exists, as I have stated heretofore, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to put five billions of these bonds upon the market. That amount would be sufficient to meet the deficit in our receipts. But the Secretary of the Treasury gave the committees of the two Houses his judgment respecting the necessity for the enactment of this pending measure after a most thorough investigation had been conducted through the banks and through the vast organization which has been built up by the department, with its ramifications extending to every nook and corner of this country; the vast voluntary organization which has been created, as I said, by the department for the purpose of promoting the sale of these bonds, and which is composed, I am told by the Secretary, of 2,000,000 workers, and is one of the greatest and most extensive organizations, as well as one of the most efficient organizations, ever created in this country, every man and every woman who belongs to that organization having entered it voluntarily, without price and without hope of financial gain, giving time and labor as a free offer of patriotism.

Following a thorough investigation conducted through these agencies existing in every place in the country—and Senators will understand how easy it is for the Treasury Department to quickly feel the pulse of the investing public through an organization such as that—the Secretary of the Treasury comes to the committee of the House and to the committee of the Senate having in charge the financial affairs of the Congress and says in no uncertain or doubtful terms, "After I have made this thorough investigation I say to you that it would be utterly impossible to sell these bonds at par, and the law does not permit them to be sold except at par and at this rate of interest and subject to this rate of taxation."

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that the reason why the majority reported this bill leaving the rate of interest to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not discussing that. I have not reached that point of my statement yet.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to know if that is the reason. If the Senator will reach it later, of course I will withhold my question at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. The reason why we have left that with the Secretary of the Treasury is a different reason from that, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like in the same connection to ask the Senator if it has not always been the policy of the Government in the issuance of bonds for Congress to fix the rate of interest?

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly; so far as that is concerned, the Senator is correct. I do not know of any bonds which Congress has authorized without fixing the rate of interest. It is also true, Mr. President, that we have authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $10,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, having a possible life of one year, and we have authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, without any sort of restrictions or qualifications, to fix the interest charge. We are not proposing here, I will say to the Senator, to authorize the issuance of bonds.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. In just a moment, please.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House after considering this matter decided that it would not authorize any additional issue of bonds, decided that it would not attempt to change the interest rate or the tax provisions of the present law with reference to bonds, decided that instead of selling these bonds—and in that decision they had the concurrence of the Treasury Department—which could be sold, of course, if you would increase the rate of interest, could be sold if you would eliminate the taxation or part of the taxation, decided not to authorize the sale of any additional bonds or to change in any way the terms of interest and taxation as now written in the law with reference to the fourth issue of liberty bonds, but instead decided to recommend to the Congress that short-term notes of not less than one year's nor more than five years' maturity be issued.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator what limit you have decided to place upon the issue of the $10,000,000,000 of certificates? Have you made a maximum limit as to the rate of interest which they will bear?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I will say to the Senator—and that in part answers the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas—we have provided for an increase in the amount of certificates of indebtedness which the Treasury Department may issue. The present law provided for not in excess of $8,000,000,000. The pending bill increases that amount and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue as much as $10,000,000,000 of certificates.

Mr. PAGE. What is the maximum rate of interest which they may bear under the proposed bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no rate fixed as to certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. PAGE. The highest rate heretofore has been 4½ per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is true of certificates of indebtedness, but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that rate is fixed under the law by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PAGE. And the same rule applies to certificates in regard to the rate that applies to the new issue of bonds——

Mr. SIMMONS. The new issue of notes.

Mr. PAGE. The new issue of notes, in regard to the rate which they bear?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask if it is the expectation of the Secretary of the Treasury to base the new issue of bonds or certificates upon a business basis or to make the usual appeal to the public for patriotic reasons?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad the Senator asks that question. I am advised that it is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I know it was the opinion of at least the majority of the Finance Committee and I am also told it was the opinion of the Ways and Means Committee, not a mere majority but a practically unanimous opinion of that committee, that it would be utterly impossible to sell bonds now as we did earlier solely upon the basis of patriotism; that no bond or note that is not issued upon a reasonable business basis would probably be readily taken up by the public.

Of course there are many who would take them at any rate of interest, without regard to whether they were at par or below par, in order to relieve the country in its present financial stress; but the Senator knows that the fervor of war has passed away. While patriotism still lives in this country as it did when we were fighting the war, the heat and passion of the war having passed away there is a subsidence of ardor in the patriotism of the people.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator will remember that only a few days ago the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] made the suggestion that there ought to be some means taken to prevent the further depression in the price of liberty bonds. I think the 4 per cent bonds are now selling around 92, and the last, or fourth, issue of liberty bonds around 94. In the opinion of the Senator, are we likely to expect a further reduction in the current market value of these different loans?

Mr. SIMMONS. I answer the Senator frankly. I think if the business conditions of the country return to a basis of prosperity, there will not likely be any additional shrinkage; but if the halt in business that has already been realized shall continue, and if conditions of business shall grow worse instead of better, of course I think it is possible that the result of that situation would be a further reduction in the market value.

Mr. CURTIS. In that same connection, I desire to ask would that not depend upon the rate of interest fixed in these notes? Would not that influence the value in the market of the outstanding bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator. Does the Senator mean that the rate of interest which we fix upon the notes will probably affect the market value of the existing bonds?

Mr. CURTIS. That is the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Without their being interchangeable or convertible?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Possibly that may be so, but I do not see how it would materially affect it.

Mr. CURTIS. The reason is this: They contain a certain exemption clause, which I hope the Senator will explain a little later on. Those notes will yield a certain amount of interest to the investor. Naturally those who want to buy the best investment, therefore would offer more for the short-term notes that pay the larger rate of interest, than they will for the long-term bonds at a lower rate of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The law of interest is just the same as is any other business law. The value of bonds under the fourth liberty loan, the third liberty loan, the first liberty loan, or any other loan which the Government makes will be based upon the value of money at any time that the bond is sold. The value of the bond daily goes up or down as the value of money increases or decreases.

Mr. KING. As measured by commodities.

Mr. SMOOT. It can not be otherwise.

Of course, the question of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in relation to the exemptions, the Senator from North Carolina will explain, and I do not want to take time now to do it; but the exemptions, of course, simply mean adding value to the bond or taking value from them in just the proportion that the return upon the bond is increased or decreased. It is just the same as any mercantile paper or first-class note, or any other kind of an obligation that is placed upon the market and sold daily upon the basis of the value of money.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I think the question of the value of these bonds has been affected by the circumstance that many of the banks of the country have thought it advisable to lend 90 cents on the dollar on the face value of the bonds as security. I do not know just what the reasoning was that led them to do that; but when banks take that attitude toward a Government bond it is as if it were a certain appraisal of the value of the bond, and I think it would have a depressing effect.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that the banks of the country were asked by the Treasury Department to do that; and, in fact, I think if the banks had not done so, the loans which were made would not have been so successful, for the enthusiasm and patriotism of the people had not been aroused on the first loan as it was on subsequent loans.

Mr. OWEN. When the banks put an appraisal on the bonds as collateral security of 90 cents on the dollar, they are depressing the value of the bonds. If they had put a value of 50 cents on the dollar, it would have depressed them more. You may smile and say that they would not do that, but the principle is the same. I merely make that suggestion to show that it would have that effect.

To encourage the banks to regard these bonds as of value up to 90 cents as a collateral, I think, was a mistaken policy on the part of the Government. I do not say that in any critical spirit, because I have no doubt of the good intent of those who gave the advice. I think that, if the banks want to place these bonds among the people, the bonds will move better to the people if they are regarded by the banks as being of value in collateral up to par.

Mr. SMOOT. If they were valued up to par and the banks would lend par upon them everyone who wanted to sell a bond at par would go and borrow money from the banks, put up a bond, and then say to the banks, "You can take the bond."

Mr. OWEN. That is possible in some cases, of course, but that assumes that the man who is capable of buying a bond has no relative value to the bond; it is assuming that a man who is a patriotic citizen and who buys a bond has no value on his own note, not even the value of 10 per cent or 1 per cent. I take the ground that a citizen going in with a bond as collateral is himself entitled to a certain measure of credit even as a moral risk. Certainly the banks know who are entitled to credit in addition to the moral risk as a commercial risk. So I think it is a depressing policy, and I have regretted to see that policy pursued, because I think it is harmful. Not all of the banks do that. Many of the banks take these bonds as worth their face value as collateral, and I think that it is a much better policy to regard them as of face value.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. One word, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me complete my statement?

Mr. PAGE. I should like to know whether this is interrupting the Senator in an unpleasant way?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not interrupting me at all.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator is coming to a very interesting branch of this argument, and I should like to see it proceed in its ramifications and see where we will land, because I think it is for the interest of the Senate to know what conditions attach to the present loan that may disturb the financial conditions of the country as applying largely to the local banks in the States or in rural communities. I think there is likely to be some trouble there, which might be expected, but I do not want to interrupt the Senator at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me say, in a general way, to the Senator from Vermont—I do not know that I can satisfactorily answer all of the Senator's questions—but with reference to his first inquiry, as to whether in my opinion these bonds are likely to go to a lower level than at present, I want to say to the Senator that any opinion, in my judgment, that I, as a layman, or that any of the great bankers of this country, as experts, might give in answer to that inquiry would be purely speculative. There are so many contingencies which determine the value of bonds of this character that it is difficult to tell what is going to be the effect upon them of conditions to-morrow or in the near future.

There are certain special factors that are operating at the present time to depress the price of these securities in the market. Chief among those is the fact that so many securities of the Government, of municipalities, and of industrial corporations of the country are being dumped upon the market with varying rates of interest, with varying security behind them, that they are not stable. Not only is the market for Government bonds unstable at this time, but the market for all classes of securities is unstable. It is the result of conditions with which we are confronted. As those conditions change, this class of securities is affected and given an upward or downward tendency, accordingly as the conditions change for the better or change for the worse.

Nobody can look into the future and say whether the conditions in this country five months from now are going to be more stable than they are at the present time. My own opinion, if the Senator values that at all, is that as soon as this business across the water is settled, as soon as the gates to the great highways of international trade are thrown open wide, and as soon as we can get the governmental agencies which we created here during the war and in whom we reposed great powers over trade and over the activities of the people to take their hands off business, instead of a hesitant industrial condition, this country will see a rapidly improving condition which will in a very short time attain to a great tide of prosperity.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to refer to a fact which has come to my knowledge, and which, it seems to me, bears upon this question. To my mind, to-day the question is largely this: Is the rate of interest which the bonds or notes which we are to issue within the next three months going to be 4¼, 4½, 4¾, or 5 per cent? If we can float the loan because of some inducements by way of exemption from taxation at 4 or 4¼ per cent, I can not foresee any particular trouble arising from the fact to which I am going to call the Senator's attention in a moment; but if the rate is made 5 per cent I surmise that we are going to see trouble in some sections of this country; and let me tell the Senator wherein——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have never heard anybody suggest, and I do not believe anybody has ever thought of suggesting, a rate as high as 5 per cent upon these notes.

Mr. PAGE. I have heard that the one-year notes might bear as high a rate as 5 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, the certificates of indebtedness have never borne more than a 4½ per cent rate, and they are sold readily; there has been no trouble, and there is no trouble now, on the part of the Treasury Department in getting all the money it needs upon the short-term certificates of indebtedness bearing 4½ per cent interest.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator fully believes that the rate of interest on the bonds will not go beyond 4½ per cent?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, in the case of a bond or a note with a partial exemption from taxation, such as all of these notes will have, I can not conceive of the necessity for the purpose of floating them, even in the present restricted market, of making the rate more than 4½ per cent.

Mr. PAGE. And what the Senator says in regard to the bonds he thinks is true in regard to the short-time certificates?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am speaking now of the short-time notes running from one year to five years.

I will say to the Senator that I did not wish to get into that just at this time; and, of course, the Senator understands I am only expressing an opinion of my own now; I am not giving the view of the Secretary of the Treasury, for I do not know what his views are; and I do not think that the Secretary of the Treasury at this time has any definite views as to what rate of interest he will have to prescribe in order to successfully float this issue. I think he believes that that can only be determined when we reach the time when the securities are to be issued; that is to say, that a rate that would be suited to to-day may not be at all suited to the conditions confronting the Secretary of the Treasury on April 15, when he puts these notes upon the market.

Mr. PAGE. Then, why does not the Senator think it wise to place some limit upon the price we may pay for this money?

Mr. SIMMONS. Because if you place a limit, you have got to place a limit beyond which you do not wish to go; and it may not be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to go that high. It is the experience with all issues of this sort that, if you fix a rate which you say is to be the maximum rate, it is always necessary when the bonds are issued to go up to that maximum.

Mr. PAGE. But to-day, if the Senator will pardon me, the fourth liberty loan issue is selling on a 94-cent basis. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if I am not right in that?

Mr. OWEN. Approximately so.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means that they are being sold on the market at that rate?

Mr. PAGE. On the market to-day. But here is the point that I wish to bring to the Senator's attention: There are to-day States in this Union—I do not care to mention them, because it is not necessary to do so now; but I know about them, and I presume the Senator does—that are banking largely upon railroad bonds; up to five years ago they were loaning on railroad bonds. That is not true in regard to my own State to any considerable extent, but some States were loaning on railroad bonds. Those bonds have gone down so fast and so far in the markets of the world that, if the savings banks were now forced to realize upon those bonds many of them would become insolvent. Those banks are paying 4 per cent to depositors, and if for any reason the rate on the Government securities is made 4¾ or 5 per cent, can you not see that the depositors are going to withdraw their money from the savings banks to such an extent as to compel the sale of these railroad bonds at a price so low as to force into bankruptcy or insolvency many of the banks?

Now, query: In view of that fact, would it not be wise to place a maximum limit of, say, 4½ per cent on these notes, the same as you are now placing on the certificates, because if you go beyond that you are imperiling the financial condition of the banks in some of the States of the Union?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that heretofore, when we have authorized the issuance of liberty bonds, we passed the bill authorizing the issue immediately before the drive took place. The rate of interest, therefore, was fixed by Congress with full reference to the actual conditions that existed at the time of the drive. There is a brief statement of the Secretary of the Treasury before the Ways and Means Committee of the House that contains an argument on this question. I read from page 9 of the hearings before that committee, as follows:

> In respect to the notes and also in respect to the bonds of a maturity of 10 years or less, I have asked authority to determine the interest rate as the situation may develop. I am by no means convinced that conditions will be such in April as to necessitate an increase in the interest rate over that provided in existing law to an important extent, if at all; yet, if I were obliged to determine now what is the lowest rate at which I could undertake with certainty to finance the requirements of the Government when the issue is offered in April, I should be obliged to name a maximum rate much higher than that which, if developments are as favorable as I expect they will be in the interval, will, I hope, be sufficient to float the loan.
> There is not, I venture to say, a solvent banking house in America which would enter into a firm obligation to-day to purchase in April any important amount of securities of any character at any price whatever—certainly not at a price which failed to make such an allowance for contingencies in the interval as would be regarded as prohibitive by the borrower. Yet that is exactly what the Congress would require the Secretary of the Treasury to do if it were to fix the interest rate to-day. I can not undertake the responsibility of saying now at what rate the bonds or the notes may be sold in April; and if you were to-day to fix a maximum rate, such as to be sufficient in any possible contingency, you would by that very act tend to force the adoption of that maximum rate when the loan is offered.
> No liberty loan has ever been sold at lower rate than the maximum fixed by the act under which it was issued. On the other hand, in the second liberty bond act, which was approved nearly a year and a half ago, you conferred upon Secretary McAdoo authority to issue Treasury certificates of indebtedness without limit as to the rate of interest, and he and I have been able to maintain the rate of 4½ per cent for such certificates during a full year, including the period when our war prospects were at their darkest and the recent period when the cessation of hostilities has made the problem of selling Government securities most difficult. The floating debt, represented by Treasury certificates now outstanding and to be issued in the interval before the victory liberty loan is offered, must be refunded, and bonds or notes must be sold to an amount sufficient to accomplish this purpose. To withhold from the Secretary of the Treasury the power to issue bonds or notes bearing such rate of interest as may be necessary to make this refunding possible might result in a catastrophe. To specify in the act the maximum amount of interest at a figure sufficient to cover all contingencies would be costly, because the maximum would surely be taken by the public as the minimum.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury says, "If I were going to start my drive immediately upon the adjournment of Congress there might not be any objection to Congress prescribing the rate of interest; but," he says, "in the case of a bond, as in the case of a business investment, if you go to a bank to-day and ask 'at what rate of interest will you lend me money to meet my immediate needs?' they will give you the rate; but if you ask them 'at what rate of interest will you lend me the same amount of money six months from now?' I doubt whether any bank in this country would be willing to fix you a rate."

The Secretary of the Treasury says these notes are not to be put upon the market until about the middle of April. No living man can tell in the unsettled conditions in which we live, in the rapidly changing circumstances which affect business, investment, and everything else in this country, what will be a reasonable rate of interest on the 15th day of April. Of course, when you are talking about interest with reference to these bonds, the mere fraction of a quarter of 1 per cent is a very important matter.

I think that there would be no necessity to fix a 5 per cent rate. As between five and four, what fraction would be the proper fraction might be easily determined to-day, in the light of circumstances and conditions; but there is not the same certainty as to conditions even six weeks hence.

Mr. MOSES. But the simple remedy, I suggest to the Senator, is to keep Congress in session and act upon this question when the time comes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going into a political discussion at this time. I am trying to talk about this bill. I do not wish to inject any politics into this matter now.

Mr. PAGE. I do not, either.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope not. We will get to that later.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say, however, that if the larger banks of this country could foresee the conditions that imperil the prosperity of the smaller banks in the less wealthy States of the Union, and we were to say to them, "In order to prevent any trouble we want you to lend this money on a 4½ per cent basis," I believe you could go to those banks to-day and make a trade for the money. If you put it upon a purely business basis, you could go and make a trade that would be just as certain, even though it were two months ahead, as if you made it to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the trouble about this liberty bond issue now. We have ample authority to issue liberty bonds and pay off these debts; but we fixed the interest rate upon those liberty bonds nearly a year ago; and in the conditions of the country, in the conditions of business, in the conditions of world affairs, we were able to float those bonds at that rate. We still have the authority; but, because conditions are changed and circumstances affecting the market and the value of securities and the rates of interest are different, we find that the Secretary of the Treasury, with ample authority to issue bonds—bonds that he could and did sell four or five months ago—is utterly unable to sell one of those bonds to-day at the same rate of interest.

Mr. PAGE. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. You have tied his hands, you have made this legislation ineffective for the emergency of the present situation, because you fixed a rate that suited the condition six months ago and it does not suit the condition to-day. That is the very situation with reference to these notes, except that the difference of time between now and when the bonds will be put upon the market is six weeks instead of six months.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator anticipate any possible condition in which we can not float these certificates on a 4½ per cent basis?

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me say to the Senator that I do not know how bad business conditions in this country may become. I hope and I believe that in certain circumstances they will become very satisfactory. They are not satisfactory now and they are getting no better now. What I think we want to do, what I think is the sensible thing to do, is to say to the Secretary, "We have trusted you to fix the rate of interest upon ten billions of certificates of indebtedness, running for a year or less. You have fixed that rate one time at one figure and another time at another figure, fixing it always to suit the conditions. You have never fixed an excessive rate. You have never fixed a rate that was so low that the bonds would not sell. We trust you now. This is one issue. You may have to make additional issues. We may have to increase this issue of notes; but fix the rate in your discretion as an official of the Government, with the approval of the President of the United States, at a figure that will enable you to sell the notes on the day on which you offer them."

Does the Senator believe it is wise to fix any rate that is so low that when these notes are put on the market they will not be readily taken up by the public?

Mr. PAGE. No; I do not. Neither do I think it wise to leave a limit so high that you have power to interfere with the prosperity of the banks of the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. What reason has the Senator to believe—speaking in the light of past experience with reference to Secretaries of the Treasury—that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States will not be just as mindful of the important interest to which he has referred—namely, that of the savings banks—as he is? I want to say to the Senator that I know that the former Secretary of the Treasury, when we were framing the war finance bill, came before the Finance Committee, and he was thoroughly awake to the situation of the savings banks and to the danger that might threaten them from certain legislation that was then pending, and he was there appealing to the committee to do nothing which would or could by any reasonable possibility undermine the financial strength of those great institutions. The present Secretary of the Treasury can be likewise trusted. It is inconceivable to me, Mr. President, that the Senator should believe that the present Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, would fix a rate upon these notes so high that it would destroy the business of the savings banks of the country.

Mr. PAGE. When the Senator is through I will make my answer.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield to the Senator now.

Mr. PAGE. This is a power that never has before been given to any Secretary of the Treasury, certainly not to the amount of $10,000,000,000. I do not believe the country to-day demands that kind of legislation. I do not believe it is just for the country that we should have it. Of course, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why does the Senator say it has never been given to him? There is asked for here a seven-billion-dollar issue.

Mr. PAGE. But you have named a rate beyond which he is not to go.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question I was going to ask the Senator was, Why does he say that we have never given the Secretary of the Treasury authority to fix the rate upon short-term paper in the face of the fact, which I have repeatedly stated here to-night, that the present law authorizes him to issue $8,000,000,000 in one-year notes, and himself fix the rate of interest upon them?

Mr. PAGE. At what price was that fixed? Was it left indefinite?

Mr. SIMMONS. And we increased that to ten billions. There is no suggestion that we should fix a rate as to those certificates. If the Secretary were going to fix a rate upon these one to five year notes that would be destructive to these institutions that are referred to, if he wanted to do it and could do it if he were given plenary power over the question of the interest rate on this seven billions, why could he not just as effectively destroy these institutions or embarrass them in the way that the Senator speaks of, by fixing a high rate of interest upon these ten billions of certificates of indebtedness we have authorized him to issue?

Mr. PAGE. May I ask if you have been unanimous in your views in regard to that in your discussions in the Committee on Finance, or have you differed in regard to this question of limit?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not suppose there was any Senator here who did not know that we had differences in the Finance Committee.

Mr. PAGE. I am talking now about the bill before us to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. PAGE. Is there not an objection to leaving that matter in the air?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just stated to the Senator that there was a difference of opinion in the Finance Committee. The majority opinion in the Finance Committee was in favor of adopting the Secretary's request. They recognized the force of the Secretary's reasoning. They agreed with the Secretary, and they were in favor of it. But there was a minority of the committee who did not agree to that, and I thought every Senator in the body knew it.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask, further, is there not a feeling among the financiers of the country that this is a dangerous power, dangerous not only to the city banks but dangerous to the country banks that may be confronted with a 4½ and 4¾ per cent rate, which will disturb the deposits of the savings banks of the country to such an extent that it may involve in some cases absolute bankruptcy?

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say, in reply to the Senator, that for the last six years I have been the chairman of the Finance Committee, and during that time I have reported more revenue bills and tariff bills, probably, than had been reported in the 50 years preceding my chairmanship.

Mr. PAGE. I know that to be a fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. Occupying that position, I have received, of course, when all these bills were framed and presented to Congress, communications from business people from all parts of the country, from people whose interests were affected, directly or indirectly, by these various pieces of legislation. I get in that way a pretty general expression of opinion, whether it be an approval or disapproval. I want to say to the Senator that if the letters and the telegrams that have come to me from representative business interests in all parts of this country, with respect to this particular proposition, mean anything, they mean that the great financial and the great business interests of this country would look with horror upon the defeat of this legislation. They believe that this is a good and a wise bill, and are asking that it shall be enacted into legislation. That has been more pronounced in the case of this bill than of any of the many revenue and bond bills that have been passed since I have been chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator says that a 4½ per cent rate will not disturb the financial business of the country. I agree. A 5 per cent rate certainly, and I think a 4¾ per cent rate, would disturb the financial interests as pertaining to the savings banks of the country; and the Senator knows how very, very important they are to the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Since the Senator has forced me to discuss, beyond the time and out of the order in which I had intended to discuss it, this phase of the bill, I will say to the Senator that these notes may be issued in four different series. A part of them, or all of them, if the Secretary of the Treasury so decides, may be issued free of tax, except inheritance or estate tax, just as the first liberty loan bonds were free of tax. The first liberty loan bonds, although bearing only 3½ per cent, are not very far from par now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are about 98.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Secretary sees fit, he can issue all of these notes free of tax, except inheritance tax, and he can fix the rate of interest at 3½ per cent, the rate of the first liberty loan bonds. I suppose they would sell very readily on the market upon that basis, being short-term notes.

There is another class of notes that he is authorized to issue. They bear the same burdens of taxation that the fourth liberty loan bonds bear. That is to say, while free from the normal income tax, free from general State and municipal taxes, they are subject to individual surtaxes, excess profits, and war taxes. He may issue notes of that class. If he should issue notes of that class, of course, they would stand upon a parity, so far as taxation is concerned, with bonds of the fourth issue.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator here?

Mr. SIMMONS. They are selling at a pretty low price. I should say that if those were long-term bonds, they, of course, would not bring par in the market. Now that we have gotten down to a commercial basis, now that patriotism is no longer the governing inspiration in these matters, I should say that clearly they would not sell at par; that is, at the present rate of 4¼ per cent. I am merely speculating about that, because I am not a financier; I am not an expert.

Mr. PAGE. I am seeking to get this so that it will benefit us as a whole. I ask this question in all candor: Would it not be better for us to place upon these bonds some benefits by way of taxation that would make them salable at 4¼ per cent, rather than have a higher rate? We certainly should have no rate beyond 4½ per cent. I wish we were not compelled to go above 4¼ per cent, so that the savings banks, that are banking to-day on railroad bonds which they bought at 100 and which to-day are selling at 70, 75, and 80, and that would be ruined if there should be a run made upon them, would have the issues protected by some provision in regard to taxation that we could place upon this bill that we are passing to-day, or seeking to pass to-day, fixing a limit, in which we should say that in no case shall these bonds be sold upon a higher basis than 4¼ or possibly 4½ per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I explained to the Senator, if you fix a maximum basis, that would be the basis upon which these bonds will have to be sold.

Mr. PAGE. I do not concede that.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the opinion of financiers, that there is a psychology in that situation that makes it impossible to float these bonds at less than the maximum rate prescribed in the law.

I want to say to the Senator that we are moving in a circle in this argument, and I should like to get through with it.

Mr. PAGE. I want to apologize for taking so much of the Senator's time, and I will retire.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator asks the question, Why should we not fix this rate now instead of leaving it to the Treasury Department? And he asks if we can not fix it just as well as the Secretary of the Treasury. My answer to that is that the Congress could fix it just as well as the Secretary of the Treasury if the Congress were in possession of all the information with reference to all the various and sundry factors that affect market investment conditions, as the Secretary of the Treasury is, and if it had equal facility with the Secretary of the Treasury for ascertaining at any time that it becomes expedient and necessary to ascertain the exact conditions of that particular time. We can not look ahead. If we pass a law here to-day, we must predicate that act and fix the rate upon a sale six weeks from now. We can not look into the future. Congress can not know the financial condition and the investing conditions six weeks from now. They could not do it in normal times. They could not do it in these times, when the situation is unsettled and changing like a kaleidoscope every day and every week. We must act now. We can not divine these conditions.

The Secretary of the Treasury is not going to act now in fixing that rate. The Secretary of the Treasury can wait until the time when the drive begins, until the time when the bonds are to be advertised to the public and the rates prescribed. He can wait until then in order to fix the rate, and when he fixes it he can adjust it to the conditions that then exist. Confessedly and admittedly he has such opportunities, such agencies, for ascertaining the exact facts with reference to the financial conditions and the investing conditions of the country as no other man and no other institution in this country possesses.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] apparently does not seem to differentiate between a certificate of indebtedness of short duration and long-time bonds. Certificates of indebtedness may be issued for one or five years, and it would be impossible now to determine what the interest should be on them.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is correct, and just what I contend.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. The Senator has described the condition of the Treasury and the necessity for this legislation and described it very graphically and, I have no doubt, correctly. Can the Senator tell us how much money we have loaned to foreign governments and what we have taken in return for it?

Mr. SIMMONS. We have loaned something over $8,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Eight billion six hundred million dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I think that is about the figure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the Senator tell us whether we have taken the bonds of those governments for the loans?

Mr. SIMMONS. We have not taken the bonds, if by the word "bonds" you mean obligations of a long period of maturity; but if you mean bonds in the sense of an obligation to pay a given amount, yes, upon demand of the United States. They are demand obligations. That covers it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Have we anything in the Treasury negotiable from any foreign government for the $8,600,000,000 loaned?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think those securities are in a negotiable condition at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then they would not be available to recoup the Treasury now if the Secretary should decide to use them?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I think not. I will say to the Senator I have not gone very fully into that matter; but my understanding is that we have nothing but the demand obligations of the governments. Those demand obligations, I understand, agree upon demand to convert them into bonds of the government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The reason why I ask the Senator this question is because, for instance, the French bonds and the British bonds all seem to be higher than ours. They bear a higher rate of interest also, I will say to the Senator. If they were in negotiable form, being the obligation of Great Britain or France or Italy or Belgium, they ought to be good. I have been wondering whether in an emergency they could not be used to fortify our Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator that I do not well see how we are going to fix the rate of interest upon these bonds until after the last issue of bonds for war purposes has been made. We have been fixing our rates on these bonds progressively. We started with 3½ per cent and went up to 4 per cent and we are now up to 4¼ per cent. We may have to go beyond 4¼ per cent, though I hope we never will, but we might go to 4½ per cent. There might be circumstances under which we would go to 5 to pay the war indebtedness.

All of these foreign bonds now are convertible into the higher rate. The lowest rate bond can be converted into the highest rate bond. My understanding is that when these demand notes are taken up and long-term obligations of those countries are given to us they will be at the highest rate this Government will be required to pay upon its war indebtedness. Therefore it is necessary to ascertain what that highest rate will be. That is one reason why we could not right now convert them into definitive bonds. This very bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to convert these demand papers into long-term Government bonds of our allies, and fixes the maximum maturity.

But I want to answer the Senator from Michigan upon the merits of his proposition. He says if those obligations were in negotiable shape he sees no reason why we could not sell them. Of course, I think the Senator knows that an English bond right now in the American market would probably not sell for par.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but if our Government guaranteed them——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the bonds of England—and that is probably the strongest financial country among our allies, with all her powerful and almost exhaustless resources behind her credit—would probably not sell in the market of this country upon the rate of interest we have fixed on our bonds, I do not see how they could be utilized unless we sell them below par, and I do not believe it is the purpose of this Government to part with any of these foreign securities below par.

With the 4¼ per cent bonds of this Government, partially exempt from taxation, selling in the markets of this country to-day at 94 cents, with all the credit and all the resources of the United States behind these bonds, does the Senator think that the British bonds would sell for par?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to answer the Senator, and I will do so in a word. I think the British bonds are higher than the American bonds to-day. They are worth par.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the rate of interest? That is what I am asking.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think they bear a higher rate of interest, probably as high as 5½ per cent.

I am not asking these questions to embarrass the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. They do not embarrass me in the slightest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I mean by that, we are in a situation that is very perplexing, and something must be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. I realize that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My recollection is that the bonds of Great Britain bearing 5 per cent are about par and the bonds of Great Britain bearing 5½ per cent are 101.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bonds of this country bearing the same rate would be at par and above par.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have issued, I suppose, our last bond issue. This is not a bond issue proposed by the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it is not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The 4¼ per cent bonds were the last issued, and that would fix the rate. If we could fix the rate and put these foreign bonds now in the Treasury upon the market, the American Government could afford to guarantee the principal and interest upon those bonds, and Great Britain's bond backed by our guarantee ought to sell higher than the bonds of either country alone.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think so. Does the Senator really believe that the bonds of the United States are selling at less than par to-day because any living man or investor in this country doubts the security that is behind those bonds?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not think that. I think that our bonds are——

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator believe that a British bond bearing the same rate, subject to the same taxation that the American bond is subject to, would sell at par in the market of the United States simply because the United States wrote its name on the back of that bond?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am inclined to think it would.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then if the Senator believes that, the Senator believes that the bonds of the United States to-day are below par not because of the low interest, not because of the taxation burdens which they bear, but because there is some lack of confidence in the security which is behind them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; they are British short-time bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the long-time bonds.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am talking about the short-time bonds of Britain.

Mr. SIMMONS. I say there is no amount of indorsement upon the back of the liberty bonds, for which the United States and all its resources are pledged, that would affect the market value of these securities one particle, because the security is as good as it can be, and there is no human being or financier in the world who doubts the adequacy of the security.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why strain the credit of our own Government when we have the obligations of the European governments of a first class who have won a war and are about to exact indemnities from a vanquished foe? Why strain our credit when we have or should have and can obtain within a very reasonable time the formal obligations of those victor governments?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator and myself do not disagree about that. Here is where we disagree: What I am saying to the Senator is that the United States can not sell these foreign bonds in the markets of the United States for par, at the rate of interest they are bearing, because the United States' own bonds are not selling in the market at par.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the bonds of the city of Marseille are selling at 99. The bonds of almost every subdivision of France are selling higher than our bonds to-day. I do not know of any reason in the world why we should cripple ourselves and strain our credit when we have the obligations of first-class powers, or should have those obligations, in the Treasury for money advanced.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator probably is right, but when he talks about the bonds of these great municipalities of France selling at par he loses sight of the fact that that is by reason of the circumstance that they bear a high rate of interest and carry the expectation of a speculative profit in franc exchange which justifies par value in the market. The trouble with our American bond is that it does not bear a rate of interest which justifies par in present conditions. If we should take a foreign bond for the same amount at the same rate of interest, the rate of interest would be such as would make it impossible for us to sell that foreign bond in the market at less than par. The United States is not going to sell a single one of its own bonds in the American market at less than par. If the United States is not going to sell its own bonds at less than par, why should it sell these foreign bonds that it has purchased with its own bonds at less than par?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is very humiliating that the purchaser of American bonds must part with them far below par.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator, when the United States has got two bonds, one issued by its own Government bearing 4 per cent interest and one issued by a foreign government and turned over to the United States in exchange for one of the bonds in this land, if he would be willing to sell either one of those bonds while in the possession of the United States and the property of the United States at less than par?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think they should bring par, but I would use the available assets in the American Treasury to assist in financing the Government in time of stress, especially when we are financing it for the benefit largely of others.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator if these foreign bonds which are in possession of the Treasury could be sold in the open markets of this country at par, I would be in favor of using those bonds to pay the deficit in the Treasury. I would be in favor likewise of selling the bonds that are now authorized under the fourth liberty loan act to pay that indebtedness. But we can not sell those bonds at par; and, as we can not sell them at par, we are not proposing to sell them at all at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not so concerned about bringing them up as I am about bringing them out. I should like to bring them out of the Treasury, and if anyone's credit is to be stretched or strained I would stretch and strain the credit of those I had helped rather than my own Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is as much a bond of the Government as any one of them, because we gave a Government bond for them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator that the question is not whether the bond is good or not. We must remember that a Canadian bond issued and owned by an American citizen is never taxed. It is tax free. The English Government issues two classes of bonds, a tax-free bond and a taxable bond. The rate of interest upon the two bonds is based upon that fact. The one is taxable and the other nontaxable. The French 5½ per cent bond to-day is selling for 105⅝. That French bond the American citizen can buy and hold here and never pay a cent of taxes in France, and even under the bill which we have before us here there is a provision that a nonresident alien holding an American bond shall be taxed upon the interest on that bond. We are putting that into the law just the same as other countries are doing; and there is an advantage to an American citizen, so far as interest is concerned, in carrying a French bond as against a United States bond, provided he has an income of over $5,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not doubt for a moment that a bond bearing the same rate of interest as the French bond he has spoken of and having the same exemption from taxation would bring above par just as that bond does?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he would find some way, if he had the power, to make use of the $8,600,000,000 worth of foreign bonds in our Treasury to relieve us now?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on February 15—in the month just passed—I introduced a bill in the Senate directing the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate and arrange with certain foreign governments to convert their present indebtedness to the United States into marketable and salable securities, and I have not any doubt that we are going to do it. I think that it ought to be done, and I think it will be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where is the Senator's bill? Is it on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it has not yet got that far.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And it never will.

Mr. SMOOT. It is still in committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah for his enlightening statement. I think we are getting very near the heart of the trouble about this whole business. The trouble about our bonds, as has been repeatedly said by myself and others to-night, grows out of the rate of interest and the taxation. When this war is finally over by the establishment of real peace, when we have got back to normal conditions as to business, and the war debt has been very largely paid off, as it will be with the action of a sinking fund, and a constantly dwindling tax rate, these very bonds, bearing this identical rate of interest, carrying these tax burdens, will sell for more than par. In ordinary conditions 4¼ per cent is a high rate of interest for a Government bond to bear. When the war burdens have passed—and we are going rapidly to get out of this condition, for the tax burdens for the calendar year 1919 are very much less than they were for the calendar year 1918; four years will see these tax burdens, while still heavy, comparatively very light—these bonds are inevitably going up. Especially is the prospect of improvement true with reference to the income tax and the excess-profits war taxes. The war taxes practically passed away with the year 1918. There is a slight remnant left for 1919. The excess-profits tax for 1919 is cut one-half; the income tax is materially reduced. When you get your income tax to something like a normal basis and get rid of your war-profits tax and your excess-profits tax, by that means you will relieve these bonds of the burden they are now carrying, and you will be in normal times with a high interest rate and with your taxes greatly reduced. I think in those conditions there will be no doubt about these bonds going to a very considerable premium.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am making is that while in these particular conditions, while temporarily, owing to the stress of circumstances, these bonds are below par, as a permanent investment they should be treated as worth above par.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to confirm what the Senator is saying, because the United States had occasion to recently borrow 250,000,000 pesetas from Spain. That loan was negotiated through certain banks in this country, operating through banks in Spain, and the securities were discounted by the Bank of Spain with 3½ per cent interest. So we need not be apprehensive of the rate of interest going up, but these bonds must go up.

Mr. SIMMONS. While that is true——

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina one question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will not the Senator let me develop this thought, and then I will yield to him?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. While that is true with reference to the tax burdens which these bonds bear, those tax burdens will disappear almost automatically; but with reference to the interest rate we can not, it seems to me, except under the compulsion of absolute necessity, afford to increase the rate of interest on bonds because some of these bonds are running for 20-odd years and some of them for 30 years. They are long-term bonds. If we increase the rate of interest on these bonds, which will, as I say, in a few years, although they are very much below par now, be above par, and which I say are a good permanent investment—if we increase the rate of interest upon one issue of them, we, perhaps, ought to go back to the first issue and increase the rate of interest upon every one of those issues of bonds.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Automatically.

Mr. SIMMONS. No. It would require an act of Congress. If we should convert all the bonds—the 3½s, the 4s, and the 4¼s—up to this higher rate we should thereby impose not only an immensely increased burden in the present year and the next upon the people of this country but impose that great increase in burden upon the taxpayers of this country until the very last issue of these bonds shall have been discharged.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from North Carolina does not mean that we convert them into bonds bearing the rate that these notes are to bear, does he?

Mr. SIMMONS. These notes give rise to no conversion privilege.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator if he expects that the promise which has been held out to us in the papers that we will pay off our indebtedness within 25 years is likely to materialize?

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, Mr. President, that is a calculation, and they say that it is probably as reliable as the result of any other mathematical calculation. It is a purely mathematical proposition. They say that, beyond all question, if the basis of indebtedness is fixed and you apply the 2½ per cent sinking fund, you can ascertain how many years, how many months, in fact, how many days, it will take to pay it off, and that, upon the basis of a 2½ per cent cumulative sinking fund, the indebtedness will be paid off in 25 years, I believe.

Mr. PAGE. And would the Senator expect naturally that that would increase the value of our bonds, and that instead of the four-and-a-quarters selling at 94, as they are to-day, we will perhaps have a gradual and constant increase?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that will affect the value of them. I wish to say to the Senator, again, that there is not a single one of the liberty bonds, unless we have a financial crash in this country, that will not be worth par and more than par in less than five years.

Mr. President, I did not expect to take anything like the time I have taken, but I think the Senate will bear me out that I have consumed this time as a result of constant interruptions.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to interrupt me?

Mr. LODGE. No; I did not desire to interrupt the Senator. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not quite concluded. The Senator knows that I have not touched upon a great many other matters in the bill, but I am going to detain the Senate only a few minutes longer.

There is probably one provision of the bill to which I ought to call attention, because it is secondary in importance only to the authorization of $7,000,000,000 of notes. I refer to the provision which authorizes the Government of the United States to continue, up to the present authorization, to advance credits to foreign governments for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of enabling them to purchase from the United States anything of value that it may have for sale and for which it has no present use, and to enable foreign governments to purchase wheat in the markets of the United States. Those are the only two purposes for which we permit the Government to continue to establish credits for foreign governments after the termination of the war.

We have a great deal of property over in Europe that must be salvaged, and, unless we can sell it to our allies, for a great deal of it we will have no purchaser at all. Especially is that true of the extensive structures which we have erected over there—warehouses, terminals, depots, railroads, hospitals, and property of that kind. Then we have a great deal of portable property over there, such as rolling stock, engines, and things of that sort, which it is not desirable to bring back home. It is very well known that at this time the countries to which we could reasonably hope to sell these things are not able to pay in cash, and it is thought advisable to permit the Government to make advances to them for the purpose of enabling them to purchase this property. It is merely an arrangement for credit after all.

Then, Mr. President, I think everybody realizes that on account of the guaranty we have given to the wheat growers of this country it is necessary that we shall find markets for our wheat. It is thought advisable to lend to our allies, to Belgium, to France, and to all European countries that are not able to pay cash for our shipments of wheat, the money that is necessary to enable them to buy it. That is again nothing more than a credit transaction. We get the obligations of the foreign governments in this case, however, just as we do in the case where we advance them the actual money. That is one of the important provisions to which I wish to call attention in addition to the ones that I have discussed. But there is another provision to which I wish especially to direct attention, and which, to my mind, means so much to the immediate business prosperity of the country that it would be almost a crime if it should not become a law as speedily as possible.

It is very well known, Mr. President, that the conclusion of the war is going to open the greatest opportunity that this country has ever enjoyed to extend its foreign trade. Especially is that true of our trade with Europe. There is hardly any limit to be placed upon the necessities of Europe for the things that we produce in this country, both in the nature of raw materials and of finished products. If they had the money with which to buy, in order to meet in full their necessities and needs, there would be a market created at once for the products of this country which would be many, many times greater than our ability to supply the demands; but they do not have the money. Everybody knows that those countries have been drained of means to purchase foreign goods.

When the war began the balance of trade in our favor was about $400,000,000—a mere bagatelle when compared with the balance of trade in our favor to-day. Most of our balance of trade was due us from Europe. The balance of trade was rather against us in the remainder of the world. Europe paid that balance of trade against her, not in dollars, but she paid it in shipping charges, for nearly all of our transportation was purchased from the maritime nations of Europe. She paid it in interest upon the great volume of American securities which were locked up in the vaults of her banks. She paid it in the expenses in European countries of tourists. The actual balance in cash that she had to send to us amounted to scarcely nothing.

Now the situation is changed. Instead of a balance of trade in our favor of $400,000,000 the balance of trade in our favor last year, I think, was somewhat in excess of $3,000,000,000.

Most of it—not all of it, but most of it—was from Europe. We can not hope to continue that great balance; and yet if we continue to enjoy one-half of that balance of trade—yes; if we continue to enjoy one-third of that balance of trade—it will be from twice to three and a half times as great as before the war, and England and France and Germany and all the other maritime nations of Europe will have nothing to pay us with except cold cash. We own our own shipping now. The $200,000,000 that we paid in freight charges to Europe in partial extinguishment of this $400,000,000 balance of trade is no longer a charge against us in favor of our foreign customers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator believe when he makes the statement that the freight charges will no longer be a charge against our trade that it will be necessary to operate our merchant fleet at a loss?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not mean that it would not be a charge against our trade. I said it would not be a charge in favor of our foreign customers. I meant by that—if the Senator did not understand me probably he would have to take what I was saying before that in connection with it—I meant by that that they paid us off before the war in the prices which we paid them for transportation, owning, as they did, the ships in which our foreign trade was conveyed. Now, to the extent to which we own and will be able to control our own transportation there will be nothing due our foreign customers from us on account of freight charges.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What I had in mind was that the picture is not complete unless it is thoroughly understood, and I think it should be thoroughly understood that we are going to operate this merchant fleet of ours at a loss.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know how that is. I can not tell. I do not think the Senator knows; I do not think anybody knows; but I do not see that that has any pertinency to the point I was making. The Government may lose something in the operation of this merchant marine; I do not know; but the point I was making was that Great Britain and France and Italy before the war had us pay in freight charges, transportation charges, nearly one-half of the entire balance of trade in our favor. Then the interest upon the securities which were held against us by foreign countries liquidated another large part of that balance of trade in our favor, leaving but little actual cash that had to be sent over here to meet the balance due.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see why anyone need apprehend that our merchant ships would be operated at a loss to-day. It is perfectly well known that the world's tonnage is short from twelve to fifteen million tons, and it will take probably five years before the world can restore the tonnage which has been lost during the war; and at the rates as they have existed enormous fortunes were made in shipping. Even at lower rates than the war-time rates there is no reason why our ships should not be operated at a tremendous profit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly that is true for many years to come; but that is not the point I was making, Mr. President. I was not discussing the question of whether or not we were going to make money on our merchant marine. I was discussing the question as it affects the payment by our foreign customers of the balance of trade that might at any time exist against them. I was arguing that before the war they did not have to pay off this balance in money, because they had other things to sell us—transportation, interest charges on securities, and things of that sort.

I was proceeding to make this point when interrupted by the Senator from New York; I was proceeding to say that whatever the present balance in our favor may be, whether it be $400,000,000 or $800,000,000 or $1,000,000,000—whatever the balance of the present year in our favor may be—there is no way for our foreign customers, especially our European customers, to discharge that debt at the present time except by the payment of actual cash.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to say to the Senator from North Carolina that I gathered the impression, from the first remark he made on this phase of the subject, that he believed that our foreign trade would be relieved of the burden of paying freight to the foreign owners of merchant vessels. And when I hear the Senator from Florida indicate his belief that our merchant ships can be operated at a profit, and thereby not incur a burden upon our own commerce, I am prompted to inquire why it has already been suggested that a billion dollars be wiped off of the shipbuilding account in an endeavor to show a profit on the operation of the ships for the money invested?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not discuss that. I will not be led off into that subject. I wish to make just a few further observations. The point I was trying to express and that I have been prevented from expressing twice in succession is this: Whatever the balance of trade between this country and Europe may be this year or next year, while the present conditions last she has no way of paying that balance except in dollars. Now, a pound note of Great Britain is as sound as a gold dollar, but a pound note does not pass current in the markets of the United States. If Great Britain, with all of her credit, shall buy in this market, and if she does not sell us something by way of exchange with which to pay us, she can not pay us with pound notes. No country in Europe can pay us with its circulating paper currency. She must pay us in gold. That is the only way in which she can discharge that obligation.

Mr. President, the last section, which I was discussing, is for the purpose of giving to the Finance Corporation—not to give to the United States but to the Finance Corporation—power to sell its bonds and loan to the exporters of this country to the extent of a billion dollars in order to enable those exporters to supply the markets of Europe and of South America upon the basis of long credit.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if he could give the Senate any idea of what the needs of the Government will be for the next three months, and whether it is necessary at the present time to have this seven and a half billion dollars in order to meet the obligations of the country?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, Mr. President. I do not know whether the Senator was here when I began or not; but I will say to the Senator that our expenditures will be about $19,000,000,000. We have already provided for six billions by taxes; we have sold seven billions of liberty bonds and one billion of war-savings certificates, making in all $14,000,000,000. That leaves $5,000,000,000 unprovided for. Of the certificates of indebtedness, we have issued about $5,000,000,000 up to the present time. It is contemplated, I am advised, that we will have to borrow about one billion four hundred millions for March. It is estimated that it will take about the same for April and May.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Each?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; for each month. So the Senator will see that the certificates of indebtedness can not carry us through.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What is the balance in the Treasury at the present time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the balance is at this particular time.

Mr. SMOOT. The balance yesterday was $1,487,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What will be needed for the interest on the outstanding bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is a matter of calculation that I have not made. The interest is to be paid at different dates, and I suppose a part of the interest has already been paid.

I can not answer the Senator. I do not know exactly when the interest falls due; but this nineteen billions of dollars includes the interest charges. That is the entire expenses of the United States, including ordinary and extraordinary expenditures.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What I am trying to get at is this: At the present time the Government needs money. This bill provides for seven billions of dollars. I want to know how much it is necessary for the Government to have in the next three months to meet its immediate needs. With one billion four hundred millions in the Treasury and obligations of practically a billion and a quarter for interest, there are only one hundred and fifty millions available. As I understand, there are about $3,000,000,000 of informal war contracts to be provided for. There are other expenditures as well. I should like very much to know what the immediate needs of the Government are, and I ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if he can tell me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have stated to the Senator that the Government has obligations amounting to nineteen billions of dollars. I have stated that it has fourteen billions of dollars with which to pay them, and that it will take five billions more to carry it through this fiscal year. The last month our expenses were very low compared with what they had been in previous months. Nobody can tell exactly what they are going to be during the next three or four months. The Treasury, as I stated to the Senator awhile ago, estimates that $1,400,000,000 will be about the expenditures for each of the months of March, April, and May.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator include in that estimate the $5,000,000 carried in a bill introduced by Representative SHERLEY yesterday, to appropriate a lump sum for the use of the President in providing for the expenses of the peace conference?

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean in the deficiency bill?

Mr. PENROSE. No; a separate bill, prepared by the State Department, and disclosed to the light of day yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. If it was only disclosed yesterday, of course, the Treasury could not possibly have included it in an estimate made a week or 10 days ago. I had not heard of it before.

Mr. PENROSE. I am surprised that the Senator has not heard of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. When did the Senator from Pennsylvania first hear of it?

Mr. PENROSE. I learned of it as soon as the bill was introduced.

Mr. SIMMONS. When was that?

Mr. PENROSE. Yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to say it was yesterday.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill was introduced yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am surprised that the Senator from Pennsylvania did not know of it before yesterday.

Mr. PENROSE. I am not in the confidence of the State Department, and I had no means of knowing until it was published.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not any more in the confidence of the State Department than the Senator from Pennsylvania is; but that is neither here nor there.

Mr. PENROSE. I was curious to know whether it was included in the estimate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee about this billion dollars for the War Finance Corporation. He says it is to take care of the export situation. Does it provide that we shall pay for the goods we import from foreign countries?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly not. It has no relation to imports from foreign countries at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Or is it the exports that we make to France and Belgium?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the exports altogether. It has no relation to anything except financing export operations—the producers, the manufacturers, and the exporters of this country. If the Senator will permit me, it simply provides that this corporation can loan money to an exporter upon his promissory note to the extent of the value of the product exported, upon good and sufficient security, provided it shall be made to appear that on account of financial conditions he can not secure accommodations through the regular banking channels.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Can the Senator state what countries it is expected that this corporation will assist?

Mr. SIMMONS. Only domestic exporters. It does not make any difference to what country they are exporting American goods.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. How is the billion dollars arrived at?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, that was arrived at just by estimating how the money devoted to accommodations that could be obtained in the regular banking channels would be secured to relieve the pressing needs of our business.

I will say to the Senator that long-time paper is needed for a certain class of our trade; for instance, with South America and Central America. One of the great difficulties we have had in getting and holding that trade has been caused by the short-time credits customary with our system of banking and in the consequent difficulty in extending them the long-time credit which their conditions require. Foreign countries like Germany and France and other countries that deal with them have a more liberal banking system than we have.

We are giving to our exporters these loans on long time to enable them to meet that situation in South America in order that they may give their customers there longer time. Then when we get over in Europe we must have a still longer time, running from two to five years. One year would answer the requirements of the South American markets, but one year would not answer the requirements of the European markets at this time, especially in devasted countries like France and Belgium. They require a longer time. Unless they can get time, say two or three years, to get on their feet, to get their factories built, to get their machinery installed, to begin to produce in order that they may raise money, they can not pay. By means of the pending bill our exporters will be put in a position whereby they can give the creditors who require this longer time the benefit of the long-time credit that they get over here. It is believed that that will be very conducive to the extension and the expansion of our trade with our allies.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I thank the Senator. May I in connection with the statement made by the Senator read into the RECORD some comparisons regarding the gross debt of the allies at the beginning of the war and at the end of the war?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words in regard to the bill, against which I voted in committee. The bill provides for a loan of $7,000,000,000, and the loan is put in the form of notes, although they will be notes with five years to run, in order to put them beyond the right of conversion given to other bonds, and also to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the interest upon them, something which has never been done before with an obligation which had so many years before reaching maturity.

It has been the universal practice in regard to bonds for the Congress to fix the rate of interest. Here that great power is conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury, and the only reason given for it is that between now and the 21st of April rates of money may be lower than at present, and we shall be able to borrow at better rates than if we fix the rates now. That, of course, is a mere gambler's chance, and it may just as well work the other way as the way in which the Secretary of the Treasury hopes it will work.

I do not think this power ought to be given to the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to these notes. I think Congress ought to keep within its own hands, as it always has, any serious loan for any considerable length of time and fix the rate.

There are four kinds of notes provided for. The first are notes with the same exemption as the 3½ per cent bonds. The second are a class with the same exemption as the 4¼ per cent bonds. The third is a class of bonds to which is extended the privilege given in the fourth liberty loan of a certain exemption in proportion to the subscription. The fourth, it seems to me, is a wholly pointless and useless class. It is to have a note which shall have the same exceptions to exemption as the 4¼ per cent bonds, with the addition that they shall not be exempt from any income tax, the 4¼ per cent bonds being exempt from the normal tax, and this adds the normal tax. We know the price of the 4¼'s and that fourth clause would require no doubt a very high rate of interest. I can see no purpose in putting it in.

I think these notes should be divided into only two classes, the third class, of course, merely carrying on the privilege now given to the bonds of the fourth liberty loan, but the fourth class should be stricken out and the first two classes retained.

The Secretary of the Treasury not only has the power to fix the rate of interest; he also has the power to determine how many bonds shall be issued under each of these various classes. These appear to me to be enormous powers to be conferred, and wholly needless.

It was moved in the committee to strike out in the fourth and fifth lines the words "as the Secretary of the Treasury may" and insert in lieu thereof "as prescribed herein," and then to fix the rate for the first class of notes at 3½ per cent with complete exemption, and the second class at 4¼ per cent with the exemptions of the 4¼ per cent bonds, which I believe could be placed. I am sure if we took out the only tax left on the three-and-a-halfs, the estate or inheritance taxes, they could cover the whole loan with low-rate notes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator please repeat his statement? I did not quite catch it at the moment.

Mr. LODGE. To fix the rate for the first class of bonds at 3½ per cent and for the second class at 4¼ per cent, and I should prefer to see the three-and-a-halfs made clear of all taxes. I believes, as I was just saying, that the entire loan could be taken at that figure. Those amendments at the proper time I shall move.

The objection to that was that these three-and-a-halfs exempt from taxation would be taken up very rapidly by great capitalists who would thereby take the exemption; but, after all, the first purpose of the loan is to get money. If they could get the money, they would save enough on the interest to more than make up the taxes from which the millionaire would be exempted.

There is no need whatever really of passing this bond bill now. It would be much better to pass it, as bond bills usually are, just on the eve of the issue with the rate fixed by Congress. But there seemed to be an impression in the Treasury Department that when this Congress adjourns there will never be another. I am convinced there will be another, and that it will be perfectly able to attend to it.

That, Mr. President, is all I desire to say in regard to the bill. I merely wished to express the reasons for my opposition. I think I may add that the policy of giving a fund to the Finance Corporation in order to enable that corporation to extend credit in the export trade seems to me desirable, but I think too much has been appropriated.

I think $500,000,000 would be ample for the purpose.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] moved that amendment in the committee, and it was voted down, as were all amendments. I trust he will renew it here, for that amendment, as well as those I have suggested, I think ought to be voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as is usually the case when there is an extraordinary legislation to pass through Congress, this administration withholds it until the closing days of a session of a Congress, and then representatives of the administration come to Congress and claim that the legislation is of vital interest to the Government, and if it does not pass immediately there is no telling what is going to happen to the country. This bill could not pass Congress in the form in which it is presented here if it were not in the closing days of the session. I recognize, Mr. President, that no amendment is to be allowed upon the bill. It is to pass just as it has been reported to the Senate, without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" or the changing of a word.

The Secretary of the Treasury by the bill is authorized to sell these notes, so called, at not less than par and at a rate of interest that he shall determine upon. No such power as that has ever been granted to a Secretary of the Treasury in this country or in any other country in the world, and the only excuse that is offered for it, Mr. President, is that if we name the rate of interest in the pending bill the psychology of the situation would be such that the people would demand a higher rate at the time the sale is made than they would if the rate is withheld until one week before the bond-sale drive begins.

That reminds me that in the beginning of the year 1914, before the war broke out, the business conditions of this country were upon the toboggan. The balance of trade against our country was leaping by millions of dollars every month. Business was almost at a standstill, and everybody knew that under normal conditions there was financial trouble ahead for this country. We were told by the President that it was only a psychological condition; that the people were only thinking hard times; that it was not so; they were only thinking so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A Democratic psychology.

Mr. SMOOT. And now we are told, Mr. President, that if we will preach the principle of Wilsonian psychology you can fool the people of the United States into buying bonds at a low rate of interest. We are giving the Secretary of the Treasury the power to name the rate rather than to have Congress to do its duty and say what the rate shall be, and let the people know at the time of the passage of the law what the rate is to be. Can you tell me how it is going to make a particle of difference with the purchaser of a bond or note, so called, anywhere in the United States whether the rate of interest is named in the law or whether it is named by the Secretary of the Treasury in five weeks from now? No, Mr. President; it is the same old policy, "Give me more power"; and this is about the only power that could be thought of that had not already been granted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to know from the Senator from Utah, for my own information, whether the bill gives to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to declare to what extent, if any, these bonds shall be exempt from taxation?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will look at the bill, on pages 2 and 3, he will find that the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to designate the amount of each one of the classes of notes named, and that there are four classes of notes. He has the power to say they shall all be of one class up to $7,000,000,000, or they can be divided equally into four classes, or in any way that he may decide.

Mr. President, when the revenue bill was under consideration I made a statement upon this floor that the expenditures necessary for the Government of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, would be not $18,000,000,000, as stated by Secretary McAdoo, but, at the very least, they would be $20,000,000,000. I was taken to task by some officials of the Treasury Department, who stated that I was trying to excite the people of America, and that it was an unwise and exaggerated statement. I notice, Mr. President, in the hearing before the Committee on Finance, which was held the other day, that Mr. Leffingwell, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in discussing this question, makes the following statement:

> The position that the Treasury found itself in at the termination of hostilities was a very difficult one, and it seemed important at once to make some sort of a rough estimate of the problems before us. Secretary McAdoo immediately indicated to you his impression, in view of the armistice, that the expenditures for this fiscal year ending June 30, would be in the neighborhood of $18,000,000,000. I remember that at the time Senator SMOOT said that it would be nearer $20,000,000,000, and it may be that he was right. The expenditures ran at nearly $2,000,000,000 a month in November, December, and January last.

There is no question that our expenses are going to be $20,000,000,000, not taking into consideration a number of important appropriations which have been requested, but have not yet passed Congress.

Mr. President, I believe that the proper way to treat the American people is to tell them what they have got to meet. Let them know the obligations that the Government is under, and tell them just how they have got to meet them and when. If that course is followed, you will have the confidence of the American people, and they will rally to the support of the Government, as they have in the past; but it is just this method of legislating which, if continued much longer, is going to raise a distrust in the minds of the people so that it will be very hard, indeed, to raise the necessary money for the Government.

What we know already of the expenses of the Government and what we know will have to be met by June 30, 1920, will leave an interest-bearing debt of the Government of the United States of at least $33,000,000,000. I am not making statements merely for the purpose of making them. So that I may be judged in the future by what I say to-night I want to put into the RECORD, and I will say here now that not only will those expenses reach the figures to be named by me, but I am afraid that the amount of those expenses will be a billion or two billion dollars more.

We know, Mr. President, that the expenditures from July 1, 1918, to January 31, 1919, in round numbers, were $12,500,000,000. I am not going to give the exact dollars and cents, but I can do it if desired. We know that the expenditures, in round numbers, from February of this year—not taking into consideration the unpaid contracts of over $2,000,000,000, which, if paid out, would add to these figures—the expenditures for February were $1,250,000,000; for March, April, May, and June, they will be $6,000,000,000, or a total of $19,750,000,000.

Mr. President, these figures include expenditures made and to be made, which we know have got to be met, not including the appropriations which I might name here that would greatly increase the aggregate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. What is the Senator's estimate of the expenditures for the next fiscal year?

Mr. SMOOT. The expenditures for the next fiscal year, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, will be over $10,000,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Does that include the Oklawaha River also? [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I really did not figure in the Oklawaha River, but I want to say of that river that the future appropriations for it no human being can tell.

Mr. President, the expenditures of the Government from February to June, at the very lowest estimate, will be $7,250,000,000. We are to receive by way of interest on foreign loans, from revenue, and from miscellaneous items $3,000,000,000, making a net increase up to June 30, 1919, of $4,250,000,000.

The debt owed by the Government on the 31st day of January, 1919, in round numbers, was $23,250,000,000, making a total debt on June 30, 1919, of $27,500,000,000. As to the debt increase for the coming year there is no question that it will be $5,000,000,000 more. There is no question but that the Treasury will have to come to Congress and ask for an increase of bonds or obligations of the Government of some sort before the revenues of the Government will be sufficient to pay the annual expenses of the Government. In other words, there is no doubt that the total obligations of the Government will be $33,000,000,000, and I believe, Mr. President, before we get through with it, it will be even more than that, although I must admit that the salvage that will be received from sale of war material will go toward reducing the amount which I have named.

Mr. COLT rose.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I am much interested in the statement of the Senator, because he is so accurate in regard to the information which he gives us upon financial matters. I simply want to ask him if these estimates include the amount of loans to foreign nations?

Mr. SMOOT. They do include that amount, and I was coming to that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. COLT. I thank the Senator. I should like to get, if the Senator can give it, the net amount of that debt.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator, I will say that these estimates do include the amount of obligations of foreign governments to the United States. Those obligations to-day, in round numbers, are $8,500,000,000. There is no question but that indebtedness is going to increase. We can not help it if we are going to deal with certain foreign countries.

In this bill we provide a billion dollars as a revolving fund, to be used by the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of stimulating our trade with foreign nations. But, Mr. President, the real reason of it is that, if we continue to trade with foreign countries, we must provide some way to take care of the balance exchange between our country and those foreign countries. So long as our exports to a country exceed our imports there must be some arrangement made to maintain the exchange between the two countries. That is why we have been lending money to foreign countries. On a previous occasion, on the floor of the Senate, when asked how much money we were going to lend to foreign countries, I said, "Just the amount of money that the trade balance is in our favor," and that is what we have advanced. And as this trade balance in our favor continues, if it does continue, we have got to make advances or loans in order to take care of the balance of trade. There is not gold enough in the world to pay us the balances due for a few years past. That is impossible. Why did the United States go to Spain and make a loan a little while ago? Because we have purchased and imported more goods from Spain than we have sold to Spain. Spain furnished our Army with great quantities of goods, amounting to more than our exportations to that country. We had not the gold to send them, or rather we had it but we were not willing to part with it. Therefore we made the loan in order to balance our account with Spain and stabilize exchange. So as long as we are a creditor Nation and as long as our exports to any country are greater than our imports from that country arrangements must be made, either by advancing them the money or by their making a loan in some other country, to pay the balance.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any need of going into the details of this bill. In ordinary times we could offer amendments, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators, which we know would improve this bill; but what is the use of talking about or offering them when we know what is before us?

It was questioned whether it was or was not a good thing to call the proposed obligations of the Government "notes" or "bonds." In one of the acts passed by Congress we did define the meaning of "note," namely, that when an obligation of the Government ran for longer than a five-year period it was to be a bond; less than that length of time, a note. That was done on account of the short-time certificates or other obligations that we might temporarily issue. The real reason, however, for using the word "note" instead of "bond"—and yet they are exactly the same thing so far as results are concerned—was that if we were to use the word "bond," and the Secretary of the Treasury, through the power which is to be granted him by this bill, should conclude that under one of the classifications he would make the rate of interest 5 per cent, all other bonds issued by the Government of the United States would bear 5 per cent, as well as the loans to all foreign countries, as provided in their contract with our Government. There is no doubt about that.

We will save interest in this way; and I am going to support anything that will save interest to the Government of the United States, for I wish to say to the Senate now and to the country that for the next 25 years the appropriations that will be necessary in order to pay the expenses of the Government, including interest upon the obligations of the Government, and provide for a sinking fund that must be provided for, will amount, on the average, to at least $3,000,000,000 each year for that whole length of time. We provide in this bill a sinking fund of 2½ per cent on the total obligations of the Government, less the obligations owed to us by foreign countries.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. How long a time does the Senator think it will take to pay these bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the provisions of this bill, with a 2½ per cent sinking fund, it will take 24 years to pay the bonded indebtedness of the Government. I will tell the Senator how that is worked out. Grant that the foreign obligations to this Government amount to $10,000,000,000 and that our bonded indebtedness amounts in all to $30,000,000,000. The difference would be $20,000,000,000; and 2½ per cent on $20,000,000,000 amounts to $500,000,000 a year. Five hundred million dollars collected for 24 years, and, as it is collected, used to purchase bonds of the Government, and the interest on those bonds, reinvested, so that at the end of, I think, 23 years and 11 months the debt will be paid. That is the object of the sinking-fund provision.

Mr. President, the $500,000,000 would be a permanent sinking fund, to be paid by the people of the United States every year for 24 years; and, besides that, the interest of 4¼ per cent must be paid upon our bonded debt. Granting that there is $20,000,000,000 difference between the obligations of foreign countries held by our Government and our bonded debt, the interest at the rate of 4¼ per cent would amount to $425,000,000 more for an average of 10 years, making the interest and the sinking fund alone amount to $925,000,000.

Mr. CALDER. That is an obligation that the country must meet?

Mr. SMOOT. That is an obligation the country must meet.

Mr. CALDER. In addition to the cost of running the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. In addition to the cost of running the Government. We can not get away from it. It is impossible to do so.

Mr. President, I believe in a sinking fund. I think we ought to begin, just as soon as it is possible, to create that fund. But I believe, Mr. President, the best way to raise a sinking fund would be to impose a 1 per cent tax upon sales. Nobody would feel it. The American people would pay no more for their goods, and the money would be collected regularly, placed in the sinking fund, not $500,000,000 per annum, but $1,250,000,000, and we would pay our debt that much quicker and do no harm to the business interests of this country, and I do not believe the American people would have to pay more for their goods than they would without the small tax.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I think the Senator's suggestion is an excellent one. I advocated it in a speech I made here when the revenue bill of a year ago was under consideration, and I regret exceedingly that some provision of the character referred to by the Senator was not incorporated in the bill this year. I agree with him that there would be little difference in the cost of the things the people buy if the plan he suggests were adopted.

I should like to ask the Senator if he has ever given any thought to the proposition of extending the payment of these bonds over a period of longer than 24 years—say, 40 years. Would that be too long?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is too long a time, Mr. President. If we are going to make a sinking fund, I think we ought to make a sinking fund so that it would pay the indebtedness within 25 years.

Mr. CALDER. My idea was to spread the payment over a longer period, so as not to ask the people of this generation to make the entire sacrifice.

Mr. SMOOT. I should say to the Senator that we could provide a plan like this: Have a sinking fund of 2½ per cent upon the amount of our bonds each year, and with a sinking fund of 2½ per cent on the twenty billions the next year it would be nineteen billions five hundred millions, and the next year nineteen billions; and if we followed that system it would take just 40 years and about 2 months to pay it off.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if he really thinks this bond issue is going to be paid in 40 years?

Mr. SMOOT. I am afraid not, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think it will be paid in 400 years?

Mr. SMOOT. That is so long ahead, Mr. President, that I hate to express an opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course the Senator knows that Great Britain is paying interest upon debts which were contracted for carrying on the war against the Colonies in the days of the Revolution. They will never be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if the debt is paid there will be other debts created. Mr. President, this world war, so called, is not the last war we are going to have, nor is it the greatest war that will occur in this world. I do not want to be led off into a discussion now upon this question, but I feel just as confident as that I live that wars will continue in the world until selfishness and greed are eliminated from man's nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I understood the chairman of the Finance Committee to say that the reason why the rate of interest was not specified on these so-called notes was that they were to be short-time notes. If it is true—and I am afraid that it will prove to be true, as the Senator from Colorado has stated—this debt will not be paid for a great number of years, is not that a very good reason why the rate of interest ought to be specified, that it should not be left to any department to insert any kind of a rate? Would it not be better even to sell these notes below par than to allow a large interest rate? Perhaps I am mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is not mistaken. Not only that but what would the Senator as a banker say if the board of directors of a bank should say to the cashier, "Well, now, for some psychological reason we are not going to pass upon what the rates of interest shall be upon our loans, but we are going to give you the right and the power to name the rate of interest and the kind of a note or obligation. If it is your friend, you can make a low rate of interest; you can do as you please"? How long would a bank last doing that kind of business?

I want to say to you that the Government of the United States never ought to put that power in any man's hands, I do no care how honest he may be; I do not care how patriotic he may be. Congress is the power to name the rates; Congress is responsible for the results; Congress has to raise the revenue to pay the interest and that power ought never to be released by Congress.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it would seem to me to be a very unsafe method of doing business; but, if it does not disturb the Senator, I want to ask another question. There seems to be a difference between the estimate made by the Senator from Utah and the estimate made by the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Finance Committee. The chairman of the committee seems to think that the amount required for the next year will be $19,000,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is for this year.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Utah has figures showing $20,000,000,000. Just for my own information, and for the information of those who read the RECORD, is it possible that the Senator from Utah has figured in unearned interest, and that the Senator from North Carolina has not figured in that unearned interest?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say on what the Senator from North Carolina figured——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from North Carolina did not state his own opinion about it. The Senator from North Carolina simply said that the Treasury Department now estimates that the expenses for this fiscal year, not next year, will amount to about $19,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate will find it in the hearings before the committee. It was stated by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Leffingwell—and I want to say, in passing, that he knows more about the affairs of the Treasury Department than any man in it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not go that far, but I would say that Mr. Leffingwell's knowledge of the finances of this Government is very full and very thorough.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no hesitation in making the statement that I did.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a great deal of confidence in the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from Utah knows that I have the utmost confidence in the accuracy of his figures; and I think it is very important that the country should know, as nearly as possible, what these staggering amounts are, because we must prepare to meet them. The Senator from Utah referred to the amount of obligation, of debt. I assume he meant when he said that there were $33,000,000,000, including loans to the allies, that that is an interest-bearing debt. Of course, there are millions and hundreds of millions more, and we do not know what they are going to be, because there are still outstanding, I assume, perhaps billions of dollars' worth of contracts which have not been completed, and what that will amount to no one can tell. Did the Senator mean that the $33,000,000,000 included only the interest-bearing obligations?

Mr. SMOOT. They will all be interest-bearing obligations; but, to be frank with the Senator, I wish to say that that amount will include the estimated amount of contracts that we know are unsettled. That will be the total of the interest-bearing obligations of the Government if we are careful in making appropriations; but just think of what is coming to the Senate to be passed by next Tuesday at 12 o'clock. A deficiency bill of some $800,000,000, to take care of an item that we repealed the other day, based upon the estimate of the War Department, and within 10 days after the estimate was given and the passage of the law we were told that there was a mistake made of over $800,000,000! I know it does not amount to much, but it will amount to a great deal to the American people when they are called upon to pay it. There is $750,000,000 for the railroads, and a billion dollars in this bill for export business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is this $750,000,000 for the railroads another one of those revolving funds?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is supposed to be a revolving fund, but it does not revolve many times until it is almost gone.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it is a dissolving fund.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You mean you go in with a full satchel and come out with it empty?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the experience with the first $500,000,000 we provided. I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota, however, that a part of that $500,000,000 the Government will get back, and there will be a part of this $750,000,000 that the Government will get back. The Railroad Administration, Mr. President, claim that there is an actual loss of $196,000,000 out of that $500,000,000, providing all the advances made to the railroads for improvements of the roads, and so forth, are paid back into the Treasury of the United States; but I know, Mr. President, that the accounts of many of the railroads of this country are four months overdue. The creditors of these railroads are carrying millions of dollars. I do not know how soon they will be paid, but when they are paid the $196,000,000 so-called loss will be increased. If it does not increase the $196,000,000 for the year 1918, it will increase the loss for the coming year by just the amount of the accounts unpaid. If I wanted to, Mr. President, I could go into the details of the instructions that have been given about settling railroad accounts and show why they have not been paid.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator a little while ago to say that there was a billion dollars authorized to be loaned to exporters of this country, and to include that billion dollars among the Treasury liabilities.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator undoubtedly said that "here is this billion dollars that we have authorized to be loaned to the exporters for export business."

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say the War Finance Corporation will not have to get the money from some source?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does say that the Government will not borrow the money; that it is not a Treasury liability at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, Mr. President, why try to evade a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not trying to evade any question.

Mr. SMOOT. Why try to evade a question, Mr. President? The War Finance Corporation will more than likely advance this money upon the credit of the firms to which the goods are shipped. It is not the Government of Great Britain that is going to give security for goods imported; it is the man who receives the goods and purchases from the exporter of this country. But before the War Finance Corporation will advance any money it will require securities, and I think they will demand good securities. They take those securities to a bank, the bank advances the money upon the securities, through the War Finance Corporation, and then the bank borrows upon those securities from the Federal reserve bank. That is why Federal reserve notes have increased by the hundreds of millions of dollars, and they are not up to the limit yet. I think now there are about $2,500,000,000. I had the figures just the other day as to the exact amount.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the amount has been reduced lately.

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator in just a minute the exact amount.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah knows perfectly well that we are not making, nor will we ever be called upon to make, an appropriation out of the Treasury to pay this money which we authorize the Finance Corporation to loan to the exporters of this country. The Finance Corporation is authorized to issue three billions of its bonds; and it is authorized, when it has issued those bonds, sold them in the market, and gotten money on them, to loan $1,000,000,000 of that money to the domestic exporters of this country and take security for repayment of that money; so that it is not an obligation of the people at all. It is an obligation of the War Finance Corporation, and it is an obligation for which they take from the parties to whom they loan it such securities as a bank doing an ordinary business in this country would require of its customers.

Mr. SMOOT. If what the Senator says is true, I say that it makes no difference whether I take money out of my right-hand pocket or whether I take it out of my left-hand pocket. The money has to be raised in some way or other.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is a liability of the Government, and if the position of the Senator is correct—that because the money has to be raised somewhere, therefore it is a burden upon the Government—every loan by a bank in this country which has to sell its stock to get money, which has to borrow money to loan to somebody else, is likewise an obligation of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator gave some figures a few moments ago of the indebtedness of the United States. Did he include in that statement of indebtedness the amount of Federal reserve bank notes outstanding?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then why does he refer to them now as an obligation of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Just the same as I would refer to the obligation if it were a bank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I repeat my question. Did the Senator include in the statement of the indebtedness of the United States the Federal reserve bank notes outstanding? He says no, and yet he now claims to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that these Federal reserve bank notes issued to this corporation are to be included in the obligations of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what I stated, Mr. President: I said they are interest-bearing obligations of the Government; are certificates of indebtedness and war-savings stamps all drawing interest. That is what I called at the time the interest-bearing obligation of the Government. Why, Mr. President, all you have to do is to pick up the daily statement of the Treasury Department and you will find whether or not they are obligations.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Utah that these notes must be obligations. If they are not, the old theory that the more notes we print the richer we get is true. I never believed that to be the case.

Mr. SMOOT. It never would work out in practice.

Mr. GRONNA. For that reason I asked the Senator from Utah, because I consider him an authority, if the $33,000,000,000 to which he referred was an interest-bearing debt. No man, I think, will deny that the notes which the Senator from Utah has referred to are obligations of the Government. I think we must all acknowledge that, and I want to distinguish between the two.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] asked the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] what is the amount of money in the Treasury of the United States and whether we have bonds authorized that could be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury and anticipated receipts from other sources that could take care of the expenses of the Government up to June 30. Of course, I could not follow the Senator from North Carolina in his answer, but I want to say that in round numbers we have $1,500,000,000 in the Treasury. On March 15 we will receive from taxation under the revenue law $1,500,000,000 more. That would make a total of $3,000,000,000. We have certificates of indebtedness unsold, if this bond bill did not pass, of about $4,000,000,000. That would be $7,000,000,000. Then we have $5,000,000,000 of bonds authorized which I do not claim should be sold at this time. In fact, I think they could not be sold under the terms of the law which says that they shall not be sold for less than par. It is doubtful whether this can be done. The patriotism of the people was appealed to in all our four liberty bond drives at a time when our country was engaged in active war, but that condition does not exist to-day.

This bill ought to be amended in many particulars. I will predict now that no such measure will pass the Congress in the future. The time is past when the war cry can be used to pass autocratic legislation. That time is past and from now on reasons must be given before action will be allowed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate at this late hour. There is no use in discussing the bill, in my opinion. It is evident that it is to be put through at the point of the bayonet, and I am powerless to prevent it. If I had my way, I would gladly see it taken up in a deliberate way at an extra session of Congress and discussed as its magnitude justifies and passed, as has always been the case with similar pieces of legislation, on the eve of the loan drive. But, in order to avoid an extra session until the last moment, the administration and the majority in control in this Chamber have determined to pass this bill.

In view of that determination, it became necessary for them to insert the extraordinary provision in the bill that the Secretary of the Treasury should have the arbitrary discretion to fix the rate of interest on these bonds, for they are for all practical purposes bond issues. They are called notes simply as a change of name to prevent the conversion privilege of the previous issues and to give some colorable excuse for conferring upon the Secretary of the Treasury this unusual power.

Never before in the history of the American Republic has Congress abdicated its power in this respect and conferred on the head of the Treasury Department an authority of this character. We have been so accustomed to granting these extraordinary powers during the war period that it seems we are not shocked when they are continued when peace is practically prevailing. But I, for one, Mr. President, have cast my last vote in favor of giving these autocratic and extraordinary powers to the executive department. On this occasion I shall vote against this measure when it comes up for final passage.

Largely for this reason the minority members of the Finance Committee voted against the bill in the committee when the question of its final report came up. Many meritorious amendments were offered to the measure in committee. They were all voted down by a strictly party vote, notwithstanding the fact that some members of the majority confessed that the amendments should be adopted, but they were unwilling to change the bill in any particular at this late day of the session.

This measure, Mr. President, was not presented to Congress until well into February. It has not been before Congress or before the American people much over two weeks. Yet we are called upon to take it without any accurate estimate of the Government expenses, and with this radical departure from the constitutional practice of Congress and the Government through the whole life of the Republic. February 22 this bill first saw life, and it is being put through here without the possibility of discussion, hardly with an opportunity to the minority members of the Finance Committee to study the questions involved, and with the fact staring us in the face that doubtless a motion to lay on the table every amendment which may be offered will be made.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, I shall feel justified in voting against the bill. I have no confidence in the estimates made by the Treasury Department. They soar continually. They have estimated $18,000,000,000 or $19,000,000,000 one day, and hardly has another day rolled around when one or two more billion dollars of expenditures are disclosed. If this keeps on, Mr. President, instead of having a debt of $35,000,000,000, we have in sight a debt of $40,000,000,000, and it is not unlikely to go up toward the $50,000,000,000 mark. I do not recall a single occasion when the Secretary of the Treasury presented himself to the Finance Committee that within three weeks he did not come back with supplemental estimates, varying not in millions or hundreds of millions of dollars but by several billion dollars. Hardly had the Finance Committee passed upon this bill when it was discovered in the House of Representatives that a little mistake of nearly $900,000,000 had been made in the estimates of the War Department. I think the statement of Mr. SHERLEY in defending this measure is one of the most remarkable that was ever delivered in the American Congress. He said:

> It turns out that the Quartermaster Department has discovered, according to the present belief, that they tremendously underestimated the amount of outstanding obligations that existed against the Government. That apparently grew out of the fact that there were any number of obligations made by officers out over the country that had not been put upon the books here in Washington so as to be taken into account by the Division of Finance in connection with the matter; and they have also had very much heavier demands from overseas, due apparently to two causes, one the slower demobilization of the troops and the other the fact that over there apparently they did not have any accurate information in regard to the extent of their liabilities. The House will very properly ask, as I asked, what assurance in the face of these facts we can have in regard to the figures that have been furnished by the War Department touching liabilities. I do not know that any satisfactory answer can be made to that inquiry.

* * * * * * *

They have presented their best information to date, and all the committee could do under the circumstances was to take these figures as a revision of the former figures. Of course, this ought to be said, that necessarily there is a good deal of doubt, bound to be, and some speculation as to the exact amounts in connection with activities as huge as the War Department engaged in. I think they ought not to have made any such error as this, and I think that the system ought to have been such as to have had brought on the books here a more full statement of their actual liabilities, but it apparently is a fact. Of the total appropriations at the disposal of the War Department this error represents less than 4 per cent.

This amount, Mr. President, compels Mr. SHERLEY to ask for an appropriation of $829,000,000, an oversight of the War Department discovered three days ago. How is any bond bill or any tax bill going to meet the requirements of blunders and errors of that kind?

The day before Mr. SHERLEY made this announcement the Secretary of the Interior comes to the House of Representatives and gets reported favorably from the Committee on Agriculture a bill to appropriate $100,000,000 to promote the reclamation of land and encourage the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to induce them to settle in the Dismal Swamp and other attractive localities. He has the effrontery to proceed to state that ultimately $4,000,000,000 ought to be appropriated for this work, and in the facile way in which we are spending money I have no doubt he will get, in some form or other, the $4,000,000,000 before this administration is through.

This is one of the most ridiculous and chimerical projects ever presented to Congress. As the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] knows, because he has presented petitions from North Dakota and elsewhere in the RECORD, every grange and State association of farmers in the United States is opposed to this measure. It has absolutely no argument by which it can be defended. What we want in this country are not more farms but improved and more intensive cultivation of the farms we have. Even if we do want more farms, any of the soldiers who want to go on a farm could do better by taking up a semi-abandoned farm in the East than by waiting for the indefinite development of swamp lands under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The State Grange of Pennsylvania has acted in protest against this proposition, and I have no doubt in most of the States of the Union they will be heard here in very vigorous terms.

There is no evidence that the returning soldiers desire these farms or would avail themselves of them. In most cases they are needed on the farms at home, where farm labor is scarce and where farmers are in many cases giving up farming and going to the cities because they can not get labor.

Then every day similar propositions come in, so that I am disheartened in the proposition of raising money by loan or tax unless we can have some responsible budget system on the part of the administration by which the requisition for appropriations shall come through the Secretary of the Treasury and not upon the initiative of every Cabinet officer, and some concerted system introduced into the expenditures.

In this morning's paper I notice another little item of $5,000,000 for the trip of President Wilson, a lump sum. The article reads:

The Republican leaders of Congress to-night considered asking President Wilson to submit an itemized account of the expenses of his trip in Europe.

Introduction of a bill in the House of Representatives to-day granting the President a blanket appropriation of $5,000,000 with which to defray the expenses of his trip to England, Italy, and France, and the expenses of the American peace commission in Paris, raised the question.

The bill was drafted by the Department of State at the request of the President and was introduced to-day by Representative SHERLEY, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. The President during his visit at the Capitol yesterday asked that the bill be passed before adjournment next Tuesday. The sum would be appropriated to the President "for the national security and defense," and in a statement submitted by the Acting Secretary of State it was declared that most of the $150,000,000 fund given the President since the United States entered the war has been expended, and that there is not a sufficient amount remaining to meet the expenses of the peace delegates and of the President's trip.

I see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], before me, and I should like to ask him whether that is one of the measures scheduled to pass as the President has requested prior to the expiration of the present Congress on the 4th of March?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that no communication has reached the Senate Committee on Appropriations in respect to that matter, I know nothing whatever about it except what I have seen in the public press.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Pennsylvania was speaking a moment ago in regard to the return of the soldiers from camp and the Army. I should like to make this statement, if the Senator will permit me: That a soldier from one of these camps called on me to-day and filed with me a request signed by some 50 of 75 privates, corporals, and sergeants, and, I think, all below the grade of any commissioned officer, petitioning that they be discharged from their camps, and attaching to their requests various orders that had been issued.

The purport of this statement was that the only way a man could be released from a camp was by making a showing that he had a job, that he was necessary in some particular branch of a particular industry, and man after man had been refused a discharge, although they had shown that there was a shortage of labor in the particular industry in which they were skilled. The philosophy of the War Department seems to be that no man should be released until he had a job, and in the meantime they were keeping him in camp in a position where he could not get a job. Practically he was in prison, and, although it might be shown that there was a great dearth in the steel manufacturing business and a man should show he were a skilled worker in steel, that was not enough; he must show that he actually had a job and that his individual labor was necessary in some particular place, and, while the man was required to make that showing, he was kept in a camp, so that it was impossible for him to secure a particular job from a particular industry.

These men protested against this sort of thing. The man who brought me the paper said, "I hope you will protect us so that we will not be sent to the penitentiary."

The Senator's remark recalled this fact to my mind, and I want to add my word of admonition and warning. I again want to utter a protest against keeping American soldiers in these camps.

Mr. PENROSE. Perhaps Mr. Lane wants to keep them there until he can get the swamps reclaimed. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Perhaps so; I do not know.

Mr. PENROSE. Neither do I.

Mr. REED. This much, I say, that the man who brought me this petition told me that he had applied five different times for a discharge, and he had been moved three different times from one camp to another.

The other day, in some remarks in the Senate, I protested against keeping these American soldiers in American camps. If the Senator will be so kind as to indulge me this further remark, I think the time has come when the Senate ought to say to the Military Department that the boys in American camps ought to be allowed to return to their homes and to the industries of the country. That is especially true, as is suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], of those who are naturally employed upon the farms.

Mr. PENROSE. Does not the Senator think they had better go home and take up their tasks on the farm with their parents and relatives and neighbors, or wait and reclaim swamps in some distant locality away from everybody they know?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has been so generous with his time, will he let me answer that in my own way?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; but I hope the Senator will not express too fully his real feelings. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. If I were to undertake that I am afraid I would take more time, and I shall not delay the passage of this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I am through anyway, and I will yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I do not want the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield the floor.

I said the other day, and I now repeat, that the average American citizen knows how to take care of himself; that he does not need the guardianship of the War Department or of any man in the War Department between the Secretary of War and the second lieutenant who may undertake to tell him what to do. If you will allow these boys, reared in American homes and educated in American schools, the opportunity to take care of themselves they will be quite able to find their way to their respective homes and to their places of business or of labor.

The truth is—and it might as well be stated with brutal frankness—that there are a lot of gentlemen who have concluded that if they were to let these men, who were forced to leave their homes, return to their homes too quickly it might affect the labor situation—a very narrow view and a view that utterly disregards the rights of these men, who were dragged from their homes and who are to-day in the camps of this country. Those camps are rapidly becoming nothing more nor less than prison camps. When you take a man from his home by force of law and put him into a military camp for the purpose of defending his country, that is not a servitude; that may be considered as an honor; but when the war is over and when peace in fact exists, if you require that man to be held in a camp in order that the wage market or the economic conditions may not be disturbed, according to the ideas of certain men, you are in fact imprisoning that man, holding him there against his will, and holding him there against the interests of his country.

I am growing tired of seeing men in the United States uniform, who are, in fact, prisoners, held by the command of some gentlemen who happen to have authority in our Army, and thousands and tens of thousands of these men are being so held—a petty tyranny to my mind, by men who happen to be commissioned officers in the Army and who happen to be at the head of the War Department. It ought to cease, and it ought to cease at once.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Missouri, a member of the Military Affairs Committee, if any reason has ever been given or any excuse assigned for holding the boys in the Army who are in the camps in the United States? They are certainly not being held with a view of sending them to engage in war. I want, if the Senator will pardon me for taking up his time, to state that I have received within the last 10 days five hundred or a thousand letters from boys who came from Mississippi who are in the Army and in the Navy, who are the sons of farmers and whose fathers need them. Many of them are young men with small farms, and they can not get labor. If those men are not permitted to go home within the next 30 days, it will be impossible to make a crop during the present year and the entire year will be lost. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he knows any reason for this policy? Did the War Department undertake to give any excuse for this what seems to me a criminal, stupid policy?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can only answer that in this way: Shortly after the war closed, I was in what might be called a conference; and the question was asked what was going to be done to prevent further sacrifices by our soldier countrymen. It was stated that all the men who had been ordered out by the last draft had been told not to meet at the points arranged, and those on the way had been told to return to their homes—a very excellent arrangement and one highly satisfactory to every member of the committee that made inquiry. Then, the question came up as to how the men in the American camps would be demobilized; and I found that a program had been arranged, a somewhat elaborate program, by which certain men in certain vocations and employments would be released, then certain other men, and then certain other men, and so forth. The inquiry was made: Why this elaborate system, this technical arrangement of release? And the answer was that men must not be released too soon because the labor market would be congested, and because these men serving in the Army might remain too long in the cities of the East, and so forth, and so forth.

I ventured at that time to suggest that the average American boy had enough sense so that he did not need guardianship; that he had not lost all of his judgment when he was mustered into the Army; that if he had been able to take care of himself before he was either drafted or enlisted he might possibly be able to find his way home now and did not need the guiding hand of the War Department in order to take care of him. I ventured further to suggest that it was not the business of the War Department to undertake to regulate wages or the economic or industrial conditions of our country; that the thing to do was to turn these young men loose and let them go back to their homes, to their wives—if they had wives—to their mothers, and to their sweethearts and to the neighborhoods in which they lived; and that if they would but turn them loose and recognize the fact that all the wisdom in the world was not concentrated in Washington and all of the brains of creation was not monopolized by the War Department, but that some other people somewhere, somehow, at some time, might have a little sense, the whole problem would be speedily solved; that all they needed to do was to give these young men a chance to strip off their uniforms and return to their homes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator recall that immediately after the armistice the War Department stated to the American people in innumerable interviews in the newspapers that we were going to discharge 30,000 a day until the Army was discharged?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. If they had lived up to that promise, there would have been over 3,300,000 boys discharged up to date; all who were in the Army in this country would have been discharged; but, as a matter of fact, only a little more than one-half of the young men have been discharged. The War Department has discharged less than one-third of the number they promised to discharge.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator from Tennessee, who has given great attention to these matters as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, for his contribution. The fact of the matter is—and I hesitate to say it; I do not like to say it; but, in my opinion, the War Department is being guided in its actions by outside advice, and that outside advisory committee is interested in constantly keeping a dearth of labor. It is so wise, and the War Department is so wise, as to think, if there are 10,000,000 workers in the world, if 5,000,000 of them are put in military camps and the other 5,000,000 are obliged to support them, that that has benefited the whole 10,000,000. That sort of philosophy belongs in that classification of superlative wisdom which is able to write leagues of nations.

Why, Mr. President, the order, as I have read it—and I am sorry I have not my papers with me; I had no idea that this would come up at this hour of the evening—the order provides that men shall be released if they can show they have a job. In God's good name—and I say it reverently—what has the question whether an American citizen has a job already secured to do with his right to be restored to his civil status when the war is over? You take a man from his family, you take him from his home for the purpose of defending his country in its hour of peril, and you propose to release him only if he has a job! What business is it of the War Department whether he has a job or not? How is he going to get a job in Missouri while you have him imprisoned in a camp in Maryland? How is he going to get a job in Washington while you have him in camp somewhere in Massachusetts or in Maine? What right have you to keep this man in a camp in a condition practically of imprisonment, and to issue orders that he shall only be released in the event that he has a job?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with what the Senator says with reference to the men in the Army. I have a good many requests, however, from men who enlisted in the Navy, and the showing is made on their behalf by their friends that a job is awaiting them, and yet, even under those circumstances, we can not get them out from the Navy. The men understood they were enlisting for the war. The Navy authorities announce that they are in for four years, and they are going to keep them, and will not send them back even when the job is ready.

Mr. REED. I do not know how you are going to regulate these matters. When you find executive officers who disregard the spirit of law, who disregard the rights of men, I do not know how you are to regulate that sort of thing. One of the strangest things in this world is the fact that a grant of executive power is a very dangerous thing under any and all circumstances, and the smaller the man the more certain he is to abuse that power. If he is a very small man, you can invariably count on his abuse of power.

We called these boys from the farm, from the anvil, from the loom, from the countinghouse, from all places of our land, and we said to them, "This is a service of patriotism. When you have served your country you will be released." The statement made by the Senator from Washington that men were enlisted for the war and are now told that they must be kept for four years is a very startling statement. If the Senator from Washington is not mistaken as to the facts—and I know that he is sincere—then a breach of faith unparalleled and shocking is about to be perpetrated or has been perpetrated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course my sole authority is the statements of the boys who enlisted. I will venture to say that I have gotten 25 or 30 letters, and almost every one that seeks discharge from the Navy states that the recruiting officer assured him when he enlisted in the Navy that it was only for the period of the war.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know how these matters will be straightened out. I know this—that the man or the men who are guilty of any breach of faith with these American citizens, who are American citizens although they wear a uniform, will, if he lives very long, regret that breach of faith. The 2,000,000 men that come back from France will come back with their experience and with their ideas, and I venture the prediction that when they come back they will have some very practical ideas; that they will bring back some common sense with them; that you will find that they are not believers in any kind of magic, either modern or ancient; that you will learn that these men know what it costs to make war in foreign countries, and what the hardships are upon the man who has been dragged from his home and kept in trench or camp for two or three years.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before the Senator passes from the inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] I wish to say that I think it will be found that the actual enlistment papers will show that the men enlisted for a term of years; but, at the same time, that situation also is peculiar, in that the naval crews are manning the merchant ships that are bringing the boys home from France, and they are needed for that service just about as badly as we ever needed them in time of war. We must bring the boys home; we must man these ships by the men from the Navy, and we need them for that purpose. It is a very important purpose.

Mr. REED. That is absolutely correct. The Senator's statement of the fact as he understands it is accurate. Of course, men should be held for that purpose. That is not the statement made by the Senator from Washington; but a short time would do that. That does not mean an enlistment for four years, as has been suggested in a side remark of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. President, this young man who came into my office this morning with this protest from the Army camp signed by 50 men, all of whom understood they were probably jeopardizing such liberty as they had, stated that his case was no exception; that he had made his application weeks ago, he had absolutely complied even with the limitations and restrictions of the orders, and yet he had been moved from camp to camp. He said to me that his case was but typical of others. He brought in a paper signed by about 50 other men. When soldiers sign their names to a paper of that kind under the conditions that now exist, and 50 or 60 of them will sign from one camp, it is a very significant fact; and as he handed me the paper he said, "I hope you will see that we are not sent to the penitentiary."

Mr. President, petty tyrants do not exist long among a free people, and these small men, who strut about to-day, armed with a brief authority, will not last long in this Republic. I regard it as an unspeakable outrage that 600,000 men are still confined in the military camps of this country. I regard it as an indictment of the Chief of Staff, if he is responsible; of the Secretary of War, if he is responsible; of any man, however great his place, if he is responsible. These men are American citizens. They have the right to be returned to their homes at the earliest moment. If there was danger of war, and if they were needed for that reason, they would be content to remain and serve, and I would be content to insist that they should remain and serve; but——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Let me finish the sentence; then I will yield gladly. But the war is over; it has been over for months; there is no reason for their retention. I repeat that the rules and regulations for their discharge were inspired from outside—from other reasons, nonmilitary reasons. I will put it that way, and let it stand at that. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, can the Senator assure us that there will not be a renewal of hostilities with Germany, or that there will not be an outbreak of hostilities with Russia? Especially, can he assure us that that would be the case if we should disband all of our troops and send them home?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator from the War Department itself. The War Department admits that there is no necessity of keeping these troops that are in American camps for the purposes indicated by the Senator. The War Department's sole excuse is that it is afraid to turn these troops loose too quickly, lest there should be some disturbance in the labor market of America. The War Department, further than that, says that it intends to bring the men back from Europe, and claims that it is trying to bring them back as rapidly as it can; and, of course, it would not be bringing the men back from Europe if there were still serious danger of war in Europe. Of course, too, if it can safely bring the men back from the battle front, from the scene of war, it can surely discharge the men who never were within 3,000 miles of the scene of war.

Moreover, while I am speaking of that, let me remark that the bringing back of these men, as I said the other day, has been so miserably slow that, as shown by the Senator from Oklahoma, the men withdrawn from the battle front have been put in unhealthful camps for want of boats to bring them; and the boats that we could so readily get to carry our soldiers over to Europe to die in the cause of Europe more than in our cause have been withdrawn from our use, and we do not have them to return our troops to their homes.

Mr. President, a Senator may be making a sort of nuisance of himself at this late hour to rise and utter this protest; but I understand that the Congress is not to be reassembled. Therefore, the protest I now make, and which I would have made upon the reassembling of Congress had it been called, I make because there probably will be no other time. I do not think it will be much heeded. I do not think that at the other end of the Avenue there is much respect for the Congress of the United States. I do not think there is much respect for the Senate of the United States. There will not be much respect until the Senate asserts its authority, until the people of the United States are again represented by men who do not fear to speak their sentiments.

Mr. President, I have interjected this long speech in the midst of the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but as he has graciously yielded the floor for it, I thank him.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri takes his seat may I make a very brief inquiry of him, and, with his permission, read to him a letter recently received?

I am so very thoroughly in sympathy with what the Senator says concerning the soldiers; I have such an obsession upon the idea that Congress ought to see that these soldiers are sent home at the earliest possible moment, and not only that they ought to see that these soldiers are released at the earliest possible moment, but that they ought to be sitting here seeing that there is employment for every released soldier of the United States Government who has fought in this war; I have, I say, such an obsession upon that subject that I commend the Senator from Missouri for what he has said. But there are 5,000 of our boys, too, deserted, abandoned, forgotten, in Russia; and I want to read to you a letter from one of those boys and then ask the Senator from Missouri his view concerning them.

Here is a letter from a man, dated Archangel, Russia, January 5, 1919, handed to me by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and authentic in every respect:

ARCHANGEL, RUSSIA, January 5, 1919.

MY VERY DEAR MOTHER AND FATHER: If you receive this letter, it is entirely due to the kindness of an American sailor friend of mine, who has offered to mail it when arriving in the States. He leaves this land of chaos in a few days. I am not writing you this letter to cause you worry, but no doubt it will. I find that conditions are such here that everything possible must be done to improve them. The American forces in this section of Russia consist only of our regiment, about 3,500 men. We are under British orders, which, in my opinion, is a disgrace to the United States. As I have explained in a previous letter, we were told that this expedition was only for the purpose of guarding American supplies here and defeating the Huns, preventing Russia from becoming an ally of the central powers. It has developed into an expedition of interference. We are now fighting the Bolsheviks, but this is not being done with the aid of the Russian people. They are all plotting and working against us, with the exception of the capitalists, who are solely soliciting the aid of the allies. The Russian people consider the problem is for themselves to take care of, and we have no right to murder any of these Russians. Affairs at the front have taken on a very serious aspect. During the past few days the casualties are heavier than they were at the western front. For the same body of men we are outnumbered 10 to 1, and I can not understand why we should be gradually slaughtered in this manner. The number of men killed and wounded during the past few days is 86. But then, that has to be expected, when you consider the odds. Every American soldier has 10 Bolsheviks against him. The Russians that are enlisting in the British Army here obtain all the food and clothing they can possibly obtain, and when they are taken to the front they go over to the Bolshevik side. Do you think we should fight here under such conditions?

At the present time there is an order in which may result in us moving to the front in a few days. Now, do not think, mother and dad, that this letter is an expresison of cowardice on my part. On the contrary, I will fight like a tiger until I am beaten; but I appeal in behalf of "Detroit's Own" that something be done. Either take us out of here or else reinforce us so that we will at least have an even fight; and, for the Lord's sake, try to have us placed under American command. We are all loyal Americans, true to our country and flag, and are ready to die for the cause at any time, but we believe that the United States of America is ignorant of conditions here. Confer with DOREMUS and TOWNSEND, anyone at all who may be able to assist in clearing this matter. If conditions do not improve soon, I would not be surprised that you will address my letter "private" again instead of "sergeant," as I will be doing something here which will cause a demotion. Please allow my dear little wife to read this letter, or a copy of it. She may be able to help you. Love, hugs, and kisses.

And the dear little wife he speaks of is working to-day in the city of Grand Rapids earning her living because of delayed allotments, working there while the man, the breadwinner of the family, is in the snows of Russia, fighting a war never declared by the United States, fighting a war in which we never in any degree participated either as a Congress or as a people. Forgotten, deserted, abandoned are these men in Russia, under British command. That is a favorite sort of thing, perhaps, to-day for us, but under British command every man, every platoon, and every company there, and they appeal to me just as the soldiers that have been suggested by the Senator from Missouri appealed to him. Like the Senator, I long and hope and pray that the day may soon come when they may return to their own America again, Americans doing Americans' work in America.

Mr. REED. What was the question the Senator wished to ask?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do you think these men should be brought home and relieved as well as those to whom you advert?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I answered that question in a few remarks I made here some days ago. At that time I ventured to say that every nation must work out its own salvation; that nations could not come in and organize a nation to lift it by virtue of outside help. So I say in answer to the Senator's question Russia must work out her salvation. That great nation, numbering, I think, nearly 190,000,000 and occupying a territory so vast as to be almost incomprehensible, must fix its own kind of government, must provide its own police force, must settle its own differences, must reestablish peace within its own borders.

More than that, Mr. President, I insist that it is the right of those people to do that. There was a time when the Russian Government was under contract with the allies to sustain a certain part in the war, and when that Government suddenly was crushed or when it was betrayed, under whichever term you want to describe it, there might have been an interval when we would have been fully justified in sending our armies into Russia for the purpose of maintaining that battle front and enabling that nation to assist in crushing the Teutonic powers. That time passed by. I do not criticize because there were not soldiers sent in; perhaps they could not be; but we arrived, then, at a period when Russia found herself in a state of chaos, and a little later we arrived at a period when peace had practically come, and the great Russian people were left there to work out the kind of government they desired to live under.

Mr. President, they have a right to solve that problem for themselves in their own way. I need cite no higher authority upon that question than the President himself, for all will remember that when war and anarchy were in complete control of Mexico, the President repeatedly said those people had the right to solve their own problems, that they had the right of self-determination, that they had the right to set up any kind of government they wanted to set up, and it was no business of the United States, although Mexico was a near neighbor, to undertake to dictate a form of government for her. Mr. President, we backed the President of the United States in that statement, and I think the people ratified it at the polls.

I do not know the merits of the contest going on in Russia, but any people capable of self-government will resent and repel with indignation and contumely and scorn the attempt of any outside government to set up a government for them. Any nation that is fit for self-government will never tolerate outside interference. Any government that is fit to live must be a government that springs from the people and finds its origin in the hearts and will of the people who are to live under that government—aye, who, indeed, are to be a part of that government; and I am in favor of letting Russia settle her own conditions.

Then I am in favor of it for another reason. The reason I have given is one based upon human right, justice, and equity; but there is another reason. I am in favor of letting Russia work out her own destiny, because we could not do anything else if we tried. Napoleon undertook to police Russia, and Russia's courage plus the snows of Russia's winters decimated the army of Napoleon and finally the blasts from the north drove his troops back and back and back until the ragged, skeleton army retreated across the Russian frontier.

How many troops would it take to police Russia? There are 180,000,000 men in Russia. Once you arouse their fighting spirit they will fight as well as most other men. How many American boys must we keep over there to police Russia? When the league of nations has been formed and we have agreed that we will perform the obligations of this compact and preserve the boundaries and the political independence of each of the nations within the league, how many hundred thousand men will it take to hold Russia in check and to conquer her? And if Russia be outside the league, how many hundred thousand or million of men will it take to discipline Russia as one of the backward nations mentioned in the proposed constitution of the league of nations?

On the other hand, if you will let Russia alone and do not undertake to set up a suzerainty over her, Russia will finally solve her own problems in accordance with the will of the majority of her people. I do not know whether she will call back the house of Romanoff, or whether she will establish a republic something like ours, or whether she will have a government of Soviets. Whatever she has, Russia has a right to her own government, whatever it may be. This country has no more right to set up a government over Russia than Russia has the right to set up a government over us. The right of all just governments springs from the consent of the governed. Once you deny that doctrine, you have denied the doctrine upon which our Republic is founded. Once you pull out that pillar in the philosophy of government, the temple of human freedom will topple about the heads of the sons of men.

I insist that England has the right, if she wants, to have a government at the head of which shall be a king; and she has the right to have a king who is a mere shadow king, dancing in the fantastic farce of autocracy, or she has the right to have a real king. She has the right to have a titled autocracy, or she has the right to strike them all down. She has the right to govern herself the same as we have the right to govern ourselves.

France, glorious France, has a right to have a Republic. She has a right to set aside that Republic and to find some degenerate son of the race of Napoleon and put him on a throne, if she wants to do so. It is none of the business of the United States of America. I hope she will not do it; I pray for the sake of the French people she will not do it; but if the French people want a kingly government, they have the right to put a crown upon the head of any creature, whether he be great or whether he be small.

And so I say of Germany. Although Germany to-day lies prostrate, and ought to lie prostrate until she has been thoroughly disciplined, yet the time will come and must come when the German people will be entitled to form their own government, and any attempt to keep them from doing it will be a mistake; it will be a retrograde movement.

Thus with all the nations of the earth. Governments generally are only the reflection of the heart and soul and desire of a people. Not always is this true, but generally it is the case. The business of the United States is to recognize the great principle upon which our Government is founded, which is that every people have the right to determine their own government. All just government springs from the consent of the governed.

Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from California, all I have to say is this: I do not know the particular circumstances that put our Army into Russia, but I do know that our Army ought to be taken out of Russia if its purpose there is to control the Russian people in their internal affairs. That is not our business; that is not our task. More than that, all history demonstrates the futility of such an undertaking. Suppose an army were to descend into our country if we were in a state of disaster.

I do not care whether they came with Bibles in their hands, I do not care whether they came with the sweetest philosophy that ever fell from human lips, so long as those Bibles were supported by the sword and the bayonet of a hostile force, so long as that philosophy came to us upon the lips of officers who were in command of armies that had their feet upon our soil, we would reject it, we would purge it, we would repudiate it. Every page of history, bloody and ghastly as history's pages are, has been rendered more bloody and more ghastly by the attempt of one nation and one people to force its philosophy, its doctrines, its teachings, and its opinions upon another nation.

Mr. President, I hope our troops will be drawn out of Russia. I hope Russia will speedily get peace. I hope that in this night of Russia's trial there may appear finally the star that will guide the Russian people upon the high plane of progress, achievement, and liberty. But I do know that it is not our part to try to shoot our ideas into the hearts of the Russian people, to endeavor to try to carry our kind of government and our philosphy into Russia upon the point of the bayonet, to seek to force our notions into the breast of Russia with bayonets.

Mr. CALDER. The pending amendment introduced by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] provides that the vignette of Col. Roosevelt shall be printed on the bonds or notes provided for in the measure under consideration.

I am heartily in favor of this amendment and commend it to the consideration of the Senate. It is suggested that this be termed a victory loan, but I can conceive of no better name for it than the Roosevelt victory loan. How better can we honor the memory of this great man than by placing his picture upon the war bonds of the country, and what better method, Mr. President, to assist in selling them to the people of the Nation than to have them termed "Roosevelt victory bonds"?

I know, Mr. President, there will be a disposition to lay on the table all amendments to this bill, but I trust the Senator in charge of this measure will not object to this amendment, which I think will add so materially to the popularization of the loan.

There has been a great deal said this evening about these bonds and the other obligations of the Government, and some Senators have expressed fear at the business outlook. The most important thing this Congress must consider in these closing days and the next Congress when it meets is the necessity of using every care in appropriating the people's money. In my opinion there is no greater obligation resting upon Senators and Representatives. We are placing very great burdens upon the people in the unusual taxes Congress has levied. They will find difficulty in meeting them, and we should above and beyond all consider their interests.

Mr. President, I do not share the hopelessness expressed by some Senators. We have had deposited in the banks and other financial institutions of the United States during the past four years sums totaling over $5,000,000,000 more than those institutions contained previous to that time. Then, too, Mr. President, the wealth of this country totals in the neighborhood of $235,000,000,000. So I see no reason why we should not feel certain of the future, provided Congress legislates intelligently and does everything in its power to keep down the costs of Government.

I contemplate occupying the time of the Senate just a moment or two in discussing a phase of this bill.

Mr. President, one of the clauses of this bill deals with the War Finance Corporation. It is intended that the War Finance Corporation be continued in existence for a year after the proclamation of peace, and be empowered to use $1,000,000,000 of the total $3,500,000,000 which the original war finance corporation act placed at its disposal. The purpose of the extension of power is to permit a continuation of our export trade, unrestricted by the lack of credit on the part of the prospective purchasers in devastated Europe.

The need for some such measure becomes evident from a study of the facts. As a result of the war our production capacity has increased considerably. Our production of steel increased from about 31,000,000 tons in 1913 to 45,000,000 in 1917. Our production of pig iron rose in the same proportion. Our refinery production of copper grew from 1,600,000,000 pounds in 1913 to about 2,400,000,000 in 1917. Production was increased not only in the basic materials, but also all along the line, including manufactures. This increase of production was called forth by the insistent needs of Europe. Our exports during the war rose from about $2,500,000,000 in 1914 to over $6,000,000,000 in 1918. The duty of the moment is to make it possible that our industrial machine keeps going. Every section of the country and every class in the community is vitally interested, and would be directly affected by any serious slackening up in industry. This slackening up is inevitable if the important outlets abroad are closed for lack of credit facilities for purchase.

But not only are we concerned in stimulating exports; the peoples of Europe need our goods. The National Foreign Trade Council at the end of 1916 estimated that the rehabilitation needs of Belgium and northern France would amount to about $10,000,000,000. An official report made by the French ministry of the interior shows that over 46,000 houses, 221 city halls, 379 schools, 331 churches, and 306 other public buildings were destroyed or damaged up to June, 1916. At that time estimates were made of the amount of reconstruction material. The needs are enormous for lumber, iron goods, hardware, drainage and heating appliances, and paints. The rehabilitation of industrial France and Belgium will call for machine tools and machinery of the latest model to replace that looted by the Hun.

Here you have a situation in which there is an imperative need that we continue to export to insure in the United States the stabilization of labor, industry, and commerce on the one hand, and on the other there is the urgent call for our goods from the devastated countries of Europe, who have not at present the means wherewith to pay for them. Under present conditions we can not sell if we do not lend.

Before the war our exports exceeded our imports by about $500,000,000. This excess of commodities was balanced in several ways. First of all, Europe charged us upward of a hundred million for carrying our exports. Then again, we had an annual debit covering interest and dividends on American securities held in Europe. Furthermore, Great Britain and Germany financed our export trade in sterling or mark drafts. Finally, to balance the account, Europe would send us gold when necessary. That is, before the war Europe's charges for shipping and banking services and interest balanced our excess of commodity exports. The war has made it impossible for Europe to pay in this manner any longer.

What happened during the war? During the years ending June 30, 1914 to 1918, our balance of commodity exports totaled the enormous sum of over $11,000,000,000. To pay for this excess of commodities Europe shipped us over a billion dollars in gold; this was the usual prewar method of settling trade balances. When the Bank of England's reserve ratio continued to decline from its prewar level of about 60 per cent down to 20 per cent or so, British financiers sought other methods of payment. They turned to American securities held in Europe. And they shipped them. Mr. L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, estimated that about $2,500,000,000 worth of American securities were returned to us. That is, in future we shall no longer have to pay interest and dividends on these abroad. The British then floated an unsecured loan, the Anglo-French five-year fives, offered in 1915, which, owing to the unfamiliarity of American investors with bonds of this class, was raised with difficulty.

They then proceeded to mobilize the remaining securities, American or neutral, and pledged them under the United Kingdom 5½s offered in November, 1916, and in February, 1917, the total amount being $500,000,000 for the unsecured loan and $450,000,000 for the secured loans. We then approached the period in the financing of the war when Great Britain would not ship gold and had no more securities to sell or pledge. Do you remember what happened? Our bankers made public declarations that unless we made further loans to our customers our exports would decline and our industry would become idle. Indeed, some large orders intended for American plants were turned over to the Canadians, who were willing to lend in order that they might sell. The difficulty was solved when we entered the war, and authorized Government advances to our allies. To date the United States Government has advanced about $8,500,000,000 to our associates in the war.

What of the after-war prospect? We have changed from a debtor to a creditor country, and we must take the course that our new position imposes upon us. What is the course? It is the one that before the war was followed by Great Britain, France, and Germany. They loaned money to their customers. Indeed the securities pledged by Great Britain and France under our loan to them cover those of Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, and Holland, as well as those of the British Dominions. The United States in the future will have to lend if it would sell. The immediate situation is acute and demands prompt action. I believe that nothing less than Government aid in the present emergency will tide us over until the period of readjustment is over and private initiative is able to assume this new duty.

How would the plan work? The War Finance Corporation would not lend any money directly to the European importers. It would not cover goods not produced in the United States, nor would it make any advances to any American manufacturer except for the purpose of selling goods abroad. If an American producer receives an order from a European merchant, manufacturer, or municipality, and they arrange satisfactory terms of credit up to a period of five years within which payment is expected, the American manufacturer would either have to carry the account himself, which would eventually tie up his liquid capital, or else have his bank carry it for him, which procedure would limit his remaining credit with the bank in addition to tying up bankable funds which are needed in other directions. If now either the American manufacturer or the American banker who holds the foreign security presents it to the War Finance Corporation, he will be able to obtain an advance.

Even if the corporation does not exercise this power on a large scale, the mere fact that the power is available to be used in an emergency is of great potential value. The War Finance Corporation has in the past, in some cases, by its mere approval of an advance against securities which were to be issued, made it possible for companies to sell their securities directly to the public. Again the corporation made advances of, say, 30 per cent against securities upon the condition that the applicant for an advance raise the other 70 per cent in the usual banking or investment channels. In this sense the War Finance Corporation would underwrite American prosperity during the critical transition period we are now in the midst of.

It is not intended that this be a permanent Government function. Nor is it intended that Government activity replace private initiative in the matter. The aim is to have the Government assist during the brief emergency in order that private initiative in industry and commerce be given free scope.

If we allow matters to take the course they did before the war, we may find that cotton will remain down, copper and iron likewise, and our industry will remain stagnant, our labor, too, in part unemployed, and the general economic conditions depressed. Our foreign trade is not a mechanical thing stuck on to our economic life. It is an integral part of it. Our foreign trade bears the same relation to our domestic welfare as did the nail in the old legend "for the want of a nail the shoe was lost; for the want of the shoe the horse was lost; for the want of the horse the rider was lost, all for the want of a horseshoe nail." The difficulties we face, if our export trade should be greatly curtailed, are far more serious than would be the imaginary danger of a slight extension of Government function for the short period and under limited conditions, especially if intrusted to the War Finance Corporation, which has shown no disposition to lend too freely. If we do not provide the War Finance Corporation with these new powers for fear of extending the Government's powers, we may be compelled to resort to far more extensive measures of Government aid and relief later on.

If we do not extend credit, European countries must maintain a balance between their exports and imports. This they can only do by exporting as much as possible and restricting their imports by embargo or other means. If we do not extend the means by which they may buy, European countries will have to impose restrictions on what we may wish to sell them in order to maintain their trade balance and therefore their exchange rates. By aiding American merchants to sell to Europe we quicken the restoration of European trade and industry and restore stability to the international economic and financial situation. Our responsibility to favor the continuance of the War Finance Corporation during the brief emergency is a responsibility not only to American labor, that it may be employed, not only to the American manufacturer that he may keep his plant going, but also a responsibility to the nations of Europe that they may the sooner restore normal conditions in industry and in finance.

Mr. President, I think the really meritorious provision of this measure is that relating to the War Finance Corporation. I commend it to Senators, for I am certain, if it remains in the measure, it will contribute much toward readjusting the present difficult situation in our European business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator can probably give me the information I desire. As I understand, in section 9 of this bill the War Finance Corporation is authorized to make advances to the amount of a billion dollars?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where does it get that billion dollars?

Mr. CALDER. They are allowed to use one billion of the $3,500,000,000 which was placed at the disposal of the War Finance Corporation during the last session of Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator know how much of that they have already used?

Mr. CALDER. I have not the figures before me, but not very much; I think, in the neighborhood of $400,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So that this billion dollars will not exhaust their capital?

Mr. CALDER. No; they will still have over $2,000,000,000 to draw from if there is necessity for it and Congress gives the authority to use it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I remember now about that provision. It had escaped me, and I was wondering where the billion dollars would come from. I remember now, however, that we authorized them to issue notes or bonds or something of that sort. We gave them a very large capital.

Mr. CALDER. I feel certain, Mr. President, that a careful examination of this particular provision of the measure will commend it to Senators, and I trust that it will meet with the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have an amendment to propose to the bill, and, while I shall discuss the bill briefly, I will ask to have the amendment read before I begin the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information. It can be offered later, as there is at present a pending amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is there a pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; there is an amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin can be read for information, and the Senator can offer it formally later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. After section 7 it is proposed to insert a new section to read as follows:

SEC. —. Every person who by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communication, influences, controls, or intimidates, or in like manner endeavors to influence, control, or intimidate another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Every officer of the United States who by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communication, influences, controls, or intimidates, or endeavors to influence, control, or intimidate another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $2,000 or more than $10,000, or by imprisonment of not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

If two or more persons conspire by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communication, to influence, control, or intimidate, or in like manner endeavor to influence, control, or intimidate, another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, each be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not less than six months nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator from Wisconsin any objection to voting now on the amendment I have proposed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I have not.

Mr. KENYON. I ask, then, for a vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRONNA. May we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of page 14, as follows:

SEC. 11. That the portrait or vignette placed upon any notes or bonds or certificates of indebtedness issued under this act shall be that of Theodore Roosevelt, a former President of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin has yielded for the purpose of a vote on this amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was requested to do so.

Mr. KENYON. If it is going to provoke discussion, I do not want to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I supposed we were ready for a vote upon the amendment; but if there is going to be any debate upon it, I prefer to proceed now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am willing to have a vote.

Mr. KENYON. I will not ask for a vote at this time, then. The Senator from Wisconsin can make his remarks upon this amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to a vote.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If a vote can be had without debate, I will yield for that purpose. I should prefer to submit the remarks that I have to make upon the bill itself. If there is to be further discussion, however, I prefer to deliver my remarks at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island

[Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Montana to my colleague, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay." I wish to say, however, that but for the fact that amendment of the bill would jeopardize the bill I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Penrose	Sutherland
France	Knox	Reed	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Sherman	Warren
Hale	Moses	Smoot	Weeks
Harding	New	Spencer

NAYS—37.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Simmons
Bankhead	Kendrick	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	King	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kirby	Pollock	Thompson
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Trammell
Gay	Lewis	Ransdell	Williams
Gerry	McKellar	Robinson	Wolcott
Gore	Martin, Ky.	Saulsbury
Henderson	Myers	Shafroth
Hitchcock	Nugent	Sheppard

NOT VOTING—36.

Baird	Goff	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Colt	Hollis	Nelson	Thomas
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	Kellogg	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fall	Lodge	Shields	Walsh
Fernald	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Watson

So Mr. KENYON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time, he said:

Mr. President, I have not the attention of many Senators here, but it is just barely possible that I am urging a question that may become a pretty large one before long.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin are very interesting and important. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	King	New
Beckham	Harding	La Follette	Norris
Chamberlain	Henderson	Lenroot	Nugent
Cummins	Hitchcock	Lewis	Overman
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	McKellar	Owen
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Penrose
Gerry	Kendrick	Myers	Pittman
Ransdell	Sherman	Sutherland	Warren
Robinson	Simmons	Swanson	Weeks
Saulsbury	Smoot	Trammell	Williams
Sheppard	Sterling	Vardaman	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. FRANCE, Mr. GORE, Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky, Mr. POLLOCK, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. REED, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. THOMPSON entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague, the Senator from Virgina [Mr. MARTIN], is detained from the Senate on account of sickness.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed his speech at 1.30 a. m., Sunday, March 2.

Mr. PENROSE (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., Sunday, March 2). If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit an interruption, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. [Putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us have a division.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. WOLCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Not being able to obtain a transfer of my pair I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. He has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KEL-

LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—5.

France	La Follette	Penrose	Sherman
Gronna

NAYS—38.

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Smoot
Beckham	Kendrick	Pollock	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Thompson
Gay	Lewis	Reed	Trammell
Gerry	McKellar	Robinson	Vardaman
Gore	Norris	Shafroth	Weeks
Henderson	Nugent	Sheppard	Williams
Hitchcock	Overman	Simmons
Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—53.

Ashurst	Hale	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Mich.
Baird	Harding	Martin, Va.	Sterling
Borah	Hardwick	Moses	Sutherland
Brandegee	Hollis	Myers	Thomas
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Townsend
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Underwood
Culberson	Kellogg	Page	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kirby	Phelan	Walsh
Curtis	Knox	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	Lenroot	Saulsbury	Watson
Fall	Lodge	Shields	Wolcott
Fernald	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Goff	McNary	Smith, Md.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been disclosed, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Pollock	Swanson
Fletcher	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
France	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Gay	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman
Gerry	McKellar	Robinson	Weeks
Gore	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Williams
Gronna	Norris	Sheppard
Henderson	Nugent	Simmons
Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. WOLCOTT answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to arrest the Senators who are in the cloak room and compel them to come in here and answer to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KENYON. I move to amend the motion by including all Senators in the city.

Mr. RANSDELL. I second the motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the rules there is a certain motion that can be made, and I think the Senator from Oklahoma ought to make the usual motion first.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think that Senators have any right to go in the cloakroom and break a quorum for the purpose of preventing the Senate from functioning.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not change the rules of the body. I do not care how long the request for the attendance of absent Senators remains in force, but I believe the usual motion should be made first.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think we ought to proceed in the ordinary course.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, too.

Mr. SIMMONS. The first motion is that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators, and I make that motion.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator if the Sergeant at Arms can not be instructed to compel their attendance?

Mr. SIMMONS. The motion I have made is the first one in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to record my opinion that Senators around this floor ought to be counted.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma want to be counted?

Mr. OWEN. I want to express the opinion for the RECORD that Senators have no right to sit in this Chamber and refuse to answer to their names, thus breaking a quorum and preventing the Senate from functioning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state who are the Senators to whom he refers?

Mr. OWEN. I will if I may have the last roll call. [A pause.] I see that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is here, and he has not answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the name of the Senator from Illinois.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. SHERMAN, who answered to his name when called.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Illinois states that he answered in the first place.

Mr. KENYON. Was the Senator from Illinois recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The record is now being examined.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the record will be kept unhindered and accurate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The record shows that the Senator from Illinois had not answered.

Mr. PENROSE. After my motion to adjourn was so ruthlessly turned down by the Chair, when I had the votes in favor of it, I have lost a little confidence in the desk.

Mr. SIMMONS (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.). I desire to inquire if a quorum is in attendance?

The PRESIDING OFFICER.. It is not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to use all necessary means to compel the attendance of absent Senators, excepting those away on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

At 5 o'clock a. m. Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 5.20 a. m.). The Secretary will read the partial report of the Sergeant at Arms.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
SERGEANT AT ARMS,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1919.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

In obedience to the order of the Senate received by me at 4.55 a. m. directing that I direct the attendance of absent Senators, I have the honor to report that I have requested the attendance of Senators CALDER, WALSH, and THOMAS. Senator CALDER reports personally that he is sick and unable to come. Senator WALSH reports that he is unable to come. Senator THOMAS reports that he is not well and can not come. Senators CUMMINS, MYERS, and HOKE SMITH are coming immediately. The order is being further executed.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES P. HIGGINS,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

At 5.35 a. m. Mr. SMITH of Arizona entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

At 5.40 a. m. Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 5.45 a. m.). The Secretary will read a further report from the Sergeant at Arms.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
SERGEANT AT ARMS,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1919.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In obedience to the order heretofore received, I have the honor to further report that I requested the immediate attendance of Senator SMITH of Arizona, who responded and said that he would come at once. Senator PAGE stated that he would come at once. Senator MOSES stated that he would come at once.

I have been unable to locate the following Senators by telephone, as I can not get any response from their residences: Senators ASHURST, BAIRD, BORAH, BRANDEGEE, CURTIS, DILLINGHAM, FERNALD, FRELINGHUYSEN, HARDING, JOHNSON of California, KNOX, LENROOT, MCNARY, and WADSWORTH.

The order is being further executed.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES P. HIGGINS,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed, if he can not secure the attendance of these absent Senators by telephoning, to send messengers in automobiles for the purpose of communicating with them personally and bringing them to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that this authority exists under the order already given.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything reflecting upon the Sergeant at Arms. I have no doubt he is doing what he can; but I think he ought not to rely upon telephoning Senators, but that he ought to send messengers to their houses if they do not answer the telephone. It does not accomplish any purpose to telephone a Senator when no answer is received. I think it is the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to do more than that. A great number of Senators are here, inconvenienced by the failure of absent Senators to come into the Chamber, and I think the Sergeant at Arms ought to employ some other agency than the telephone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will communicate the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina to the Sergeant at Arms.

At 5.55 a. m. Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. PAGE, and Mr. MYERS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that further proceedings under the order to the Sergeant at Arms, directing him to require the attendance of Senators, be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President there are some facts respecting this bill which I feel it my duty to state to the Senate and to the country. We all understand, of course, that certain Senators are going to vote for the bill, regardless of its bad provisions and precedents, but it is none the less the duty of the Members of the Senate to discuss it so that the people of the country may know, at least, something of the iniquities of the measure.

The first section of this bill provides for issuing $7,000,000,000 of the obligations of the Government and selling these by means of a "drive" within the next few weeks or months. Then this bill raises the limit on the amount of certificates of indebtedness that may be issued and outstanding at any one time from $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000. As there is now said to be outstanding about four billion dollars of these Treasury certificates, the effect of the bill is to allow $6,000,000,000 additional in Treasury certificates. The existing law also provides for the issuance of something over $5,000,000,000 of bonds by the Government, so that without the bill at all the Treasury can issue some four or five billion dollars in Treasury certificates and over five billion dollars in bonds.

Of course, it does not make any difference whether you call these obligations bonds, notes, certificates, or anything else, once they are issued and outstanding they are the obligations of the Government and must be paid by the people. So that the net result if this bill becomes a law will be that the Secretary of the Treasury can issue $7,000,000,000 of what the bill designates as notes of the United States, over $5,000,000,000 Treasury certificates, and something over $5,000,000,000 of bonds under an existing law. This bill also allows the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the dates of maturity for the $7,000,000,000 of notes he may issue within the maximum period of five years and minimum period of one year. It leaves the entire matter of rate of interest and terms of payment to him, as well as permitting him to exempt them in whole or in part from all taxation; and more than that it allows him to relieve holders of the liberty bonds of previous issues from taxation in proportion as they may subscribe to this new issue of Treasury notes.

IS CONGRESS A MERE DUMMY?

Now, a bare statement of these facts respecting this bill is sufficient to show that the Congress, if it accepts this bill, is a mere dummy in the whole proceeding.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator; but I would a good deal rather that any Senator who has any suggestions to make as to my argument shall make them after I have concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know, Mr. President, but I prefer to proceed without interruption at present.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If I may have the privilege, Mr. President, I would be glad to withdraw my interruption.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is unnecessary. You have not made any yet that I have recognized.

Nine times out of ten when a Senator is interrupted an examination of the RECORD will show that his response is, "If the Senator will be patient he will find that a little later I shall take up that subject in the course of my arguments." Interruptions of carefully prepared arguments, I venture to say, Mr. President, result from an impulse upon the part of other Senators to anticipate the argument that is to be made.

Mr. PENROSE. It leads to delay.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does in this case lead somewhat to delay. If I do not, in the course of my discussion of this bill, meet the point which the Senator from New Mexico has in mind in a satisfactory way, I shall be grateful to him when I have concluded if he will raise the point at that time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I shall be very glad to comply with the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I said, Mr. President, a bare statement of these facts respecting the bill is sufficient to show that the Congress, if it accepts the bill, is a mere dummy in the whole proceeding. The Congress of the United States, and the Congress alone, has power, and I quote the language of the Constitution, "to borrow money on the credit of the United States." Can it truthfully be said in any right sense that Congress is borrowing this money? To borrow money means to make a bargain. It means fixing the terms of an agreement. No one can pretend that the Congress of the United States is to do that in this bill or that it is laying down the terms of a proposition which will be accepted and become a mutually binding obligation when a person subscribes for some portion of these $7,000,000,000 worth of notes.

I do not pretend to say, Mr. President, anything about what the courts may decide on this subject. I have not gone into that, but it is pretty clear to my mind that by this legislation the Congress is shirking the duty that the Constitution lays upon it, or rather has been coerced by somebody into abrogating its functions and turning over its constitutional powers to the Executive branch of the Government.

PRESSURE ON CONGRESS.

In this connection the following testimony, appearing at page 67 of the hearings on this bill held before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, is illuminating.

Mr. TREADWAY, member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, is questioning the representative of the Treasury Department when the bill was pending before the Committee on Ways and Means. He said:

Of course, the committee has taken no action; naturally could not. But I think there is no secret at all that the sentiment of the membership of the House, irrespective of the membership of the committee, which has not been tested out by a vote, is absolutely against this authorization asked for.

Mr. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, replied:

Is that so?

Mr. TREADWAY. I don't think there is any question about that. I just wanted to follow out the idea whether the department would be more explicit to us if that were so.

Mr. GARNER, member of the Committee on Ways and Means, then said:

Suppose this committee should determine by a practically unanimous vote that they were unwilling to give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to fix the rate of interest or to exempt bonds; now, you come to the practical question: If we felt that way, are we to go on and pass no bond issue and trust it to a future Congress? Which is the best thing to do? I will say, frankly, I have heard a great deal of discussion among the members of this committee and among other Members of the House—naturally the Members get together in the cloakroom and other places and discuss these matters—and there has got to be a powerful work done and pressure brought to bear or something done to get Congress to give the authority asked for in this bill. So we might as well come to the practical question: Are you willing now to say or are you willing to wait for such authority as Congress will give you on the eve of your liberty loan?

Mr. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, replying to this interrogatory propounded to him, said:

I have no authority, of course, to answer that question except to repeat what the Secretary said this morning.

Of course, it is understood that Mr. Leffingwell is the representative of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. TREADWAY a distinguished member of the minority of the committee, and Mr. GARNER is one of the leading members of the majority of the committee.

It appears that the "powerful work" referred to by Mr. GARNER has been done, and the necessary "pressure" has been brought to bear upon Congress to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the authority referred to in the bill.

What "powerful work" and what "pressure" has been brought to bear? Certainly it was something entirely foreign to the merits of the bill, for I undertake to say that no finance bill in the history of the United States was ever so little discussed or considered as this one. It was regularly received by the Finance Committee February 26, and, instead of being subjected to extended discussion and scrutiny by the committee as other bond bills were, it was reported to the Senate February 28.

When you stop to consider that our Civil War debt at its highest point never exceeded one-third of this $7,000,000,000 of notes or bonds proposed to be issued in this bill, you get some idea of the magnitude of the transaction which is being put through here at this hour of 1.15 a. m. March 2, Sunday morning.

And when you consider that never in all the history of the Government of the United States have any such powers been conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury as this bill proposes—such as fixing interest rates and exempting from taxation not only securities issued under this bill but others already issued—you get some idea of the radical departure which this bill proposes to make from all precedent, and, as I believe, from all lawful authority.

At this point Mr. PENROSE raised the point of no quorum, and the roll was called.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have said that under the Constitution the power to borrow money rests solely with the Congress, and that it is this power that the bill proposes to turn over to the officials of the Treasury. The Constitution also vests in Congress the "power to lay and collect taxes." But it would be hard to say how the taxing power could be more plainly exercised than by determining, as this bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury power to determine, what kind of bonds, notes, or other securities the tax shall be imposed on and what ones shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. President, I venture to say that the suggestion that I make in these two sentences is worthy of the consideration of the lawyers in this body. If this bill shall be passed, if this departure from all precedent—and, I believe, from the Constitution—shall be tolerated, it will be only a short time before Congress will not be consulted at all about borrowing money on the credit of the Government, except, possibly, it will be required to pass a bill to provide simply that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to raise by loans anywhere from $100 to $100,000,000,000, upon such conditions as he may prescribe—as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not as the Congress may prescribe. There should be some line of demarkation between the constitutional powers with which Congress is invested with respect to borrowing money and what we can turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury. In reality such a bill would find more of a precedent and more of justification in the principles of the present bill than the present bill finds in any other bill ever passed by the Congress of the United States.

To what a pitiful status has the Congress of the United States been reduced in the last few months! Officials of the executive departments come before the committees of Congress and tell them how much money they desire. The committees of the Congress say all right and report that the money should be appropriated. Then another committee of the Congress says to the Secretary of the Treasury, "Go ahead and raise the money according to your own judgment." Sometimes the estimates of the different departments concerning their expenditures are right, and then again it appears they are wrong. The Secretary of War forgot a little item of $750,000,000 on one of his estimates the other day. Then when he got back to his office he felt he had forgotten something and he sent over to the committee and said that he wanted that much more money. He might just as well have telephoned. He would have gotten it just the same.

WRONG FINANCIAL POLICY OF ADMINISTRATION.

It may be remembered by some that when the question of financing this war first came up and as each successive bill has come before the Senate I have urged the adoption of a policy which would raise as much of the expenses of the war as possible by taxation and as little as possible by selling bonds. I am not going to take the time of the Senate at this hour to repeat the arguments I used on those occasions to support my contentions. And it is no satisfaction to me to point out to-day that much of the evil is already appearing which I prophesied would quickly follow the wrong policy of financing this war, which was adopted at the beginning.

Instead of raising as much money by taxation as possible and as little by borrowing as was strictly necessary, the administration adopted the very opposite policy. It has raised as little by taxation as possible and as much by bond sales as could be extracted from the people. This policy was especially vicious in view of the war profits which should have been almost wholly taken to pay the costs of the war and which wholly disappear with the ending of the war.

Speaking in the Senate on the 21st of August, 1917, I said:

No one knows what the future holds for us. The war may end suddenly, as suddenly as it began. Who knows? The whole world was startled with the war declarations that followed fast one upon the other. Possibly the breakdown of this war may come as suddenly as its beginning. Shall it find us with a system of war financing fastened upon us where taxation bears to bond issue a ratio of 1 to 5? It will if you follow the majority members of this committee, and if the war should cease within the next year you would have then allowed the great mass of these war profits to escape taxation. They will have pocketed their war profits, but the people will find themselves saddled with a nine billion debt in the form of war bonds which will already have been issued.

I have heard it suggested, Mr. President, that sometimes in my zeal for a cause in which I am deeply interested I do not always preserve that moderation and conservatism which is so desirable in one charged with the duty of lawmaking. I feel sure I have a most conservative and judicial attitude of mind upon public questions, and certainly it must be admitted in this particular case I was extremely conservative. The war did stop almost within the year, but our bonded debt so far from being nine billion, was seventeen billion, while the whole debt of the United States on January 31, 1919, was $23,267,000,000.

I quote from the testimony of Mr. Leffingwell before the Ways and Means Committee:

The debt assumed by the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means shows that the whole debt of the United States on January 31 (1919) was $23,267,000,000 (p. 10).

Let us go one step further with Mr. Leffingwell's testimony. When he came before the Senate Committee on Finance a few days ago to explain this bill to us he testified:

The total cash expenditure from April 6 to January 31 was approximately $26,500,000,000, and the total receipts of the Government during the same period, except other than from borrowed money, were $6,000,000,000, showing that, although we had contemplated, in a general way, the financing of the Government one-third by taxes and two-thirds by loan, we were actually during the period of the war, in receipts from taxes and in interest from foreign loans made by us and from miscellaneous sources of an income, a good deal less than a quarter of the amount of our expenditures during that period.

While Mr. Leffingwell refers, in a general way, to the receipts of the Government from all sources as a good deal less than a quarter of the amount of its expenditures, an actual calculation shows that the receipts were 22 and a fraction per cent of the expenditures. You will note, also, that the receipts include receipts from all sources, not merely the receipts from taxes levied for war purposes.

FALSE CLAIM OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

Now, sir, if there was one thing to which this administration was pledged concerning the financing of this war it was that not more than two-thirds of the expenses entailed should be raised by borrowing. Even that was an indefensibly low proportion. In an argument here in the Senate on the 21st of August, 1917, I went to some pains to review the history of the methods by which the recent great wars of history had been financed. I pointed out how the policy of excessive borrowings during the early days of the Civil War had almost wrecked the cause of the North, and how this policy was changed in 1863, and that from that time forward more than one-third of all expenditures were derived from taxation. I pointed out that 50 per cent of the cost of our war with Spain was met by taxation; that Great Britain met more than 47 per cent of the expenses of her Napoleonic wars by taxation; that in the Crimean War she raised 52 per cent of her war expenses by taxation; and that in the present war, with only a fraction of our wealth and population and with more vast expenses, she was raising far more in proportion by taxes than we were.

So it was that the administration met this argument and the other arguments showing the folly and wickedness of allowing war profits to escape so lightly from taxation, while forcing bond issue after bond issue upon the people of the country—by asserting that it would raise one-third of the war costs by taxation as it went along. What the administration actually did in this matter is given by the figures before quoted from the testimony of Mr. Leffingwell.

The whole matter is covered so fully from the tables which appear in the hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means on this measure that I wish to insert them as an appendix to my remarks. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert the tables in the RECORD without detaining the Senate to read them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The tables speak for themselves. They show that the claim which the administration has made that it would raise one-third of the cost of this war by taxation is absolutely incorrect. Even when the last finance bill was before the Congress a few months ago, you will remember that it originally carried taxes of about $8,000,000,000; and upon the cessation of hostilities the Secretary of the Treasury came before the Committee on Finance of the Senate, as well as before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and gave an estimate that the expenses for the fiscal year would not exceed $18,000,000,000, and, therefore, that the administration stood for reducing the amount to be raised by taxation to $6,000,000,000, keeping up the fiction of raising one-third of the expenses by taxes and two-thirds by bond issues. No pretense was made by the representative of the Treasury, in the brief hearings we had upon the present bill a few days ago, that eighteen billions would be sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government for the fiscal year. That claim had served its purpose. It had reduced taxation $2,000,000,000. It had let the profiteers escape to that extent; and the presence of this bond bill here to-day, with the amount that it proposes to raise by selling these Treasury notes, is the admission that the former estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, given us only a few months ago, is incorrect.

OUR WAR COSTS TO BE $35,000,000,000.

Mr. Leffingwell, when before the Finance Committee on the present bill, made no contention that the expenses would not be $20,000,000,000 instead of $18,000,000,000; and when the members of the committee pointed out to him reasons for believing that that estimate was too low he had no satisfactory answer.

In discussing the finance bill in the Senate, August 21, 1917, I said:

If this war shall last for another fiscal year, our expenditures will not be counted in the billions merely, but in tens of billions. We will have to reckon with an expenditure of probably thirty or forty billion dollars for the succeeding fiscal year if this war continues. Do you know what that means? That is a sixth of the total wealth of the United States. It is not improbable that the entire income of all the people of the country, estimated at $38,000,000,000, will not equal the money cost of the second year of this war.

Now, what is the fact? The war did not last through the second fiscal year nor through half of it; but Mr. Leffingwell, in his testimony a few days ago before the Senate Finance Committee, admitted that our war expenses up to the last of last month had been over $23,000,000,000, and that they would amount eventually to $35,000,000,000. Let me quote again from the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, Mr. Leffingwell, our indebtedness, including the amount that we have loaned to the allies, would be about $35,000,000,000?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. Senator, I want to save myself from making an estimate on that; but what I said was this, that we had $23,000,000,000 on January 31, and there is nothing in the situation which will lead me to believe that it will ever run above $35,000,000,000.

* * * * * * *

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. Taking into account the items which Senator LODGE and Senator PENROSE mentioned, and everything before us, it seems to me that $35,000,000,000 was an outside figure.

Here again it is perfectly clear, in the light of the facts as we know them, that it was possible to make a reasonably accurate estimate of the expenditures of the war for the fiscal year, and that the Secretary of the Treasury did not do it. In the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury furnished to the committee in the hearings on the finance bill in August, 1917, the estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1918 were $10,835,807,000. The figures given in the table hereinbefore quoted show that the actual expenditures for that fiscal year were about two billion in excess of the estimate. In the majority report of the Finance Committee on the revenue bill of December 6, 1918, it is said:

Because of the changed conditions resulting from the signing of the armistice Secretary McAdoo recommends that a tax levy of $6,000,000,000 is all that is now necessary or justifiable, and the changes recommended by this committee, it is estimated, will reduce the revenue to this amount.

Do you get that? "That a tax levy of $6,000,000,000 is all that is now necessary or justifiable." That is pretty strong language from the Secretary of the Treasury. He evidently wanted to get the revenue bill which we passed only a few weeks ago cut down from eight billions to six billions; and the committee said, in reporting that bill, that—

Because of the changed conditions resulting from the signing of the armistice Secretary McAdoo recommends that a tax levy of $6,000,000,000 is all that is now necessary or justifiable, and the changes recommended by this committee, it is estimated, will reduce the revenue to that amount.

As we have seen, this change was based upon estimated expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, of $18,000,000,000. This estimate, like the others, is now admitted to be wrong, and, like the others, errs in that it is too low by several billions of dollars. But it was used as a basis to relieve from taxation many billions of dollars of war profits and surplus incomes.

RECORD DOES NOT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I just told you that if you study these estimates furnished by the administration you will find that they err upon one side right along, and upon the side that furnishes a basis for cutting down taxation upon war profits, and works out finally for increasing the bonds that the people have to carry. Get away from that if you can.

Mr. President, I am not recalling these facts which are known to everyone on the Finance Committee because of any desire to criticize or condemn the judgment or official acts of the Secretary of the Treasury, or anyone else, because there is not any satisfaction in that after a thing of this kind is over with. But, sir, when the Secretary of the Treasury comes to the Congress to-day and asks for power over the finances of this country, over the fortunes—yes, the very lives—of the people of this country, greater than any man ever before exercised or thought of exercising, it is very pertinent to pause long enough at least to inquire how the office of the Secretary of the Treasury has been administered in the last two years.

Has the Treasury Department been administered during this war so wisely and on such sound principles and by such sane methods that the head of it can fairly come to Congress to-day and on the record which he has made ask the Congress to blindly trust him to exercise not only his own powers but the most important powers of Congress as well? Is the Congress prepared to surrender its most important powers solemnly committed to it by the Constitution and turn over the financial destiny of the people of this country to the head of one of the executive departments? However other Senators may answer to that question, my answer is no.

The administration, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is a mere instrument, has financed this war on a principle condemned by every great political economist of the world, and condemned by the experience of every nation which has ever conducted a great war. We have got to settle for it finally. The excessive amounts of the bonds issued, as compared with the amounts raised by taxation, for war purposes by this administration will go down in history as the most colossal folly and rankest injustice of which any administration has heretofore been guilty, so far as the history of this Government is concerned.

Mr. President, I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks, without taking the time of the Senate now to read it, an extract from a memorial presented to Congress when the subject of financing the war was first before this body, signed by 309 of the most distinguished professors of economics and physics, members of the faculties of 47 of the leading universities and colleges of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The taxation policy is practicable, because the current income of the people in any case must pay the war expenditures. The choice between bond issues and taxation is merely a choice whether the Government shall take income with a promise to repay those who furnish it or take income without such promise. The actual arms, munitions, and other equipment and supplies for use in the war, except to the small extent that they have been stored up in the past, must be produced now, during the war itself, not after the war, and, moreover, must be produced by our own people. The policy of borrowing within the country itself does not shift any part of the Nation's burden of war expenditures from the present to the future. All it does is to make possible a different distribution of the burden among individuals and social classes to permit repayment to certain persons who have contributed income during the war by other persons after the war. If the people can support the war at all, they can do it on a cash basis. Borrowing creates nothing. Except by borrowing abroad, which we can not do, we can get nothing which we do not ourselves produce. * * *

The taxation policy and no other will enable the country to escape the enormous evils of further inflation. The present high level of prices in Europe and America is primarily due to the war bonds and the paper money issued abroad. If the United States joins on a huge scale in this policy of borrowing, prices are bound to become far higher still.

Price inflation is harmful even in time of peace. During a war it is disastrous. It increases the cost of conducting the war. It postpones victory and thus adds to the war's toll of lives, as well as to its money expenditures. By every bond issue the Government enhances the price it must pay, and thus creates the need of more bonds. The policy works against itself.

Moreover, inflation of prices works injustice between different classes of society. The burden rests chiefly upon wage earners and salary receivers, whose pay never rises as fast as prices, and upon those who receive fixed or contractual incomes. The hardship which millions of our people are already suffering from the increased cost of living will be made manyfold greater if the Government issues billions of dollars of bonds to finance the war. * * *

The policy of taxation for war expenditures is demanded by justice. Apart from the injustice arising from price inflation, the policy of paying for the war by bond issues gives property a preference over life; it deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen. The question of taxation versus bonds is not merely one of economics; it is one of morals, of right against wrong. * * *

The citizen who contributes even his entire income, beyond what is necessary to subsistence itself, does less than the citizen who contributes himself to the Nation. * * *

If conscription of men is just and right, conscription of income is the more so.

RESULT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As a result of this policy of the administration the entire cost of this war, principal and interest, with the exception of the comparatively small amounts collected from surplus wealth and war profits under laws already passed, will have to be borne by the masses of the people of this country who have little or no wealth. The taxes which can be collected from wealth under peace-time conditions will be promptly shifted to the consumers by the increased prices of the things they eat, wear, and use, and will also be shifted to labor by the decreased wages it receives. This has all been made so plain in the writings of political economists and has been demonstrated so completely over and over again in the case of other great war debts that it seems that no one who wishes to know the truth could be lead into error.

The "errors" of the department in estimating the expenses of the war, to which I have called attention, conveniently turned up about the time a tax bill was under consideration and have been used as a means for reducing taxes upon wealth and war profits, thus aggravating the evils inseparable from the wrong principle adopted by the administration.

The result has been that additional bond issues far exceeding any estimates given to the people have been called for. This bond bill is merely an illustration of the principle. If it becomes a law the Treasury Department will be clothed with power to immediately issue securities of the United States in three times the amount that the department's estimates show, or even pretend, are needed at this time. Why this demand for this unlimited and uncontrolled power of the Treasury Department to mortgage the future of the people of this country indefinitely? Is it expected that within a few months the administration will have to tell the people that its Treasury Department has made another "error" in estimates, and that they must, therefore, buy still more billions and billions of bonds, and that the administration desires to have the whole matter in its own hands and need not apply to Congress at all?

REASONS GIVEN BY THE ADMINISTRATION FOR ITS DEMAND.

But, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has given a reason why the administration demands this unlimited power. The reason is as remarkable as the demand. It is this: The Secretary of the Treasury asserts that he desires to keep the people in the dark concerning the character of the securities they are going to be required by the Government to buy until the "drive" is ready to start with its force of 2,000,000 bold sellers and the other agencies with which we have grown familiar for forcing the people to buy these bonds.

I do not ask you to take my construction of the language for a statement so extraordinary. Mr. Leffingwell, an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and a man who was put forth by the Treasury Department, both before the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee, to explain and argue for this bill, in his testimony before the Senate committee said—and I quote from page 16 of those hearings:

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. It is just because we do not believe that it would be advisable to fix the interest rate at this time, to give the people a definite answer to the question, that we have asked authority to determine it. My view is this: We can not now safely say at what rate the Government can borrow the money; that is, before the life of this Congress terminates. If you fix a rate which we may hope would be sufficient in April, the markets would adjust themselves to that rate; the attraction would be discounted; the prices of liberty bonds and other securities would all reflect the decision; and by the time the drive begins, almost two months from to-day, as the bankers say, the bloom will be off the issue and you will not be able to sell a note upon terms which, if you had left the question open to the last minute, would seem at that time very attractive. We are very anxious that you should not ask us to make an estimate of the interest rate for that reason.

There you have the Treasury explanation and its only explanation. If you let the people know a little while in advance something about the securities they are going to be required to buy, it will not seem so attractive. But if you can spring it on them suddenly before they have time to think you can persuade them into buying. This is the argument: "The bloom will be off the issue," Mr. Leffingwell says. He is very anxious to sell the people the bonds, bloom and all. Evidently the entire office of the Secretary of the Treasury is strong on bloom, for the Secretary himself, testifying before the House Committee on Ways and Means—and I quote from page 21 of those hearings—says:

Secretary GLASS—

I am quoting now from the Secretary of the Treasury—

I frankly realize, quite as forcibly as you gentlemen, that it is an extraordinary request; that it is unusual in this country at least; but we are confronted by an extraordinary situation. As pointed out in my statement to the committee heretofore, only a few days have elapsed between the action taken by the Congress in fixing the terms of a liberty loan and the actual projection of the drive. So that almost instantly after the terms had been fixed the drive was projected. Now, two months will have elapsed between the time Congress might act and the time we have in mind for the next liberty-loan drive and in that two months the country will have discussed in the minutest way every feature of the proposed loan; every possible objection to it, rational or irrational, will have been directed against it; and what the experienced trained bond experts call the bloom of the issue will have faded away and an insuperable situation will have presented itself. I may say to the committee that I have been out in the country somewhat as a preliminary to the next bond issue, to feel the public pulse and to get the atmosphere of the banking and bond investing circles, and we are going to have vastly more difficulty in floating the next loan than we have ever had.

The spirit that pervaded the country while the guns were firing, the delirium of war, has passed away and there is distinctively a reactionary feeling. And on all sides the Secretary of the Treasury is met with the suggestion and advice that the next liberty loan must be floated on a cold-blooded business basis. I am unwilling to admit that; I do not believe it.

You will see that the Secretary of the Treasury is even more frank than his assistant, Mr. Leffingwell. The Secretary not only wants the bloom on the peach—lest they may discover it is a lemon—but he wants something as a substitute for "the delirium of war."

Oh, Mr. President, I wish that all the people of this country could read this testimony and know what was being prepared for them down here in Washington by the men sworn to protect their interests. I wish they could understand the scheme by which they are to be denied all chance of acting deliberately in this great matter of paying out their savings to buy the securities of their Government. I wonder if the President or the Secretary of the Treasury ever stopped to think how grave, how serious a matter it is to millions of the people whom they are going to ask to buy these bonds when they go to the savings bank or other depository and take out a hundred or fifty or twenty dollars in order to make an investment with it. A hundred dollars in the case of many millions of them represents the savings of an entire year. It represents self-denial. It represents denial to the wife and to little children of the pleasures and the little comforts which would have made life more happy. But the desire to provide for the future and for old age and its helplessness, and possibly for sickness, has been stronger than anything else, and so the money has been saved. I know something of the care and consideration, of the family counsel, of the anxious thought that attends purchases made under these circumstances. It is this chance to counsel together, to deliberate, to plan with respect to their savings that the Secretary of the Treasury says must not be permitted when a liberty bond, sold probably on the installment plan, is presented to these people by the glib-tongued bond seller.

Mr. President, in most of the States they have what are called blue-sky laws, laws against foisting on the people securities which are not what the purchaser is cleverly led to believe they are. I say, Mr. President, it is morally just as wrong to sell to a poor man a good security which he can not possibly afford to keep, and will be compelled to sell at a sacrifice, as it is to sell a poor security to a man who can afford to buy. What might be only a moral wrong in an individual in such a transaction becomes the more reprehensible when the Government not only becomes a party to it, but devises and puts through the transaction.

The Treasury Department, sir, must know, as it seems to me, that what it is planning to do, if the reasons which it has given for its action are its true reasons, is, in effect, little less than fraud—bad faith—for it knows that the people to whom it will sell the bonds in the "delirium" that the Secretary talked about will soon be forced to sell those same bonds at a great sacrifice to those who can afford to buy them.

WILL BE FORCED TO SELL TO THE RICH.

Note this testimony taken before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. I quote from page 69 of these hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. I am going to ask you a practical question. I see on January 31, 4½ per cent bonds net were quoted at 95.60. What are they worth to-day? It is the 4½ bonds of 1932 and 1947, first liberty loan converted.

Mr. MEYER. I think they are about 94½ now.

The CHAIRMAN. 94½ to-day?

Mr. MEYER. All of the bonds have gone down.

The CHAIRMAN. Here is the fourth liberty bonds of 4¼ per cent, at 95.4—what is that worth to-day?

Mr. MEYER. They are just a trifle under 94. They have been as low as 93.80.

The CHAIRMAN. Haven't you an opinion that the reason the bonds have fallen right here lately since January 31 is that an effort is being made on the part of somebody to manipulate the market and drive them down so as to get a higher rate on these future loans and also with the hope that if we have a higher rate on the future loans Congress will, at some time, raise the rates on the bonds now outstanding?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. No; I haven't the slightest notion of it. I think the selling is from two sources. Most of it comes from the small bondholders, I am sorry to say—from people who are out of employment, from people who wanted to buy Christmas presents. They are coming in barrels and boxes and cases from the people of small means who bought them as a matter of patriotic duty. Some of them are out of employment, some are on reduced wages, some of them have been gulled by the sellers of mining stocks, oil stocks, and different kinds of stocks, people who wanted to sell them silk shirts, Christmas presents, jewelry. The war is over, the patriotic duty to hold their bonds no longer impresses them with full force, and much of the selling, I should say, is coming from that sort of people.

Other selling comes from great corporations which are not plentifully provided with cash and which have been keeping their shops open and not selling the things they have for sale.

In the face of that testimony, Mr. President, in the face of that awful confession—for that is what it amounts to—the Treasury Department is deliberately planning to do the same thing over again. The people of small means, the people out of work, are selling their liberty bonds, and I quote the exact words of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, "They are coming in barrels and boxes and cases." Not only that, but he tells why they bought the bonds. He says, "They bought as a matter of patriotic duty." They could not afford to buy them. As a consequence they had to sell and sell at a loss of from $5 to $6 on every $100 bond. Most of the purchases of these bonds, I suppose, were made on the installment plan. It was not humanly possible for them to keep their bonds. A fair and benevolent Government instead of trying to force bonds upon these people should have warned them against purchasing, because of the losses they knew would follow. They should have taken the other course by imposing a tax upon war profits that would have taken, if necessary, in order to furnish the Government with the amount of money required to carry on the war, the last dollar of the war profits of the profiteers.

Then, of course, there is this fact which must always be reckoned with: These bonds, by their provisions exempting them from taxation, are an attractive investment to the rich and those who have large income taxes to pay, while the poor man, even if he has a little money to invest, does not benefit by these tax-exempt features, and could much more profitably buy some other good securities with a much higher rate of interest.

If the Secretary of the Treasury is right in his opinion that he can only put over this bond issue by keeping the public in ignorance of the character of the bonds so long as possible, what a confession of failure it is of the administration's policy of financing the war. "The delirium of war" is over, he says. Therefore he must work up some other "delirium" to take its place. The poor have bought bonds beyond their means to carry or to pay for, and now Mr. Leffingwell says that they are selling their bonds by the barrel. What does the statesmanship of the administration offer as a solution of a most serious situation? The administration is demanding that the Congress shall not only renounce its constitutional duty to regulate bond sales but that it shall have no sufficient opportunity even to consider this bill. What plan, then, does the administration submit as its justification for demanding that Congress shall abrogate its constitutional power and shirk its constitutional duty? Absolutely nothing, except that it is proposed simply to repeat the performance of forcing bonds upon people by the old methods and by the new ones which the Secretary of the Treasury has described.

The facts with respect to the other bond sales have been described. They will be infinitely worse now, for the Treasury Department has no hesitation in saying that the bonds which were sold before are being resold now at great loss. Surely the Treasury Department must see now in all its enormity the injustice of forcing these bonds upon the people of small means in the "delirium" of the war or any other delirium, or by any trick or device whatsoever, for it has the complete evidence that those bonds will soon be sold to the wealthy at greatly reduced prices.

This bill, by the unlimited authority which it gives to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these bonds freed from taxation, puts it within the power of this one man to transfer from the pockets of the poor to those of the rich hundreds of millions of dollars by so issuing these bonds as to make it practically certain that the poor man, if he buys them, will be unable to keep them.

What does it mean to a man who has no income beyond the necessities of life, or even a few dollars more, whether these bonds are free from taxation or not? But how alluring to the rich are the tax-exemption features of these bonds. To the man whose income runs into thousands and tens of thousands and millions of dollars, this feature of the bonds makes them very valuable. But to the great majority, to the 90 per cent of the people against whom this "drive" is to be directed, the tax-exempt feature means nothing. And even if they were able to pay for their bonds they can not afford to hold them, while those who buy and only partly pay for them must take what they can get.

INDUSTRIAL SITUATION OF THE COUNTRY.

Prof. E. A. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, in a book published in May, 1918, has drawn for us a moderate but clear and brief statement of industrial conditions in this country, which it would be well for the Secretary of the Treasury and officials of this administration generally to study. Prof. Ross's book is entitled "Russia in Upheaval." Prof. Ross has been for many years a professor of sociology at the University of Wisconsin, and is the author of a number of standard works dealing with sociology and with history.

Let me say that Prof. King just before his death, which occurred a few years ago, published a work on the distribution of wealth. Prof. King was recognized among the statisticians and students of sociology and of the economists in this country as a very eminent man in his particular field. He was a member of the faculty of the Wisconsin University when he died.

Prof. Ross said—I quote from this work, beginning at page 345:

> Let it not be supposed that the United States, with its qualified political democracy, will prove immune to anticapitalist agitation. The fact is our society is one of the most vulnerable, because we have clung so long to the law and politics of an outworn individualism that the resulting distribution of wealth and of income would be grotesque were it not so tragic. According to the investigations of Prof. King, a statistician of unquestioned skill and impartiality, 65 per cent of our people are poor; that is, they have little or no property, except their clothes and some cheap furniture, and their average annual income is less than $200 per capita.

That is—let me emphasize that—65 per cent of the people of the United States have nothing but their clothing and some cheap furniture, and their average annual income is less than $200 a year per capita.

> Thirty-three per cent of our people compose the middle class, in which each man leaves at death from one to forty thousand dollars' worth of property. The remaining 2 per cent comprise the rich and very rich, who own almost one and one-half times as much as the other 98 per cent together.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. KENYON. The figures the Senator quotes from Prof. King are so startling that I should like to ask the Senator a question. Did the Senator say that, according to Prof. King, 65 per cent of our people have an income of less than $200 per year?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Per capita.

Mr. KENYON. That is, a man with a family of four would figure each one in the income?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, I submitted as a part of the minority report in 1917 on the revenue bill fixing war profits taxes these very figures quoted from Prof. King, and I discussed them on this floor. I cited them over and over again, and tried to make them as impressive as possible. We are asleep; we treat as a joke the poverty of 65 per cent of the people of this country. Senators jibe and sneer and scoff and grin at the recital of these figures here to-night. You may, by pursuing that course long enough, invite into the Senate Chamber sometime or other a mob.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, my question was not intended as a jibe or a sneer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I understand.

Mr. KENYON. I am deeply interested in that question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad the Senator asked it. I want to impress the fact upon the mind of the Senate, and I will repeat it—I wish I had a full Senate to appeal to—65 per cent of the people of this country have absolutely nothing, as shown by the best investigators, but their clothing, a little cheap furniture, and a scanty income of $200 a year per capita.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator give the date when that computation was made?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator can send to the library for the publication. The statement was made by Prof. King, who died two years ago, as I remember, and this book was published just before his death. Prof. Ross's book, in which he quotes these figures of Prof. King and approves them, was issued a few months ago. Prof. Ross is one of the leading thinkers and investigators of the country; there is not a magazine published in America that would not pay the highest price for an article by Prof. Ross. Economists all over the country know the value of Prof. King's works.

WAR FINANCED SO AS TO IMPOSE ADDED BURDENS ON THE POOR.

Mr. President, that is the great sociological fact which should be reckoned with in determining how this war was to be financed. I want stability in this Government; I want a Government of law and order; but I will restrain the temptation to digress. Instead of adopting a system which has added many billions to the already collosal fortunes of the 2 per cent and made life still harder for the 98 per cent, a system should have been applied which through taxation would have taken enough from the 2 per cent of the population so that the war would not have borne too heavy upon the other 98 per cent.

What have we gotten out of this war? Three-fourths of the war debt down to the 31st day of last December you have represented in bond issues, to be carried by the people and paid for when they buy things to eat and to wear and to use. You let off from taxation the people who had made unparalleled profits through three years before we entered the war; and I will show you some figures and tables in a moment to prove it. They have taken those profits out of the war business untaxed altogether; and then you passed a law taxing their war profits for our first war year only 31 per cent.

You left them all they had made during that period; and it appears in testimony that has been taken by various committees of Congress that they made not only the enormous profits represented by the prices they had charged, but that in many cases Great Britain and other foreign Governments built their factories for them without charge. Yet we put into the tax bill that we passed here, the last war revenue bill, a plan of amortization of the investments in those factories, when Dr. Adams testified before the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and it is in cold type, that in the great mass of cases Great Britain and the other foreign countries were so eager for the war materials that they furnished American manufacturers with the capital to build those plants, and then paid unprecedented prices for the products that were turned out of those plants. Then, when you came to fix your war-profits tax, when you ought to have taken all of it—they had had the benefit of the enormous war profits through three years of the war, and if you had taken every cent of it it would not have been an injustice—what did you do? In 1917 you took about 31 per cent of it, as I remember, not 31 per cent of the profits that they had made during these three years of the war, but 31 per cent of their war profits over and above the average of their prewar profits. Therefore, you left them 69 per cent of their war profits on top of the enormous profits that they had made besides.

Senators, facing the ugly fact that 65 per cent of the people of this country have nothing but their clothing and a little cheap furniture, on the testimony of the most expert investigators that we have of social conditions, and the scanty income of $200 per capita per annum, I ask you if you have not some fundamental causes for unrest when you put a tax system such as is provided by our war-revenue laws?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not like the Senator to come here and point his finger at "we-uns" back here and say we did it, for we did not. I wish he would go to the ones who voted that way. We did not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator from Iowa voted for every single amendment that was offered here, starting from 80 per cent tax on war profits, and when that was defeated, voting for the next one, and the next one, and the next one, clear down the line.

But, Mr. President, I know that I am overtaxing the patience of the Senate. I do want to put this material into the pages of the RECORD, however, and I am kind of hopeful that maybe not right now, but later along, if it can be repeated over and over again, maybe it will finally make its impression upon the senatorial mind, and maybe some good will come from it. It is God's truth. That is what it is. It is a startling thing to be confronted with, and I am not quite through with the facts yet. I have just told you what the condition of 65 per cent of the people of this country is. Take a little more of it.

According to Prof. King's classification, which Prof. Ross adopts and approves, 65 per cent of our people should have been eliminated at once from all consideration as possible bond buyers. They have "little or no property except their clothes and some cheap furniture, and their average annual income is less than $200 per capita." It must be known in advance, of course, that every bond sold to a member of that class represents a considerable loss to the purchaser, for it will shortly have to be resold at a greatly reduced price.

Among the other 33 per cent who have some little property there are doubtless a number who might fairly and reasonably consider some investment in bonds; but the number would be few and the investment small, and to them the tax-exempt feature would be of no importance, for their incomes, at best, would not be sufficiently large to be touched by the surtaxes.

It is the remaining 2 per cent, who own the wealth of the country, who have the greatest stake, whose incomes are so great that even luxuries and excessive and reckless living makes no impression upon them. This is the class upon whom the financial burden of the war should have been placed, so far as possible. But instead of pursuing that policy, what has been done? This class, so far from bearing any of the burdens of the war, has grown richer under war conditions than ever before. Now, is not that strictly true? I believe it. I may refer to this a little later, but at present I shall continue with the quotation from Prof. Ross.

MONEY OF COUNTRY WAS WASTED.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. FRANCE. From what book is the Senator quoting? I heard the name of the author, but I did not hear the title of the book.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am quoting from Prof. Ross, professor of sociology in the University of Wisconsin, author of Russia in Upheaval, Social Psychology, Changing China, Changing America, The Old World in the New, and so forth.

Mr. FRANCE. I know the author's works very well, but I did not know the title of the book. I will ask the Senator a question if it will not disturb him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not at all.

Mr. FRANCE. Of course, quite properly, we have a national pride that leads us to boast of our national wealth; and at the beginning of this war we were, I believe, what might fairly be called a wealthy Nation. That does not mean, of course, that all of the exaggerated statements which have been made with reference to our national wealth are true; but I think the figures as given by the census reports perhaps represent conditions as fairly as any figures could; certainly as fairly as the figures that come out of the imaginations of men when they are speaking in the fervor of eloquence. I think the figures show that our national wealth in 1912 was one hundred and eighty-seven billions—a fairly liberal estimate, if we consider that the assessment valuation was sixty-nine and a half billions. Now, if the assessment value was what it should be, a fair representation of the actual value, and if the statements which have been made to-night are correct, it would seem that we have spent thirty-three billions of an assessed value of sixty-nine and a half billions, not an inconsiderable proportion of our national wealth.

I do not wish to be unjust to the administration, but it is my honest opinion that 50 cents of every dollar expended during this war has been squandered because of the incompetent management of the war. That is merely a personal opinion. However, it is not a guess. It is an opinion arrived at after a careful line of thought from the operations which I have observed, some of them in my own State.

Am I interrupting the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not at all.

Mr. FRANCE. Now I am asking the question; I had to explain this. I think the figures indicate that before the war about 14 per cent of our population were in a condition of primary poverty—that is, a condition of poverty which means actual want. Does the Senator think that that percentage would naturally be increased as a result of our expenditure of thirty-three billions out of one hundred and eighty-seven billions of our total national wealth?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. FRANCE. So the Senator anticipates that the unhappy conditions to which he refers may be even increased as a result of this expenditure?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. I thank the Senator, because I value very much his opinion on the subject.

AN INDICTMENT OF OUR SOCIAL SYSTEM.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was about to continue the quotation from Prof. Ross's book, which, I believe, will be found by Senators to be very interesting. He says:

> Take income rather than wealth. From a critical study of all accessible wage statistics Rubinow concludes that in the period 1907–1912 the decline in real wages in this country was 7 or 8 per cent, and in the period 1900–1912 the loss was about 10 per cent. Despite strikes, boycotts, trade-unions, the new unionism, and the I. W. W, the ordinary wage earner has been losing surely and not even slowly, so that before the war his earning power was from 10 to 15 per cent less than it was a quarter of a century ago. He has missed slipping down to a lower plane of living only because he raises fewer children than he used to and his wife and daughter more often contribute to the family budget; that is, more persons work to support the family.

What an indictment, Mr. President, of our social system, and our society, and Government. Indeed the crime of it all is that the burden of this war for democracy, so called, is nearly all placed upon the wage earners of the country. It is their lives which were sacrificed. It is their labor which must produce the wealth that was destroyed by the war, and their own share in the wealth so created constantly grows smaller.

Continuing, Prof. Ross says:

> In the prewar period nearly half of the adult male workers in organized industry were earning less than $600 a year, while four-fifths received less than $750, which according to the unanimous testimony of social workers is the least on which a town family of normal size can be supported in health and decency. The receipts of property from the product of American industry have grown faster than ever before, while all the organizations of labor, the struggles and sacrifices to resist exploitation by the employer, have not only failed to increase the reward of labor, but have not availed to prevent the actual forcing down of real wages.
> In the last dozen years, since the exposure of commercial wrongdoing cooled the infatuation of the public with "captains of industry" our progressives, by expending an immense amount of agitation and publicity, have curbed child labor, limited the working hours of women, established in a few States a minimum wage for women, put safety first in industry, and won compensation for industrial accidents. Measuring the value of the accomplishment by the effort it has cost, we look upon it with no small complacency and imagine we are making encouraging progress toward solving the social question. In the meantime, however, the silent, unnoted pressure of capital, wielded in ever larger masses and ever more successful in wresting from labor its one effective weapon, organization, appears to have lessened the share of the product of industry going to the workers and increased the share going to owners of capital.

Yes, Mr. President, it is the silent "unnoted pressure of capital" that accomplishes results. It is this pressure that shapes the financial policy of the administration. It is this pressure which is trying to force through this bond bill without even a decent opportunity to discuss and consider its provisions.

Note well now the language of Prof. Ross:

In view of the plight in which labor will find itself in America after the war, we can not hope to insure ourselves against a disastrous reverberation from the Russian revolution unless we so accelerate our social evolution that the edge will be taken off the just sense of grievance of wage earners. There is no contenting all, but it is possible to make the majority feel that their interests are too well looked after for them to risk tossing a monkey wrench into the machinery of industry. To this end our adoption of ameliorative policies for labor ought to be many times prompter and heartier than it is.

In view of the plight in which labor will find itself, in the light of the facts, it certainly does not overstate the truth. What could be greater folly than to contemplate putting through this bond bill by the methods proposed, with the certainty that the people to whom the bonds are sold as the result of the "drive" will soon be reselling their purchases at a great loss? Every one of these people is certain to have a sense of grievance against the Government which he will feel took an unfair advantage of him in the transaction.

DANGER OF NOT HEEDING THE CRY OF THE MASSES.

I turn aside from my theme for the moment, Mr. President, to say that Prof. Ross, in the language I have quoted, is not demanding justice for labor or for the people of small means. He only points out the danger that comes to the favored few from crushing the masses. It is the danger of an empty stomach to some one else that he apparently sees most clearly, not the wrong done whereby the man has been reduced to that condition. Mr. President, I believe the day is fast approaching when the question we must answer is not how little will pacify the poor, but how much they should in fairness and justice receive. If we do not dare to face the question how much labor is entitled to, instead of haggling about how little will keep it contented, we will have to face the question that is being tragically put up to the privileged classes of many European countries, and which Russia seems to be answering to-day. That question is, How much will the great mass of the people take when they become united in a purpose to right their own wrongs by their own hands?

Mr. President, the Government's present embarrassment results from the original wrong it committed when it adopted its financial policy for this war. I tried to make it plain in 1917 when that policy was first presented under which the war was to be financed principally by borrowing instead of by taxing. Apparently I did not succeed. But what I failed to make plain then is perfectly plain now. The Treasury officials themselves in the testimony I have quoted have made it so. The evil consequences of forcing bonds and more bonds upon the people have manifested themselves earlier than I expected. The people of small means or with no means at all, forced to buy bonds they could not afford to buy, have, of course, been forced by necessity to sell them.

Had the proper amount of money been raised by taxation from the beginning, we would not now be on the eve of another "drive." Had surplus wealth and war profits been fairly taxed, the National Treasury would be full, instead of empty. Had not the Secretary of the Treasury demanded at the last moment that the tax bill passed a few months ago should be reduced by $2,000,000,000 we would have been vastly better off, and could more easily tide over the situation by Treasury certificates, until the taxes came in. Had the administration shown a purpose even to deal fairly with the people in this matter of the taxation of wealth, the country could safely depend upon the gratitude and affection of the people to make any further sacrifice that could be fairly asked of them. Had the men who made billions of dollars out of this war been compelled to turn over to the Government a fair share of their profits, and had the pampered millionaires who never abated a single useless luxury because of this war been made to disgorge some substantial portion of their wealth for its support, there would be no need to-day to call upon the very poor or the people of small means to take bonds they can not possibly afford to buy, and which if they are forced to buy they must necessarily sell at a loss.

Is it surprising, sir, when you contemplate the injustice wrought by the system by which this war has been financed, that there should be no enthusiasm for bond buying by the common man? Is it surprising that the great majority of the people to whom the war has brought harder living conditions instead of prosperity, that they should be slow about buying bonds, when they see that the few have amassed greater fortunes out of the war?

PROFITS OF THE PACKERS.

Take but a single illustration—the packers' profits. And I refer to the facts as established from official testimony and official records.

Mr. President, without detaining the Senate at this late hour to amplify on a statement of the packers' profits as developed by the investigation conducted by the Committee on Agriculture and as established out of the mouths of the packers themselves and by the record evidence obtained by the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation, I shall ask leave to incorporate in the RECORD some material without reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The great value of the investigation now on before the Senate Committee on Agriculture is that the case against the packers is proven by the records, books, letter files, and testimony of the packers themselves. Under the masterful cross-examination conducted by Francis J. Heney for the commtitee the infamy of the packers is proven out of their own records and their own mouths.

Fortunately the searching investigation prosecuted by Mr. Heney for the Federal Trade Commission enabled the commission to secure much incriminating evidence from the packers, their records, and correspondence before they succeeded in obtaining from a Federal judge in Chicago an injunction restraining the commission and Mr. Heney from further access to the correspondence and records of the packers.

But enough evidence had been secured before the restraining order was obtained from the Federal judge by the packers to enable the commission to make a report based on packer records and packer testimony so conclusive and so damaging that they were compelled to say something in their own defense. Then they made the fatal mistake of protesting that they had not been given an opportunity to be fully heard in their own defense by the commission before it made its report.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture determined to give the packers a "chance to be heard." Preliminary to hearing the packers this committee called Mr. Heney before it to state the case against the packers. His statement of facts secured, while conducting his investigation for the Federal Trade Commission, occupied the entire time of several sessions of the committee before it was completed. It was calmly and dispassionately presented, but it was a terrible arraignment. The committee also called Mr. Stuart Chase, an accountant employed by the Federal Trade Commission, who had examined the books and accounts of the packers.

I shall, from time to time, give to the readers of this magazine such opportunity to become acquainted with the truth about the packers as the limits of these pages will permit, including the truths they and their own employees have been compelled to tell about themselves.

Some enlightening figures as to the profits of the big packers were brought out in the testimony of Mr. Stuart Chase, the expert accountant who examined the packers' books for the Federal Trade Commission.

In considering the packers' profits, Mr. Chase said:

"The packers have a way, in reporting their profits to the public in their advertisements and annual statements and elsewhere, of deducting their reserves for excess-profit taxes. Now, the law in regard to excess profits is that such taxes shall be paid out of profits as determined. Now, the true profit is the amount before they make any provision for these excess-profits taxes. Swift & Co. in 1917 announced broadcast throughout the country—in fact, made charts showing their profits as $34,000,000, but they had arbitrarily deducted from their true profits a reserve of $10,000,000 to take care of excess-profits taxes. Now, properly, from an accounting, technical point of view their real profit was $44,000,000 at least. And all the packers do that."

But, without adding these profits which were deducted for the excess profit taxes, Mr. Chase gave figures of the aggregate profits of Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy for each of the years since 1912, as follows:

1912	$18,715,000
1913	20,217,000
1914	22,108,000
1915	40,052,000
1916	60,759,000
1917	95,639,000

Mr. Chase also gave some interesting testimony as to the profits of these companies separately which, summarized for three companies, is as follows:

Armour & Co.

Year.		Percentage of capital and surplus.	Per cent of capital stock.
1904	$1,850,000	6	28.5
1912	5,702,000	6.1	30.8
1913	6,158,000	6.1	30.8
1914	7,640,000	7.3	38.2
1915	11,156,000	10.2	55.8
1916	22,849,000	19.2	114.2
1917	27,137,000	19.8	[1] 27.1
Prewar average		6.5
War average		16.7

[1] In 1916 Armour's capital stock was $20,000,000, but in that year they issued a stock dividend of $80,000,000, which accounts for the lower percentage on capital in 1917.

Swift & Co.

Year.		Percentage of capital and surplus.	Per cent of capital stock.
1904	$3,850,000	8.6	11.6
1912	8,745,000	8.6	11.6
1913	9,449,000	8.7	12.6
1914	9,651,000	8.5	12.8
1915	33,387,000	19.8	31.2
1916	34,195,000	19.1	32.2
1917	47,236,000	33.4	63
Prewar average		8.6
War average		24.5

Morris & Co.

Year.		Percentage of capital and surplus.	Per cent of capital stock.
1912	$1,813,000	6.8	60.4
1913	1,917,000	6.9	63.9
1914	2,206,000	7.5	73.5
1915	2,321,000	7.5	77.3
1916	4,890,000	15	163
1917	8,012,000	22.6	267.7
Prewar average		7.2
War average		15.6

Testifying further with respect to the packers' profits, Mr. Chase said:

"Of course, I don't feel that the profit regulation of the Food Administration has amounted to anything, so far as regulating the packers' profit is concerned. At the time that I took charge of those records and accounts under Mr. Cotton I made a report to Mr. Cotton soon after the packers had sent in their first period returns for the months of November and December, 1917, and in that report I made some estimates which since have been substantially carried out by the final year's results, under the Food Administration regulation, as much as they had made in the year 1917, which was the most profitable year in their entire history.

"Senator NORRIS. As I understand you, the regulation of the Food Administration, allowing them a certain profit on different classes of business, in reality did not amount to anything?

"Mr. CHASE. That is what I should conclude, yes.

"Senator NORRIS. In other words, that as far as those regulations were concerned, their profit was unlimited?

"Mr. CHASE. No; it was not unlimited, but it was way up to the most they had ever made in their previous history.

"Mr. GRONNA. Wasn't it more than that? According to Mr. Cotton's own statement before this committee he said that the packers—he allowed the packers to make a profit, or rather to include their borrowed money as well as capital stock. Now, did the packers do that before the Food Administration took charge of it?

"Mr. CHASE. Well, that was simply for the purpose of determining a rate upon which to base the 9 per cent—that is, the 9 per cent on the capital stock, plus surplus, plus borrowed money.

"Senator GRONNA. Plus bonds?

"Mr. CHASE. Yes; plus bonds.

"Senator GRONNA. Plus everything.

"Mr. CHASE. Plus everything but accounts payable.

"Senator GRONNA. Well, wouldn't that permit them to make more money; in fact, what the chairman has stated, as unlimited amount?

"Mr. CHASE. Well, it allowed them to make a great deal more than 9 per cent on their own money, and a great deal more than 9 per cent on capital stock.

"Senator GRONNA. They might borrow a good deal more than their capital stock, and the more money they could borrow the more money they would make?

"Mr. CHASE. Yes; and in that connection, the statement made by one of the officials of the Food Administration, is rather interesting. He told my assistant, Mr. Tater, at the time these regulations were under consideration that they were going to base this percentage—to include borrowed money, because the public effect would be to make the rate appear lower.

"Senator NORRIS. What member of the Food Administration was that?

"Mr. CHASE. I think it was Mr. Durand. * * *

"Mr. CHASE. They are net profits.

"Senator GRONNA. And from the figures you have given us here this afternoon, it indicates that during the war period and during these regulations the packers have made more money than they did before the war. * * *

"Mr. CHASE. Taking in the total, I think you might summarize it by saying they made three times as much on their net worth during the war years as they made before the war."

What do you people who have been paying Hoover prices for meat during the war period think of this example of profiteering which the packers have been permitted to practice on the American public?

Do you marvel that the packers were among the most "patriotic" of the "superpatriots" for the war to make Turkey "safe for democracy"?

Did you ever hear of the Security League or the Navy League or any of the high-salaried gentlemen who were "doing war work" ever raising any question about the packers being "100 per cent patriots"?

These packers are not only very patriotic, but they are a benevolent bunch.

When the war suddenly ended the orders for the foreign governments for packers' products fell off. With foreign orders shrinking, there was imminent danger that the surplus meat products would have to be sold to our own people at lower prices. It would inevitably result in reducing the 267 per cent packer profits on capital stock which they made in 1917, for example.

By all the nine gods, that must never be permitted!

Hence the packers benevolently boosted for the bill to appropriate $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to aid in buying up their meat products here, shipping them abroad to feed "our friends" over there, and incidentally "stabilize the American market"; that is, keep up the prices on the meat-hungry people in our own country.

And thereupon Congress, having appropriated $100,000,000 as a gratuity to "our friends" in Europe, a few days later decided that it would be advisable to appropriate $200,000,000, to be expended—not as a gratuity to the needy here—but in road building throughout the country, so that some of our people might find employment and in the sweat of their faces earn money in the good old American way, to pay packer profits and feed their hungry ones here at home.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am just going to cite these figures. The Federal Trade Commission obtained access to books of the packers. It had an expert accountant at work upon those books. It developed the fact that their profits in 1912 were $18,000,000 and I will leave off the odd thousands; in 1913, $20,000,000; in 1914, coming down to the war period, half of that year being a war year, $22,000,000; 1915, $40,000,000; 1916, $60,000,000; 1917, $95,000,000.

EXCESSIVE PROFITS REVEALED BY TAX RETURNS.

I now desire to call attention in a word to some further profits. In the State of Wisconsin we have an income-tax law. The income-tax law of Wisconsin, before it was amended two years ago, permitted the public to know the income of any man reporting under it. I regret that it has never been possible to put through the Senate an amendment of our Federal income-tax law that would enable anyone interested to ascertain the income tax paid by the taxpayers of the country. Besides, if we had such a law as that there would not be so much cheating upon income taxes as there is at the present time.

But there was recently published in the Capital Times, printed at Madison, Wis., a table showing the net incomes of various lines of business established from the income-tax returns of the tax commission of Wisconsin. I am not going into that table in detail to-night. I know Senators want to conclude the consideration of this bill, but it deals with such packing companies as Drummond Packing Co., Cuddahy Packing Co., the Plankinton Packing Co., with coal, with shoes, with paper. We have in Wisconsin a great many paper mills. It deals with steel, with the great Allis-Chalmers plant in Milwaukee, one of the greatest in the country; the American Brass Co., the Falk Co., the Federal Pressed Steel Co., the Gisholt Machine Co., at Madison, and the Simmons Co., at Kenosha. I just want to call attention to one company. It is one of the home companies. Here is the Gisholt Machine Co., of Madison, Wis. In 1911 it had a net profit on which income tax was paid, as shown by its sworn returns, of $21,190. Just hold those figures in mind a minute—$21,000. I will leave off the odd hundreds. In 1912, $29,000. In 1913 they did not show any net profits at all. The war came on. In 1914 they showed no net profits. In 1915 their net profits were $1,130,000, and in 1916, $2,378,884.

I am going to ask permission, Mr. President, to print this table in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, nothing can be done now that will wholly correct the wrong conditions which the wrong policy has brought about. But something can still be done if the Government will take the people into its confidence and not try to make the poor buy bonds by the high-handed methods heretofore used.

EVIDENCE OF COERCION IN THE SALE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. President, I do not believe I would be justified in taking the time of the Senate to present a mass of material that I have before me in support of the amendment which I have offered to impose a penalty upon anybody who seeks by coercion to compel the purchase of Government bonds. But I am satisfied that the Senate would be absolutely startled if the Senators were present here in larger numbers and could be induced to listen to the facts presented in the documents which I have upon my desk. Here is the Atlantic Monthly containing an article on the subject covering a number of pages. Here is the Equity News, containing affidavits in mob violence cases which were placed before the Department of Justice. A member of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in my own State, presented these affidavits. They are positively appalling in their recitation of facts.

There is delivered at my residence and has been for many months, and I suppose to the residence of every other Senator here, a daily copy of the Christian Science Monitor. All last spring and summer during the bond drive and shortly thereafter the Christian Science Monitor printed columns from every section of the country of reports of coercion, mob violence, intimidation, whipping, directed against people to compel them to purchase bonds. I have placed before the Secretary of the Treasury cases in which affidavits have been sent to me. I recall at this moment one case in particular where the official body that had charge of the alloting and selling of bonds in a county in Wisconsin issued a summons, a copy of which I sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, directing a citizen of that county in the formal language of a summons to appear before a court commissioner and give evidence as to the amount of property he had, with a view to assessing him a certain percentage and requiring him to buy bonds to that amount. The man had a mortgage on his home. He had a few cows and a horse. He went to a bank, borrowed some money and bought a $50 bond. He was pursued by these officials, and threatened with punishment if he did not buy, as I remember now, $200 in bonds. He sold part of the stock that he kept on his little mortgaged farm up in the cut-over lands of northern Wisconsin, where he had only about 30 acres under cultivation, and, through fear and intimidation, bought the bonds. Many similar cases have been brought to my attention, and it is time that effective action be taken to put an end to these illegal and reprehensible methods of disposing of Government securities.

Mr. President, here is an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor, dated October 18, 1918. It is not very long, and I am going to read it. It is entitled "The Cheerful Giver," and is as follows:

THE CHEERFUL GIVER.

Every farseeing person must have deprecated the pressure which some overenthusiastic people have brought to bear on their neighbors to collect money, not only for the present loan but for past drives, such as the Red Cross. The money which is dragged from people by threats or by terrorism is credited to the debit side of the loan or the drive, inasmuch as it is just so much weight cast against the great demand of the President that the citizens of the United States should give all that they can. When men sink to the level of discovering their neighbors' incomes and attempting to levy taxes, after the nature of those benevolences which cost King Charles of England his throne and his head, they steep themselves in the very mire of Prussianism, and, so far from assisting the loan or the drive, they go a long way toward making that loan or that drive a failure. They have raised a crop of animosity, of bitterness, of hatred, and of a sense of injury which far outweighs the few miserable dollars they may have been able to capture from an unwilling victim. Nor is it very easy to estimate the full force of the damage which they are doing, for no man is able to say how far these seeds of bitterness and anger have been sown amongst people who have not the moral courage to put their resentment into effect by withholding loans or subscriptions. Everybody who has studied the war to-day knows that what the world is fighting is the German mentality. It is not the soldiers recruited from the German people, or the rifles and cannon made in the German arsenals, which the world is opposing. These are the mere effects of the true enemy, which is the arrogance of power, the lust of selfishness, and the passion of self-will. How, then, can these qualities be met by people who put the very same qualities, even if of a less brutal expression, into practice? If there is a disinclination to subscribe to the loan to-day, it is because the nation calling itself a Christian nation has not begun to understand the Bible it professes to make its rule of conduct. "For," wrote the great Apostle to the Gentiles, "God loveth a cheerful giver."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD, without reading——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President, I will take the time to read what extracts I have in mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to hear the Senator read them; they are so interesting.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is quite agreeable to me. I read as follows:

AFFIDAVITS IN MOB VIOLENCE CASES ARE PLACED BEFORE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS—C. B. BALLARD TURNS DOCUMENTS OVER TO FEDERAL BUILDING MEN HERE—TELL OF MOB VIOLENCE.

C. B. Ballard, newly elected member of the legislature and organizer for the Society of Equity in Outagamie County, has laid before officials of the Department of Justice of this city affidavits concerning assaults made on farmers in that section during the recent liberty loan drive. These affidavits have also been laid before Gov. Philipp, and action for the prosecution of the perpetrators of the attacks has been asked.

At a recent meeting of the Outagamie Society of Equity it was decided to ask Federal prosecution of these cases. At the recent State and national conventions of the equity society resolutions were adopted against mob violence. The following are affidavits that were filed here by Mr. Ballard.

(By Dan Schultze.)

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon the liberty loan men called on me and wanted me to sign for $1,750. One called me a slacker and another gave me a punch in the chest and jerked me around by the collar. We went to the house then and I asked two or three to come in and told the others to stay out, but all flocked in and kept me encircled until I promised to come to town and sign up, which I thought the best thing to do, for my wife was almost scared to death.

Of these who were here I know the chief of police and Joseph Ulman. The one that struck and jerked me I did not know, but they called him Balliet or something like that.

(By William Bates.)

On October 17 about 30 men entered my yard as it was getting dark. They said they were the council of defense and that I sneaked to the bank and took out $200 and that they were here to get the full amount, $650. I said that I could not afford it. Chief of police called me a pro-German and a dirty rat. I tried to get away from them but Balliet, the coal dealer, pulled me back and asked my wife where the yellow paint was. My wife said I better sign with them and get rid of them. Those who I knew were Chief Prim, Dr. O'Keefe, J. McCann, Mr. Moder, and Balliet.

(By Charles Drenks.)

About 30 men called on my father, asking him to subscribe for the fourth liberty loan. Of that number we knew J. Conway, Chief of Police Prim, Joseph Ulman, and Steve Balliet.

My father was in very poor health, but they called him pro-German and said he ought to be sent back to the Kaiser, and if he did not sign up the Federal agents would come and confiscate his property. He was very much worked up over the visit of these men and did sign up, and the next day he went to Appleton and subscribed the amount. Five days later he died.

(By Louis Becker.)

On October 18, 1918, at about 11.30 o'clock p. m. my wife was home alone in the house and fast asleep when at once she heard a noise. She got up to look, and she saw a crowd of men outside and heard some of the men say "open up the door or we will break in." She opened the door and told them it was no need for them to come in as I was not at home, but they stormed in the house. As they got in the house they demanded a light. She told them that she didn't know what the children done with the lamp in the evening. They lit matches and lit the lamp themselves. Then they demanded from her to tell where I was, or they would search the house. She told them to search the house as long as they went that far. They then went and looked in the bedroom. They then told her if I would not be in Appleton the next forenoon at 10 o'clock they would come out on Saturday night and kill the horses on me. They then left.

(By August Julius.)

On October 18, 1918, I was gone to the grange hall to a special meeting on account of my neighbor's funeral. At about half-past 11 o'clock p. m., when I returned home with my wife and child, I see some autos stop near my home. Upon arriving there I see the road was blocked with 9 or 10 autos. I said to my wife there must be something happened there. When I was about a rod away I got out to see what was the matter, when one man came up to me whom I do not know, asked me who are you, and I told him my name. He said, "Here is the fellow we are looking for." I then asked him, "What is the matter?" and in a second they closed around me like a vise. Then Steve Balliet said to me, "Is your father at home?" I said, "I don't know, for he should come to Fond du Lac." Then a man who I don't know said, "We don't need the old man. You are good enough for it." In the meanwhile some one stopped the engine on my car. Then Steve Balliet said to me, "Sign up $1,100 for your father's liberty bond." I then said, "How can I sign up for him, as I signed my share when the committee men was around, my allotment being $100?" They then said, "If you don't sign up, we will take you along and send you to France." Then my wife said, "How can we do that? We haven't got the money." Then one man said, "Why, borrow it." Then another man said, "If you don't keep still, we'll take you along, too." I said, "I will go along with you to George Schaefers, your committeeman, if you don't believe me." Then Steve Balliet says to me, "You have pestered him long enough. He don't want to be pestered by you any more." Then my wife come up and said, "We got to go home," for she was getting cold and the baby was crying. My wife tried to pull me out of the crowd, and then D. P. Steinberg pulled me back as I tried to get away and said, "Am I of your size?" Then I told him, "I didn't look for no sizes. I want to go home." They said they would not let me go home if they stayed there until morning. They then pushed me to my car and turned on the lights, which they had turned off before, gave me the pencil, and forced me to sign up my father's allotment, being $1,100, I being forced to sign my own name and my father's. They then told me, "If he don't pay up, you'll have to pay up." They then told me, "If you hain't in Appleton to-morrow morning by 10 o'clock and take out the allotment of $1,100, we will be out here to-morrow afternoon and get you." They then left their cars in the road and said, "Now, let's go to L. Becker."

(By H. A. Holzman.)

On October 17, 1918, about 3 p. m. o'clock, while I was out in the field working, I see a crowd of about 18 men coming toward me. As soon as they was near me they said we are Council of Defense. Then Steve Balliet said, here is two papers; either you sign up your full allotment or sign this pledge. Then I said what have you got there. He showed me the two papers and I read them myself, and I said I'll sign up for that, meaning I would sign the blacklist and take my medicine; then he said you don't understand this right. You pledge yourself as a slacker and a pro-German. This paper is going to Washington and after the war is over you will be sent to Germany. I said all right I'll take my medicine for I can't take my whole allotment. Then I said let's go to the house. I then walked into the house and talked to my wife. My wife told me I should offer them half, being $350. I said to her they won't accept that. Then they opened the door and come in the house, and I then said won't you take half of it. Then Steve Bulliet said we want the whole, being $700. I then told him I was going to sign the blacklist, and then they should go, for the children was crying and half scart to death. Then they handed me the paper and I signed the blacklist. Then some of the men whom I didn't know said let's tar and feather him. I then told 'em to leave and my wife said the same. Then Steve Balliet said come to the town hall to-night and I said I wont come there for I was there last night. He then said a man like you ought to be sicked out of the country. I told them I would take my medicine. Another man whom I don't know said a man like you don't think much of his wife and children. I said to him if you'd think as much of your wife and children as I do you wouldn't be here. Then they walked out and left.

About 10 o'clock that same evening a bunch of autos came into my yard and made a racket. My father asked if they had a breakdown, and some one said, "No; but we are looking for something." They went away and later came back with more, making a terrible noise. My sister asked them what all this meant and they said, "We want to get Frank Julius," but I was away from home.

When she was outside two of the men sneaked into the house through a back door, and when she went in a bunch of them came rushing in. They were told to go out, but did not go. Some of them were smoking and were asked to stop it. Some threw their cigars outside, others threw them upon the floor, and some kept on smoking. Then they started loud talk, stamping feet and clapping hands. They told my sister they would take her along too. Turning to my father one said, "I suppose you are going back to see the Kaiser pretty soon." He replied, "I am here and going to stay here and I am not a Kaiser man."

I was absent from home until late. When I came home a bunch of them grabbed me. I asked who they were and they replied, "Your friends, the council of defense." I went into the house and a bunch was in there. They asked if I was going to sign up and I said, "I have taken out as much as I can in this fourth loan." They said, "Sign it." Chief Prim said, "Hurry up and sign," and I did.

The next night, October 18, 1918, about 9 o'clock p. m., I was up alone, the rest of the family was all gone to bed. I heard some autos outside. I opened the door and recognized the same crowd that was there the day before. They said they was going to give me a ride. I told 'em I wouldn't go, and in the meanwhile my wife had got up, and she come out of the bedroom and told them, "No; he is not going along." Then a man who I don't know took her by the arm and pushed her down on a chair and told her to keep still or they would take us both along. They simply told me I'd have to sign up or there would be something doing. Then I signed up my allotment. Then they left. Upon leaving they said, "Now, we will see some more of your friends."

(By Frank Julius.)

In the afternoon of October 18 four men came to my field and introduced themselves as Steinberg, Ullman, Gallager, and a soldier whose name I have forgotten. They said they were out for the liberty loan and that I had not taken my full allotment. I told them I had taken all I could for this time. I was then called to the house by my folks, and started, but was told by these men to stop. They asked several questions, and then I started again, and they asked me again to stop, saying, "Are you going to sign up?" I replied I had taken all I could for the fourth loan and they went away.

Then they wanted me to go with them and show them where John Julius lives. I told them I would not. Then they grabbed me and tried to pull me out of the house and a table and a plate was broken. Then my mother and two sisters tried to hold me back. They kicked my mother, and struck one of the girls on the head, and pushed me out of the house, and told us to get into the chief's car, which the two girls and myself did. The girls were without wraps and one was dressed only in a nightgown and a kimona as she was in bed when the disturbance began. When we arrived at John Julius's house, about 4 miles away, they made me rap on the door, but there was no one at home and they took us back home.

I had donated to the Red Cross fund and in church for the boys in camps. Had bought war-savings stamps, took a bond in the second loan, the full allotment of the third, as much of the fourth as I felt I could, and then forced as I was to take the balance of the allotment.

Those of the bunch we knew were Chief Prim, D. P. Steinberg, Galager, Ullman, and McCann.

In a letter Mr. C. B. Ballard describes another of these outrages, as follows:

I might say that the case of prosecuting the members of the council of defense in Outagamie County who took part in raids, mob violence, is now under way. We have sworn statements from a very large number of people who were misused and beaten up. We have the testimony of one woman who can prove that her husband is in the insane asylum by reason of the methods used on him to force him to buy bonds. This man's name is Merritt Black, a member of our society.

One of the worst cases I have heard of is right near the capital, the seat of government. An old Scotch woman, 71 years of age, who had bought bonds and contributed money and labor in the interests of the Red Cross, has been shamefully treated. It seems she refused to contribute toward the war-chest fund. Was willing to continue in the Red Cross relief work, but refused to do anything for the war chest. A large truck, manned by a bunch of patriotic gentlemen, drove into the yard of this old gentleman and his wife on the 11th of November, when the peace celebration was pulled off. They backed up to his outhouse and were about to put a rope around it and drag it behind their truck down the road, when he protested and said if they wanted something to burn they could have wood in his woodshed without any expense. They ordered them back into the house, saying if he did not keep still they would take him down and throw him on the fire. They then dragged this outbuilding down the road to a vacant lot and went to the property of other people in Evansville and took seven outhouses, taking them down to this lot and setting them on fire.

The old gentleman, who was born in Vermont, a Yankee, walked down town to see if something could be done. He felt that it was wrong for anyone to take his building off from his property, and while he was away another gang of 200 per cent Americans appeared with an old tiger's cage, which some show had left there on a wagon and drove up to the residence of this old couple, where this old lady, 71 years of age was, and deliberately carried her out and put her in this cage and hauled it down on the street and took part in the parade. The poor old woman was frantic, and her husband, seeing his wife in this cage, called upon the Baptist minister and some other people and tried to have her released. They were told if they did not keep away they would be thrown into the cage with her. After they had finished what they called "sport" they took the old lady back to her home. Her husband, Mr. Shaw, went to the district attorney of Rock County and tried to have some action taken regarding this matter. I have talked to him and his wife, and up to this time nothing has been done. The Baptist minister, Rev. Pearce, formerly pastor of the Baptist Church at Appleton, knows all about this case and I have a letter from him regarding it. He said to his congregation in Evansville that he would leave the village and the State, as he felt that where the so-called best citizens of the town could take part in such a disgraceful proceeding and nothing apparently could be done, he felt that he and his wife were not safe and he has left the State.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. I was out of the Chamber for a few moments. In what part of the country did this coercion occur?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This coercion, an account of which I have just read into the RECORD, occurred in the State of Wisconsin.

I now present, Mr. President, some clippings from the Christian Science Monitor. I have here an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor which I read; but, in addition to that, I wish to present the following:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Tuesday, Oct. 15, 1919. No. 373.]

DRASTIC METHODS FOR THE LOAN.

To the Editor of the Christian Science Monitor:

I notice in your editorial for Saturday, September 28, that you deal with Prussianism in the drive for the liberty loan. I thought you might be interested in the phase of it presented to me recently.

On Monday, before the drive was to begin, two solicitors for the liberty loan called on me and asked for my husband's name, occupation, employer, and what his earnings were, and informed me that every one must subscribe at least 10 per cent of his earnings. I declined to tell my husband's earnings or what we intended to subscribe, saying that we intended to buy to the limit of our ability, but that I felt that we were the ones to judge how much we could buy. At that I was informed that every employee in the town who did not subscribe his full 10 per cent was to have his name published as a slacker and would lose his position.

I knew what my rights were, so was not terrorized, but I know that a great many—the majority, no doubt, as there are many foreigners here—were not so well informed and meekly submitted to such rank Prussianism.

BOND SALES AND TAR AND FEATHERS—SEVERE MEASURES TAKEN BY LIBERTY LOAN COMMITTEES IN SOLICITING SUBSCRIPTIONS IN VARIOUS LOCATIONS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

(Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Pacific coast bureau.)

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Severe measures are being taken by some liberty loan committees in soliciting subscriptions and in dealing with those who do not purchase bonds to the amount decided upon by the committees in various parts of the Pacific coast.

The Brawley News, of Brawley, Cal., for October 3, for example, reports an instance of violence in this connection, as follows:

"J. Edgar Ross was taken to the liberty bond headquarters this morning, urged to subscribe for liberty bonds in such sum as the committee deemed fair, and after persistently refusing to do so was taken by a couple of persons, whose names are unknown, to an obscure spot in the suburbs, where a coat of tar and feathers was applied and the man returned to a position in front of the Hotel Dunlack, where he was chained to a pillar of the house and a placard bearing the inscription, 'J. Edgar Ross, who loved his money better than his country,' was suspended above his head. The man was kept in that position until afternoon, when he was removed to the city park. Later he was taken to El Centro."

In an editorial on this subject in the same issue this newspaper says: "And there are those not yet apprehended who are due to receive the same medicine."

A full page advertisement in a Seattle (Wash.) newspaper, headed, "No mercy for bond shirkers," also exemplifies the same spirit when it says, for instance, among other things of a similar nature: "If you have not fulfilled your duty to the United States Government in this fourth liberty loan, make up your mind to this fact: Every eye in Seattle will be fixed upon you until you do. The finger of every man, woman, and child will be pointed in your direction. An unenviable record will be placed against you that will live for all time.

"The committee that calls upon you is sent by the United States Government. The committeemen are clothed with full authority to demand an adequate fourth liberty bond subscription from you. You may refuse or act discourteously if you want to, but remember this: The official report filed opposite your name is public property and will, if necessary, be given the widest publicity."

The campaign manager of San Francisco has also threatened to make public the names of those who do not purchase bonds in the amount that it is thought that they should.

Printed slips signed "Liberty loan committee," used in solicitation in San Francisco, read as follows:

"(1) Be prepared to give the committeeman a quick answer as to the greatest amount of bonds you can buy.

"(2) Give your subscription to the committeeman having charge of the district where you work—not to others.

"(3) If you have subscribed outside your district, keep your receipt so it can be shown to your committeeman. He has instructions to get a subscription from you or a good reason for not getting it."

Mr. President, I read from the Atlantic Monthly of January, 1919, page 99, an article which is signed by Charles D. Stewart. Under the title, "Prussianizing Wisconsin," there is the following editorial:

PRUSSIANIZING WISCONSIN.

[The symptoms of a root-and-branch revolutionary movement which, for want of a better name, the newspapers term "bolshevism," are of interest and, perhaps, of serious moment in this country. We are therefore printing in the guise of an article a long informal letter which the editor received recently from Wisconsin, a State which, owing to the reported disaffection of a large proportion of its population during the war, and to the character of its vote at the late election, is under national scrutiny. Mr. Stewart's points seem to us to make for a useful understanding of the situation.—The Editors.]

HARTFORD, WIS., September, 1918.

The EDITOR OF THE ATLANTIC.

DEAR SIR: As a member of the profession which looks before and after, possibly you may appreciate a sort of news-letter from Wisconsin.

As you are aware, of course, Wisconsin—the Milwaukee district—has returned a Socialist—Victor Berger—to the House of Representatives; a man indicted by the Federal grand jury in Chicago and also, more recently, in Milwaukee; and this at a time when we are at war for "democracy," an idealistic war for human freedom. And the man elected to Washington still stands on the St. Louis socialistic platform, which was against the war and condemned it on mercenary grounds.

At the same time, the district which has returned Berger has always gone "over the top" in all war drives, so that Milwaukee has a stamp to be affixed to business and private mail which announces that "Milwaukee has met every demand of the Government in men and money."

A district supports the Government in every way, and yet returns a Socialist to Congress. How is this? you will say.

Or, take the county I live in—Washington County. It has always been a Democratic county; a Democratic nomination was equivalent to election. Republicans came second; Socialism did not cut much of a figure. It went "over the top" in the fourth liberty loan.

At the recent election the result stood as follows: The Republicans, as the rural mailman eloquently said, "wiped 'em up." Socialists second. Democrats—Wilson's men, with "Wilson" nailed to the masthead—came limping along at the rear, after the Socialists, a sudden new element.

In the Wisconsin Legislature we shall have 15 Socialists in the assembly (or possibly more on final returns), and 2 Socialist senators—far more than the Socialists ever had at the height of their power here. At the same time, Wisconsin has always gone "over the top," and the State has been complimented by Gen. Crowder for its efficiency in the selective draft and for being the first of the States to report its work done in that regard. Now, how is this? you might inquire.

You will find no answer to this question if you read every newspaper published in Milwaukee or throughout Wisconsin. Eastern papers, such as the New York Times, for instance, will tell you quite confidently that it is just pro-Germanism. For what, forsooth, but pro-Germanism would elect a Congressman who represents opposition, as per the St. Louis platform, to the war for democracy?

As you are aware, a party which gets a sudden accession of voters at one time—as when Berger was originally elected to Congress and then beaten in the same district, and then elected again—is profiting, not by a steady clientele moved by unswerving devotion to its abstract principles, but by voters who are influenced by immediate conditions against which they are registering a protest. It is the same with the Democratic and Republican parties; a great victory in a particular locality does not mean a great victory the next time.

As Wisconsin was the birthplace of the Republican party—it was born at Ripon, Wis.—one might now say that it bade fair to be the birthplace of a new political power, Socialism. Berger founded the Social-Democratic party in this country; Debs, whom they ran repeatedly for President, was a convert of his. And while MEYER LONDON, Socialist Congressman, was defeated in New York, Socialism out here has come back with a whang that seems to send the party wonderfully ahead and causes the whole country to turn its head in this direction.

Just how much is this permanent and convinced advance and how much a mere protest against this local condition and that? As I say, you would never get any light on this matter in any editorial in a Milwaukee or other Wisconsin paper. Never.

Carlyle said that "Of all forms of government, a government by busybodies is the worst." This is true. It is worse than Prussianism, because that is one form of goverament, at least; and worse than Socialism, because Socialism would be run by law, anyway. But government by busybodies has neither head nor tail; working outside the law, it becomes lawless; and having no law to support it, it finally depends for its enforcement upon hoodlums and mob rule. When the respectable and wealthy elements are resorting to this sort of government, abetted by the newspapers and by all sorts of busybody societies intent upon "government by public sentiment," we finally have a new thing in the world and a most obnoxious one—mob rule by the rich, with the able assistance of the hoodlums—always looking for a chance.

It starts as follows:

The Government wishes a certain amount of money. It therefore appeals to local pride; it sets a "quota," which has been apportioned to each locality, and promises a fine "over-the-top" flag to be hoisted over the courthouse. All well and good; local pride is a very fine thing, competition is wholesome.

But the struggle that ensues is not so much local pride as it looks to be.

Milwaukee, for instance, a big manufacturing center, is noted for its German population. This, the local proprietors fear, may affect its trade. It may be boycotted to some extent. A traveling man comes back and says that a certain dealer in stoves refuses to buy stoves made in Milwaukee!

Ha! Milwaukee must redeem its reputation; it must always go over the top; it must be able to affix this stamp to all its letters.

Now, as the State has a quota, and the county and city has each its quota, so each individual must have his quota. Each individual must be "assessed" to buy a certain quota of bonds. Success must be made sure—the manufacturers must see the honor of Milwaukee and Wisconsin maintained.

It is not compulsory to give a certain "assessed" amount to the Y. M. C. A.; and the Government does not make a certain quota of bonds compulsory upon citizens—oh, no! it is not compulsory, only you must abide by your assessment. And we will see that you do. No excuses accepted.

As to the people who do the assessing, they are just local committees loosely got together; they assess by one rule of thumb or another, with little real knowledge of the individual's financial difficulties, and, while it is not compulsory, this committee's law must somehow be made as the laws of the Medes and the Persians.

It is easily done. Humanity falls into three classes—those who work at a trade, those who are in business, and those who farm. The first class is easy to handle—subscribe your assessed amount or lose your job also, as in Milwaukee—some gang from another department of the works, whom you can not report by name, will coat you with yellow paint as you leave the works. It is no use to report to the district attorney. He will "have to investigate," but will do nothing.

Another point. Exemption from military draft depends upon the employer; it would be of little use for the workman to say he was essential to any industry if the employer said he was not, and so Gen. Crowder insisted that others besides the registrant should make a plea for his exemption—the employer, for instance. So it is a case of subscribe or lose your job, and probably go to war. This unwritten and unexpressed law soon becomes known; all workmen subscribe; the subscription is, in short, taken out of their wages.

Handling the working classes to go "over the top" was easy.

As to lines of business, these were organized in groups and so solicited; each firm would be solicited by some one in the same line of business—a wholesaler or a customer with whom you dealt. Thus they kept track of one another, and any quibbling about the size of your assessment was not politic.

But the farmer. Now, there was a conundrum. He does not work for a "boss"; he can not be discharged on Saturday night, and you can not boycott him in business or refuse to deal with him when he comes soliciting for trade.

What shall we do with him? Shall we leave him to subscribe what he can, and voluntarily?

The only answer to this conundrum is simply mob rule in one form or another; either by actual violence or by ingenious schemes to make illegality look legal or by scaring him and making him think that something indefinite but awful is going to happen to him if he buys only $300 worth of bonds, for instance, instead of $500 worth.

A few examples from different counties will serve to illustrate. I have before me a sworn statement, which I got from a friend in Outagamie County. This sworn statement was made for a Wisconsin association of some 30,000 members, The Farmers' Equity Society, which was incensed at the treatment accorded many of its members.

A STATEMENT MADE BY JOHN DEML, OF OUTAGAMIE COUNTY, WIS., AT MADISON, WIS., TUESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1918.

About half past 12 o'clock (continuing for more than an hour) Sunday morning, October 20, my wife awaked me, saying that there were a large number of men on the front porch pounding and rapping on the door besides talking in a loud tone of voice. I was upstairs; then I came downstairs and went to the front door, where they were, and I asked them who was there. Several answered at once, "The Council of Defense." I then asked them, "What do you want?" and they replied, "We want you to sign up." I replied, "I have done my share." And they asked me when, and I replied, "I did my share in the spring." (That is, I meant to say I had done my share in the third loan when I subscribed for $450 in bonds.) To make it plain, on the 28th of September, at the opening of the fourth drive, I was notified by letter that my bond assessment would be $500. When Henry Baumann came to see me I told him I could not possibly take $500 now, but would take some, meaning a substantial amount; that is, all I could afford, and he replied, "My orders are you must take $500 or nothing."

After I had replied that I had done my share in the spring they demanded that I open the door and let them in. I told them I didn't have to open the door; then they undertook to force the door open and went so far as to tear the screen door open; then they threatened to break down the door, and I said, "Come on, then, boys." Then they appeared to be planning, and while they were doing that I took the time to put my shoes on. By that time they were at the kitchen door, and they made a demand that I let them in through that door; then I went to the kitchen door and opened it and found a crowd of men (much larger than I expected) around the door, and then reaching out two by two around toward the front of the house. I left the door and walked to the front porch to see if they had done any painting (as they had previously painted a neighbor's mail box); I walked to the road to see if they had painted my mail box. And then I turned around to return to the house, when they all at one time closed in on me like a vise; some grabbing my fingers or wrist, others my legs, and several of them were shouting, holding a paper before me, "Sign up." I said, "I will not sign up at this time of night." Then a man shouted, "Get the rope." The first I knew was when the rope was about my neck and around my body under my arms. Some one then gave a sharp jerk at the rope and forced me to my knees and hands; at the same time some of them jumped on my back, and while bent over some one struck me in the face, making me bleed; then a man (whom I recognized) said, "Boys, you are going too far," and then as they got me away from them a little I heard a man say, "You can't scare him." I answered, "I am not afraid of the entire city of Appleton." Then a man (whom I knew) got me to one side, and he said, "Let's go into the house and talk between ourselves." Then two men (whom I knew) went with me into the house, and we sat or stood around the table, and they still demanded that I sign up. I said, "I will not sign up for any man after being abused like this." Then a man (whom I knew) told me I would have to go with them, or if I didn't go with them would have to come to town that Sunday morning at 10 o'clock to see Mr. Keller. I told them that I would be there; they left; as they left I noticed, and so did my family and neighbors, that they rode away in seven automobiles. I did not go to see Mr. Keller.

(Signed) JOHN DEML.

This man tried to get a warrant for assault with intent to do great bodily harm. The president of the Equity Society and the assemblyman from that district both argued the matter with the district attorney, but without success. Then they went to the governor. He would "investigate," but nothing was done. Officials "passed the buck," as usual in such cases.

So much for Outagamie County. Now let us take a glance at Milwaukee County as being more interesting.

Picture to yourself the following "collection committee" traveling out of the highly civilized, "kultured" city of Milwaukee.

Twenty-five automobiles containing 60 to 70 respectable citizens of Milwaukee.

One color guard (a flag at the head), with two home guardsmen in citizen's clothes.

Two deputy sheriffs.

One "official" photographer.

One "official" stenographer.

One banker—this personage to make arrangements to lend a farmer the money in case he protests that he has subscribed too much already.

This phalanx, entirely lawless, moves down upon a farmer who is urging two horses along a cloddy furrow doing his fall plowing.

They form a semicircle about him; the speechmaker says, "Let us salute the flag" (watching him to see that he does it promptly), and while his horses stand there the speechmaker delivers a speech. He must subscribe his "assessed" amount; no excuses accepted. If he owes for the farm and has just paid his interest and has only $15 to go on with, it makes no difference. He must subscribe the amount of his "assessment" and "sign there."

If not, what happens? The farmer all this time, of course, is probably scared out of his wits, or does not know what to make of this delegation of notables bearing down upon his solitary task in the fields. But if he argues too much he finds this. They have a large package of yellow placards reading:

The occupant of these premises has refused to take his just share of liberty bonds.

DO NOT REMOVE.

And they put them all over his place. He probably signs.

Now, bear in mind that this method is not practiced merely against farmers who have made unpatriotic remarks or have refused to support the war. It is practiced against a farmer who has taken only $100 when he was assessed a hundred and fifty and this is to make him "come across" with the remainder.

You might ask, Is this comic opera or is it government? I would say that it was the former, were it not so serious in its effects upon a peaceful, law-abiding population.

The various schemes (I am not troubling you with all) in the various counties all emanate from the city or the small manufacturing town. And you must remember that the population of Wisconsin is quite largely an agricultural population, and with a considerable amount of nationally famous lines of manufacture sprinkled all over in the little towns, and concentrated in Milwaukee. Country merchants do not usually go out on these soliciting committees—it might insult customers—so the local manufacturer lets loose some of his foremen and others who do not depend upon farmer trade.

Thus the farmer—who in a great many cases has been assessed too high by people not familiar with his problems—finds himself being camped upon and persecuted by the manufacturing and financial interests. To show you that this method is taken as a matter of course out here—as natural to Milwaukee as if it were Prussia itself—I append a clipping which happens to come from the Milwaukee Journal.

MORE SLACKERS ON LOAN FOUND.

Milwaukee County has been blemished by three more yellow cards placed in front of homes whose occupants refused to invest their fair share in the fourth liberty loan. The first call of the liberty bond flying squad Friday was near the city limits in the town of Lake.

A farmer, considered financially able, had purchased a $50 bond. His allotment was placed at $150 additional. He said he was financially involved and had no money, but refused the offer of a bank to carry the loan for him. Members of the committee posted the yellow card.

The second call was at the home of a man of 84, who had subscribed $50, while his allotment was placed at $500. He said that he had no money other than that which he had loaned on interest.

Asserting that he had done his share by coming North from Louisiana at the outbreak of the Civil War to avoid service in the Confederate Army, he said he was drafted in Wisconsin and had to pay a substitute $550 to fight in his place. He reckoned the Government owes him about $2,000 by this time as interest on the money, which never was returned. The man, a Hollander by birth, came to this country when 18. He has two grown sons who are known as patriots and active in loyalty work.

But the issue was with the father. Because of the cold weather he was taken inside the house by the committee, where Dr. W. B. Hill explained matters. The man finally subscribed for his full share of $500, remarking, "There has been a war at each stage of my life, and each has cost me $550."

In the same town a bachelor living with his father, a man more than 80, said he could do no better than subscribe $50 additional to the $50 bond he had purchased through workers. His father is known to have done his full share.

When the squadron arrived at the home the son was out. Later he was seen cutting across lots toward the rear of his premises. He refused to stop on call of the committeemen. He was overtaken and given the customary message from the Government. Prompted by his sister, he refused to subscribe to more than $50 worth, although his allotment was placed at $500. The yellow card was ordered tacked up.

In the town of Oak Creek one supposed slacker was absent, and left word he had come into Milwaukee to buy a $100 bond.

A neighbor of his, who had subscribed $100, was allotted $500 as his fair share. He was obdurate and uncommunicative. With little ceremony the third card of the day and the fourth of the campaign was placed in position. Every man visited bore a German name. In several instances they were reputed to be worth more than $20,000, considerable of which was in cash. About half of the calls resulted in the men deciding to do their fair share, without offering the plea that they couldn't afford it and had already invested in a $50 bond.

In the rural country where I live different methods were used, more ingenious and really more flagrant, as creating a disrespect for law. False law, with false threats and penalties which are never carried out, creates contempt for real law, and is itself contemptible.

For instance, in the stamp drive all the men in the district were obliged to meet at the schoolhouse and make up any shortage in the quota. If one man did not, another must. Notices were sent around on a white postal card under Government frank, headed "White House," and then to make everyone think that they were obliged to go to that meeting and take their assessed amount in a savings society the President's war-savings message was altered from the original version.

The following document illustrates the scheme resorted to in this same county for dealing with those who had not subscribed to the fourth liberty loan their quota as "assessed." I acquired it by the simple process of standing on my constitutional rights and awaiting complete results. Two of a special "collecting" committee came round, both employees of the local automobile factory, which had a large contract. One was the "collector" and the other the "witness," and they handed me this:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
LIBERTY LOAN ORGANIZATION,
FEDERAL RESERVE DISTRICT NO. 7, WEST BEND, WIS.

TO CHARLES STEWART:

Whereas it appears that you have so far failed or refused to support our Government by subscribing for your share of the fourth liberty bond, you will therefore appear at the courthouse in West Bend, Wis., on the 19th day of October, 1918, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., then and there to subscribe your full allotment or show cause for your apparent delinquency and your apparent obstruction to the war-finance requirements of the United States.

(Signed) E. J. KEARNEY,
Federal Reserve Director of Sales for Wisconsin.

Served this 18th day of October, 1918.

By F. C. KEHR,
Committeeman.

In presence of—
G. H. PRATT.

Of course, this thing, with its whereas and its therefore has about as much legal standing as the resolution of a woman's sewing society. But it is intended to appear to be a legal summons; you are to appear at the "courthouse," though not in court. With this they fetched the farmers and put the county "over the top." Until this was invented the county had fallen short in its "quota."

I told the collector and his "witness" that they could "rest assured that I would not be there," and asked them to please watch and see what happened.

Nothing happened, of course. But they got the full quota out of most of the farmers who had not taken enough—and I got the document.

Such methods have created opposition. From the beginning the drives were preceded by bluffs and threats and illegal claims of some indefinite penalty—and each time none of the threats was carried out against those who defied them. They could not be; they were lawless and illegal. Then the committee would try something new and more persuasive. Their methods went from bad to worse. The whole proceeding was represented as coming from "our Government" "by order of Secretary McAdoo," etc. And it is not difficult to imagine the effect upon the farmer's ideas of a Federal administration to which he attributes such methods.

The meaning of the whole phenomenon is simply this: The manufacturer or financier in town wishes to make sure that the farmer will subscribe liberally, so that the burden may not fall wholly on himself.

But why go into further details? This is business at work in Wisconsin. In the whole State you would not find a newspaper which said a word of protest or raised a question as to the citizen's rights under the Constitution. For the business leaders own and advertise in and run the newspapers, and the little paper in the country town simply goes along in the swim—never does any thinking for itself. If you asked any of them what the Bill of Rights was, they could not tell you; they do not know their "rights" from a hole in the ground.

And now we come to the conclusion. Imagine yourself either a workman in Milwaukee or a farmer out in the country. You are dealt with in this entirely Prussian manner—possibly the committee, which knows little of your financial difficulties in your home, has just assessed you arbitrarily.

Your constitutional rights do not count. There is no remedy. If you are painted yellow, the district attorney will pass the buck; he knows what the manufacturer expects of him, and the financier. The State officers of these drives, Federal representatives, are always Milwaukee bankers.

But for you there is no remedy if you are "assessed" too high.

With the Y. M. C. A. and other religious society drives the same assessment scheme is worked. You can not give to the Y. M. C. A.; you are told right off how much you are to pay.

Now, if you were a workman or a banker and the Government was supposed to be the one who was dealing with you thus, and an election came along, what would you do?

Vote for the party in power? I trow not. You would vote Socialist till the cows came home. In fact, I would do that myself were it not that I know the essential nature of Wilson's government by request and the inevitable outcome of such a policy of "government by public sentiment" instead of by law.

Being a Republican, of course, I vote that ticket straight.

But the result was a great relief to me, even if some did vote Socialist. This is America; and to a large extent, and in a sense which you will understand, the Socialists' sudden accretion was a pro-America vote, not a pro-German.

CHARLES D. STEWART.

At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded to Mr. PENROSE, who raised the question of a quorum; the roll was called, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE did not thereafter resume the floor.

Authorizations for issues of liberty bonds.

The first liberty bonds act (Apr. 24, 1917) authorized new issues of bonds not to exceed		$5,000,000,000
The same act authorized the issue under the terms of such act of the unissued bonds previously authorized as follows:
For construction of Panama Canal (act Aug. 5, 1909), but including the unissued Panama Canal bonds authorized to be issued for the nitrate plant (act June 3, 1916) and for the Shipping Board (act Sept. 7, 1916), the amount of issued postal savings bonds being deducted from the amount authorized (approximately)		225,000,000
For extraordinary expenditures (act Mar. 3, 1917)		100,000,000
For expediting naval construction (act Mar. 4, 1917)		150,000,000
And in addition authorized an additional amount to provide for payment of loan of 1908–1918		63,945,460
Total authorization under first liberty bond act		5,538,945,460
First liberty loan subscriptions allotted		2,000,000,000
Balance bonds unissued under first liberty bond act		2,538,945,460
The second liberty bond act (Sept. 24, 1917) authorized the issue of bonds (in addition to the $2,000,000,000 issued under the first liberty bond act), not to exceed in the aggregate		7,538,945,460
And provided that of such sum $3,538,945,460 should be in lieu of unissued bonds authorized by the first liberty bond act.
The third liberty bond act (Apr. 4, 1918) increased the authority for the issue of bonds to		12,000,000,000 and
The fourth liberty bond act (July 9, 1918) further increased such authority to		20,000,000,000
Issues of liberty bonds under second liberty bond act and under such act as amended:
Subscriptions allotted—
Second liberty loan	$3,807,891,900

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to voice my protest against the pending bill. I shall not take the time to go into it at length, nor is it my purpose to engage in any consumption of the Senate's time which would amount to delay. I expect to use only a few minutes.

Before I submit my remarks I wish to offer an amendment to the bill and direct a part of my remarks to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 11, page 1, to strike out "$7,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000,000."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment is found applying to page 1 of the bill. The report made by the committee in the House states that—

> At the present time our expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, are estimated to be at least $19,000,000,000 and our estimated receipts $14,000,000,000, divided as follows: Fourth liberty loan, $7,000,000,000; war-savings certificates, $1,000,000,000; and taxes, $6,000,000,000, thus leaving a deficit of $5,000,000,000, which it is contemplated will be met from the sale of the notes provided for in section 1 of this bill. Of course, there are $5,000,000,000 of bonds authorized under existing law and available to be issued, but it is the opinion of your committee that those bonds could not be sold now under the terms of their authorization. The Treasury Department concurs in this view and has no intention of trying to sell those bonds now upon the terms provided in existing law. The Treasury and your committee believe that out of abundance of caution we should authorize the issue of $7,000,000,000 of notes, since the excess over $5,000,000,000 will doubtless be required early in the next fiscal year.

It was with the view that only a deficit of $5,000,000,000 exists between the income from all sources and the expenditures for the fiscal year. Leaving $5,000,000,000 as the margin, the excess of $2,000,000,000 seems to be out of a superabundant caution. It is to be assumed that Congress will be in session some time after the term expires by its own limitations on the 4th day of March; that between now and next December it will be expedient for the Executive to call an extraordinary session of Congress some time, when lies in his discretion, but it is inexpedient for the country to remain with no President within its borders and no Congress in session. The Nation is not yet at peace. It is living only under an armistice. It is unwise, then, Mr. President, to leave the Nation headless, the Executive gone and the Congress adjourned and its Members dispersed to various quarters of the United States. In view of that fact, very likely a special session will be called. If it go until the Executive shall return from abroad from a second trip, it would be along in midsummer. Full legislation to meet any emergency required by a deficit in the Treasury or any unknown expenditures at this time can be provided at that session.

There seems to be too much in this bill of a desire to provide for unknown contingencies. All these provisions will cause additional tax levies, and the tax levies ought to follow an economical expenditure of the money. When the money is already provided, without considering the two together, there is much less probability of an economical expenditure of those funds. For that reason I have offered the amendment to reduce the amount contemplated from $7,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000, which, I think, will cover all the expenditures for the fiscal year.

The reason why Congress should take some action on these matters and why it should be in session to do so is the wheat guaranty; that, we assume, will be disposed of at this session. There is a provision there for one thousand million dollars to meet the guaranteed price of wheat. There is a deficit in the railway operation under the Government control of $750,000,000. There is, in addition, a naval bill pending of $750,000,000. The naval bill will be presented here in due time. Following the same recommendation, the Senate ought to pass the naval bill as well as the $750,000,000 deficit in the operation of the steam railways of the country. This would make two and one-half billion dollars, the appropriations for these three items alone.

These appropriations or expenditures will require additional taxes. The tax levy must be provided by some future Congress. This Congress has exhausted the possibilities of further tax levy. In the short time that remains between now and its expiration it is idle to think of discovering any new sources of revenue.

The bills that come during this last part of the session, all of them clamor for action at once. It is one of the vices of legislation, and especially the method that we have followed for some time in legislating here, to accumulate all the bills, rush in the last hours of the session, and then call for the immediate passage without examination and without consideration by the Members or by the Senate as a body.

The other practice, which is a sort of a handmaid to this evil, is the tendency for the vital legislation to come from conference committees. The report of a conference committee is always in order. Many things that take place in the conference committee are unknown to the great body of the House and the Senate. The Senate is confined to a very few Members on that committee. When the report comes in there is but a single vote. No amendments are possible. It is either voting the report in or its defeat. This is an evil.

The evil is somewhat mitigated by a rule adopted in the Senate that no original matter can be added in the conference committee. Before that time the conference committees, under the rules or the practices, had original power of legislation, and they evolved new measures, new sections that came out for the first time in the conference committee reports, and were heard for the first time on the floor of the Senate, with no opportunity to amend and no opportunity to consider maturely, as it ought to be done.

The amendment of the rules has changed the original matters that have not been considered by either House, so that the conference committee now deals entirely with differences, but, having dealt with the differences, eliminated some sections, modified some, because the modification can be made, the committee still has jurisdiction to draft new sections covering matter that has been considered in both Houses or going over the same province it comes in, and in the form of a conference committee report it gives no time for due deliberation to follow the many changed portions of the bill.

So the two together, the great accumulation of bills and the tendency to legislate by conference committee reports, are both of them evils. Jointly they become a very great evil.

One of the reasons why I shall vote against this bill is because it comes in at the last hours of the session. There has been abundant time since the first Monday in last December to have framed this bill. It was known there would be some such bill required. The last bond issue had hardly been placed until it was known. The press carried notices, the Treasury knew, the House and the Senate knew, that another bond issue was imminent, and that by spring details would be required so that it could be offered to the general public. So there is no excuse for bringing this bill in here at the last moment, and I shall vote against the bill because it does not give time for the consideration of a measure of this importance.

I have no desire to take the time of the Senate here, and I am not engaging in a filibuster for the purpose of destroying time. I have waited here until this time to-night in order that I might in due form voice my protest against the bill and very briefly state my reasons for voting against it. I shall content myself with these remarks, and after that I shall vote accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read, but it will be read again.

The SECRETARY. Amend, in line 11, page 1, by striking out "$7,000,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000,000," so as to read "not exceeding in the aggregate $5,000,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to offer an amendment. I do not call the yeas and nays. It is to make the revolving fund, or whatever it is called, $500,000,000 instead of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator refers to the amount the Finance Corporation is authorized to advance?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I offer that amendment. I offered it in the Finance Committee and it was voted down. I expect it to meet a like fate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 5, strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert "$500,000,000," so as to read:

> The aggregate of the advances made by the corporation under this section remaining unpaid shall never at any time exceed the sum of $500,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is not in the Chamber, has an amendment which, I think, ought to be voted on. The Secretary has it at the desk. It relates to the coercion of persons for subscription to loans.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that ought to be voted on.

Mr. PENROSE. I would like to have it voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section, after section 7, the following:

> SEC. —. Every person who by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communication, influences, controls, or intimidates, or in like manner endeavors to influence, control, or intimidate another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Every officer of the United States who by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communications, influences, controls, or intimidates, or endeavors to influence, control, or intimidate another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $2,000 or more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

If two or more persons conspire by threats or force, or by threatening letters, or any threatening communication to influence, control, or intimidate, or in like manner endeavor to influence, control, or intimidate another with the intent of causing him to subscribe for any of the notes, bonds, certificates, or obligations authorized under this act, or any bonds, certificates, or other obligations authorized by existing law, or that may hereafter be authorized, and to part with any money or other thing of value in payment therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, each be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not less than six months nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say one word on the amendment. I think intimidation and duress have been used to compel soldiers and sailors to buy the bonds. I think it is not only unfair, but reprehensible. If the hour were not so late and the session so near its close, I would insist on the adoption of this amendment, in so far at least as soldiers, sailors, and marines are concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this amendment is aimed to cure a fault which is absolutely inherent in human nature. It can not be cured by the amendment. Loyal people during times of war will and must and do exercise a certain degree of intimidation upon disloyal people. It began with the Boston Tea Party. In the Civil War it began with the denunciation of the Copperheads in the North and of the Unionists in the South.

This is an attempt to create a change in human nature itself. A man loyal to his country in time of war can not help more or less by word or act intimidating the man who is disloyal. It can not be otherwise. This amendment has nothing to do with the bill. It is foreign and alien to its real meaning, which is to raise money.

Now, of course, if Congress wants to pass an act which will put the fiat of its disapproval upon this Boston Tea Party, it may do it; but I for one do not want to see it done. Of course, the act of the Boston Tea Party was illegal. It was intimidation. It was Ku-Kluxism, to express it in one word. But you can not help that sort of thing. And that is not all. That sort of thing is right. There is a man with hundreds and thousands of money or millions of money who will not contribute to help the Government when the Government needs money. When the bodies and the lives of men are being conscripted to help the Government he will not contribute a cent. It is nothing but right that his neighbors should call on him and tell him that he has got to contribute; that he must do his part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to an amendment the other day that I submitted. I am going to offer the amendment now, but I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss it. I know the situation and I know that all amendments will be voted down, and it is useless to present the amendment in the hope of having it adopted. If I had any hope of accomplishing anything, I would use any method that I thought would accomplish the purpose. The chairman of the committee has kindly assured me that he is hoping that something may be worked out in the department to take care of the situation intended to be covered by the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I have been in communication with the department on the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment in brief is to try to devise some way to take care of the situation where the owners of bonds who have to sell them under distressing circumstances have to sell them at a discount. I shall simply offer the amendment and have it read and then take a vote on it; and I hope the Senator from North Carolina and I will be able to work out something in the department to take care of the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place insert the following:

That any owner of liberty bonds not exceeding $500 par value shall be paid in cash the par value thereof and accrued interest thereon through any Federal banking institution upon making a satisfactory showing that he is the owner and original purchaser thereof and that he is disposing of the same to meet his present needs.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CONTRACTORS.

Mr. POMERENE. I give notice in writing of a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of presenting an amendment to House bill 16187.

The notice was read by the Secretary, as follows:

I hereby give notice in writing that I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of offering the amendment to H. R. 16187, hereunto attached.

ATLEE POMERENE.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. POMERENE to the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to receive fully itemized and verified claims and reimburse contractors and their subcontractors, including material men, for the construction, improvement, special repair, equipment, or furnishing of post offices and other buildings or work under the supervision of the Treasury Department and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds and the Washington Monument whose contracts were awarded, or whose bids, as thereafter accepted, were submitted prior to the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, to wit, April 6, 1917, and whose contracts have been or will be completed after said date, for increased costs thereafter arising, due, first, to increased cost of labor or materials; second, to delay on account of the action of the United States Priority Board or other governmental activities; third, to commandeering by the United States Government of plants or material, shown to the Secretary of the Treasury to have been sustained by them in the fulfillment of such contracts by reason of war conditions alone: Provided, That any subcontractor may submit his claim through the contractor or to the Secretary of the Treasury. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, as such buildings, etc., are respectively completed and paid for, and all outstanding liabilities paid, to transfer into a special fund the available balances of the specific appropriations from which the original contracts were payable, which fund is hereby made available for the payment, as far as possible, of such claims, or any installment thereof, arising out of increased costs: Provided, That no claim for such reimbursement shall be paid unless filed with the Treasury Department within six months after the passage of this act: Provided further, That in no case shall the contractor or subcontractor be reimbursed to an extent greater than is sufficient to cover his actual cost in fulfilling his contract or subcontract, exclusive of profits to such contractor or subcontractor, nor shall such reimbursement include any advances or payments made by the sureties of such contractor or subcontractor in executing the work: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the beginning of each session thereof the amount of each expenditure and the facts on which the same is based.

SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. POLLOCK. I present the credentials of Hon. NATHANIEL B. DIAL, chosen by the qualified electors of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State, and I ask that they be read.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, NATHANIEL B. DIAL was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of South Carolina a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness: His excellency our governor, R. A. Cooper, and our seal, hereto affixed at Columbia this the 27th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919.

R. A. COOPER, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

W. BANKS DOVE,
Secretary of State.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 16187, being the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill which is now the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily in order that the Senate may consider the action of the House of Representatives on the wheat price guaranty bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

GUARANTIES TO PRODUCERS OF WHEAT.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives in regard to the wheat price guaranty bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24 with an amendment to the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, insisting upon the residue of the amendments of the Senate to the bill, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24 and further insist upon the residue of the Senate amendments still in disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to offer a Senate resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 481) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the delegates representing the United States at the peace conference assembled at Paris are hereby requested to offer amendments to the formulated plan proposing to establish the league of nations by the insertion of the following provisions, to wit:

First. Add to the end of section 15, and as a part of said section, the following sentence:

"In the event that the award, decision, or recommendation of the court of arbitration, executive council, or body of delegates shall not be accepted by the governments parties to the dispute, then the executive council shall provide for referring the question of accepting or rejecting such award, decision, or recommendation to a vote of the people in the country or countries whose governments or officials have so withheld or refunded their acceptance."

Second. Add the following as section 15A:

"Each of the high contracting parties covenants and agrees not to wage or declare war against another until the question of peace or war shall have been first submitted to a vote of its people, save and except in case of invasion or where the danger is so imminent as not to admit of delay."

Third: Article 15B:

"Representatives of the member States in the body of delegates shall be chosen by the peoples of the respective States."

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Virginia to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the conference report on Senate bill 5236 amending certain sections of the Federal reserve act. I think there is no opposition to it now in the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the conference report will be agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. If there is no opposition to it, although we had an agreement——

Mr. PENROSE. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. If there is any opposition to it I will withdraw the request, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement regarding that measure. I have no objection now to the conference report being adopted, inasmuch as the bond bill has been passed in the shape in which it was reported to the Senate. I recognize that the conferees inserted the word "notes" in the conference report on the bill called up by the Senator from Oklahoma. I know why that word was put in, namely, to take care of the obligations authorized under the bill that has just passed the Senate. I think, inasmuch as that bill has now passed the Senate, we ought to agree to the conference report in order that notes shall have the same rights in connection with the issuance of circulating currency as the bonds which have already been issued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on Senate bill S. 5236, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following:

"That that part of the first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that the whole of such net earnings, including those for the year ending December 31, 1918, shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus.'

"SEC. 2. That that part of section 10 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'The members of said board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"'The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed.'

"SEC. 3. That section 11 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of September 7, 1916, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m) and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes, drafts, or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act, but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus: Provided, however, That all such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such sections shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after December 31, 1920.'

"SEC. 4. That section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5172. That in order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantity of circulating notes in blank or bearing engraved signatures of officers as herein provided, of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall express upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds deposited with the Treasurer of the United States by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury, and shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and cashier; and shall bear such devices and such other statements and shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, direct.'"

ROBERT L. OWEN,
GEO. P. MCLEAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
JOE H. EAGLE,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OWEN. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Mr. SWANSON. I renew my motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. As the Senator knows, there is an agreement with the other side; but if they have no objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina, I will withhold my motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 469) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to continue investigation of German and Bolsheviki propaganda and to incur and pay the expenses of said investigations, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GORE. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that it be considered notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SWANSON. Objection being made, I think, under the agreement to which I have referred——

Mr. OVERMAN. Senators on the other side do not object to it. They are all in favor of it. It is merely to allow the German propaganda committee to continue its investigation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The resolution goes over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock p. m. to-day.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., Sunday, March 2, 1919) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m., Sunday March 2, 1919.

POSTMASTERS.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Spurgeon L. Wilson, Driftwood.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Arthur T. McCort, Follansbee.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate March 1, 1919.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

J. D. Clements, of Helena, Mont., to be United States attorney, District of Alaska, Division No. 2.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, amidst the profound mysteries which surround us in this life another day, luminous with truths which we may comprehend, is before us with its duties and responsibilities.

We pray for light to guide us, strength to sustain us in our convictions, that we may do our whole duty in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, Representative elect Hon. JAMES P. WOODS, of the sixth congressional district of Virginia, is present and desires to be sworn in. I ask that the certificate of election be taken from the Speaker's table, and that he be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the election certificate, which is in due form.

The oath of office was administered by the Speaker to Mr. WOODS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5593. An act for the relief of certain officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 3964. An act for the relief of Otis C. Mooney;

S. 5512. An act to amend the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916;

S. 4699. An act for the relief of St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin; and

S. 4949. An act for the relief of J. C. Garrett.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bills and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 15706. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14894. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 14945. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14746. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 14945) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5292. An act making it unnecessary to secure permits from the United States Shipping Board for the construction of ships in American shipyards for foreign account; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 4949. An act for the relief of J. C. Garrett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had this day approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14078. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes;

H. R. 171. An act to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915;

H. R. 204. An act to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district court of the northern district of California and its officers;

H. R. 3217. An act providing for an increase of authorization for the Federal building at Steubenville, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 15950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River (H. Doc. No. 1838); and

S. 5627. An act to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas.

LEAVE TO PRINT—"MADE IN GERMANY."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent, for the first time in many years, to print as a document an interview I had on the 2d of December last. It was printed in the Saturday Evening Post, entitled "Made in Germany." I have had so many requests for copies from Democrats and Republicans, by letter and otherwise, from Members and friends, that I can not buy any more of them, and I ask unanimous consent that the interview be printed as a document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have printed as a document an interview—a very elaborate one—that he had in the Saturday Evening Post, entitled "Made in Germany." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14746, the Indian appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14746, the Indian appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment included with reference to the approval of oil leases in the Five Civilized Tribes. The gentleman at this stage of the session, I assume, desires speed particularly, and I presume in conference there will be a disposition to eliminate contested and controverted matters. I would want to feel that at this time there would not be any protracted delay in conference over that particular item.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the amendment to which the gentleman calls attention was passed by the House by a vote of 198 for to 69 against—a very decisive vote; and in view of that vote, I assume that the conferees would feel that they ought to stand reasonably for the House position in the premises.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was put in in the Senate without a roll call.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; but the House action was very decisive.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very possibly, but if the House conferees insist, as the gentleman intimates, there would be considerable delay involved in conference.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That was my reason, Mr. Speaker, for wanting to get into conference upon it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we are to have that delay we might as well have it before the conference as afterwards.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am advised by the enrolling clerk that unless this bill gets to him by to-morrow night—Sunday night—he will be unable to have it enrolled and back in time for adoption and signature by the time the House adjourns on Tuesday.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that when we had it up before I felt that we did not have opportunity for sufficient consideration by the House. The gentleman knows that whatever agreement there may be in conference on the bill there will not be an opportunity after the report is made for consideration. I am frank to say that unless we can be assured that that controverted matter will not be forced upon us at this time, when it can not be considered, I will object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Of course the gentleman would not want me to agree before we go into conference to eliminate a matter that the House put on by that decisive vote.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think at this time controverted matters of great importance ought not to be forced upon the House without opportunity for consideration.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This matter has heretofore been before the House, and, as the gentleman knows, it was considered at length.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was brought up without notice to the House. It was not in the original bill. It came in here as an amendment on the floor, and, as I felt, without notice to the House and without sufficient consideration.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It has been discussed both at this session and at the last session. There has been quite a lot of discussion of it. The gentleman surely does not expect me to agree that the conferees will abandon the position of the House at the first fire.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that in the last days some of the fine distinctions might be eliminated and these matters of controversy taken out. Otherwise I should have to object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Certainly the disposition of the conferees will be to try to get the bill passed. That will be the disposition, I assume, of the House conferees, at least.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 10851) to provide a method for disposing of intoxicating liquors now or hereafter in the possession of the United States court officials, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 15979) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on H. R. 13026 for printing in the RECORD, and I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As I understand it, the conference report will now lie upon the Speaker's table, and can be taken up at any time.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up immediately after the disposition of the contested-election case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this conference report be taken up for consideration immediately after the conclusion of the contested-election case. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I have another little conference report which I should like to submit.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This is a matter of providing hospital accommodations for discharged soldiers and sailors. If it is not taken up and disposed of very quickly, there will be no arrangements whatever made for these men.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman's request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The request is that this hospital conference report be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the election case. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the importance of this matter, but do not think we should establish an order for the consideration of any certain conference report at this time. It is a matter of privilege within the discretion of the Chair, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The conference report will be printed under the rule.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the sundry civil bill, which we passed last night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the sundry civil bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLING. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I make the same request.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make the same request.

Mr. STEAGALL. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] make the same request. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that these requests for extension of remarks are on the sundry civil bill in each instance?

The SPEAKER. Yes; in each instance. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. During the debate on the sundry civil bill last night I referred to a newspaper article on cotton futures that I wanted to put into the RECORD. I now ask unanimous consent to print that in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an article that he referred to last night, on cotton futures. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask leave to extend my remarks on the league of nations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the league of nations. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. I make the same request.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. HAYES. On the subject of vocational education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. On what subject?

Mr. McFADDEN. On a bill that passed the Senate yesterday pertaining to the farm-loan system.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the farm-loan system. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the league of nations.

Mr. McARTHUR. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Government ownership of railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the league of nations and the gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Government ownership of railroads. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the league of nations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the league of nations. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF TAX ON LUXURIES.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 439.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. It was understood we would take up the election case. If we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this joint resolution it may take all day.

Mr. KITCHIN. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to have the bill passed quickly, I have no objection to his asking unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution 439 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that House joint resolution 439 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ROBINSON, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—JENNIE J. BROWN.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 4769, granting a pension to Jennie J. Brown, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4366. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1913;

R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3964. An act for the relief of Otis C. Mooney; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4699. An act for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin; to the Committee on Indians Affairs.

S. 5512. An act to amend the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 5593. An act for the relief of certain officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5493. An act authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5292. An act making it unnecessary to secure permits from the United States Shipping Board for the construction of ships in American shipyards for foreign account; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed without the accompanying documents:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 6 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a detailed report by the Alien Property Custodian of all proceedings had by him under said act during the calendar year 1918 and to the close of business on February 15, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 February, 1919.

Mr. MANN. Ought not the accompanying documents to be printed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The documents have been ordered printed by the Senate.

RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, February 28, 1919.

Mr. Speaker CLARK:

I hereby resign the position of trustee of Columbia Hospital, to take effect immediately.

M. D. FOSTER.

The resignation was accepted, and the Chair appointed to the vacancy Mr. LAZARO, of Louisiana.

REPEAL OF TAX ON LUXURIES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919.

Resolved, etc., That section 904 of the revenue act of 1918 is hereby repealed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, this section levies a tax on necessities in fact, but called luxuries, in excess of a certain amount. The House inserted it in the revenue bill during the war strictly as a war tax upon the suggestion and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury; not so much as a revenue producer but to encourage thrift and economy and prevent extravagance among the people during the war.

After the armistice was signed the Senate Finance Committee struck from the bill this section 904. It was agreeable to the Committee on Ways and Means, but in the last day of the discussion of the revenue bill in the Senate it was put back. After it was restored in the Senate a motion was made and carried to strike out one or two items of the section. So that when the conferees met they found this section with these items in regard to clothing stricken out, leaving a tax of 10 per cent on all other items, such as shoes, hats, and underwear, and other necessities; we were unable to strike out the balance of the section because the Senate had agreed with the House bill, and it was not in conference. The conferees agreed, however, that they would recommend to the House and the Senate, immediately after the bill was signed, a joint resolution to repeal the whole of section 904. This resolution does that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I have received numerous telegrams from candy manufacturers claiming that if we are going to lift the tax on jewelry——

Mr. KITCHIN. The jewelry tax is not lifted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Furs.

Mr. KITCHIN. Furs are not in the repealing resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or on these articles of luxury——

Mr. KITCHIN. This section which this resolution repeals levies a tax on carpets, hats, shoes, bonnets, underwear, and many other similar articles selling above a certain price.

Mr. STAFFORD. If they are going to lift the tax on those articles it should be lifted for the same reason on candy.

Mr. KITCHIN. The committee really did not think candy was quite as much of a necessity as shoes and hats.

Mr. STAFFORD. But those are shoes and hats above a certain high price.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; hats above $5.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean that candy which is eaten by children and babies is not as much of a necessity as hats that cost $5 or shoes that cost more than $15.

Mr. KITCHIN. The committee decided that candy was not a necessity, even for children.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have the gentleman give his authority that candy is not a necessity for children. I was taught differently when I was a child.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman had not eaten so much he might have been larger in stature. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Facetiously speaking, I think the gentleman from North Carolina must have lived mostly on food of a saccharine quality. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield so that we may have it in the RECORD, what was the amount to be raised by section 904?

Mr. KITCHIN. About $80,000,000.

Mr. WELLING. How much revenue is supposed to be derived from the tax on candy?

Mr. KITCHIN. From twelve to fifteen million dollars.

Mr. WELLING. The gentleman thinks that that ought not to be repealed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much revenue would be raised by this luxury tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. This tax that we are repealing—about $80,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What was the attitude of the committee in reference to sporting goods?

Mr. KITCHIN. The committee took the same view on sporting goods—baseball bats, tennis rackets, and so forth—that it did with respect to candy. The committee did not think they were as much of a necessity as shoes, underwear, and articles of that kind.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Is this $80,000,000 that is to be eliminated by this resolution to be put on other things?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; this does not raise the tax on anything in the revenue bill. It repeals that, and in our estimate we considered that this would go out.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The tax on no other article will be increased?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Not having had a chance to examine the resolution, I do not know what it purports to repeal, and therefore I am obliged to ask the question. Does this repeal the tax on furs?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it only repeals section 904.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman give me about the amount that is expected to be raised by the tax on furs?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not recall, but something near $5,000,000. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no time to yield; we are operating under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, having obtained recognition from the Chair, how much time am I entitled to?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee has fairly stated this proposition. The conferees did hear from the people in protest against the so-called luxury taxes, and they decided to report a resolution to both Houses providing for the repeal of section 904, which includes the so-called luxury taxes. As a matter of fact, they were not luxury taxes at all. They were taxes upon articles of common use above a certain price. The article itself was not to be taxed under a reasonable price. These articles, included in section 904, begin with carpets and rugs, include picture frames, trunks, valises, and so forth, and run on down to men's shirts and women's dresses and kimonos, and so forth. The thought was—and it was a thought born of the English taxing methods—that if a good woman was inclined to pay $1,000 for a dress, it might fairly be stated that all in excess of, say, $300 paid for that dress was a luxury and therefore subject to tax. If a gentleman desired to pay $300 for an evening dress suit, whereas he could get one for $60, then everything in excess of $60 might be regarded as pandering to his taste and would be subject to tax for war purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. While the gentleman has correctly stated the situation as the bill originally left the House, the gentleman is aware that after it came back from the Senate the matter of dresses was omitted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was coming to that. I think that Senate change is the real reasen for bringing the whole matter back.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have only five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I just want to make the statement that I filed with the committee a protest of 10,000 of our citizens against this tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, the gentleman's constituents were opposed to helping the war along to this extent. A great many other people were perfectly willing to go into the war and have all sorts of expenses charged up to the Government, but when brought to book and asked to pay were in favor of removing all taxation. That was one of the difficulties of the entire situation. When this matter was before the Committee on Ways and Means the same question was before the English Parliament, and a committee there was considering the imposition of luxury taxes. That committee was in session for a long time. It never imposed luxury taxes; but with the usual American haste the Ways and Means Committee inserted a so-called luxury tax in this bill. There was a war necessity for it at the time. The President of the United States had told us that we must raise $24,000,000,000 to carry him along with the war expenses for this fiscal year. He and the Secretary of the Treasury insisted that $8,000,000,000 of the $24,000,000,000 be raised by taxation from the body of the people. Most of the gentlemen on the committee were inclined to raise all that money from corporate interests, from railroads, and manufacturing and business concerns. They were not inclined to tax the body of the people, the voters of the country, at all. That is another of the difficulties in attempting to frame a revenue bill. Those in charge always seek to avoid placing the burdens upon the masses of the people, and desire to tax only certain special interests that are supposed to be able to bear the burden.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield in five minutes. I have only started on this question. If I can get more time I will be very glad to answer questions. The party in power never wants to tax the people. But the party in power in this instance demanded $24,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1918, ending June 30 next, and they have demanded more money since; and the day of reckoning is at hand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not finding fault with the party in power for imposing the taxes under the circumstances. Great responsibility was placed upon the administration. They had to raise money. They did raise it and they did spend it lavishly. We do not yet know the end of the expenditures. If we do not pass the $7,000,000,000 bond bill that is now in another body before next Tuesday the chances are that we will be forced into extra session to raise money to save this Government from an actual deficit, from actual embarrassment in the payment of its obligations incurred during the year. It may be that we will have to come back and devise a new system of taxation. When witnesses came before the committee insisting that they should be relieved of taxes we asked if they were in favor of the war. They said they were. Many of them were merchants who were charging the highest prices ever paid by mortal man. It was an incident of the war. We asked them if they thought it was patriotic to seek to avoid taxes, and everyone of them said no, but they thought this or that particular kind of tax was obnoxious. There was scarcely a man in private life, in corporate life, or in public life who did not feel that his particular ox was being gored. Under these conditions these so-called luxury taxes went into the revenue bill. Now, gentlemen in power in the committee and in the administration are hearing from the country that the tax is obnoxious. It is probably not a good tax to go before the country on. So the so-called luxury taxes are to come down. If the $80,000,000 to be raised in this way is needed, the incoming Congress will have the responsibility of raising it. I am not so sure but that we will have to raise it. It is another case of dumping the responsibility.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Why did they not dump it over before the election?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because the administration said there was a necessity for it before election. They said they needed the money then because they had spent the money. This was a case of getting the war money back. I am not too anxious to tax the people, but I am not afraid as a Representative or as a Republican, when I have voted to incur obligations, to vote to get the money somewhere to pay those obligations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Was not this bill passed by the House with this provision in it before election?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think so.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then that does not look as though we were afraid of that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill was passed when the President of the United States, whom the gentleman has been following loyally, and when his Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. LINTHICUM. And I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has followed him somewhat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This was passed when the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury, who spent more money than he could collect and who has turned over his great responsibility to a successor, were telling us that unless we got this money the country would go to the demnition bow wows. We had to provide the ways and means to meet the administration's war demands.

It may be that our President and our Secretary of the Treasury, who has gone, are getting wise to the fact that it is unpopular to tax articles of consumption, but they started it. I do not propose to let you get from under without assuming your share of the responsibility. I do not propose to let you unload the burden upon the Republican Party without telling you about it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If we do not pass the bond bill, it is because the Republicans in the Senate do not allow us.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not think so; you have control in the Senate. There are more Democratic votes in the Senate than Republican votes, and you have the power to pass the bill now; but your leaders in the Senate are not in close juxtaposition with the President. There are some belonging to the Democratic Party who seem to have no desire to get the bill through. You should go to your Senators—you should go to them and tell them to pass that loan bill in order that your debts may be paid, and paid before the Republicans come in——

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And here is the young war horse from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman answer me this, all right?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not deny New York if I yield to Maryland.

Mr. CALDWELL. Are you very sorry?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For what?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make this suggestion to gentlemen on this side of the House: We have been waiting a long time to call up an election case where the contestant is a Republican and it was agreed that we would take up that case to-day. Gentlemen on the committee who worked hard on the case ought to have a reasonable length of time to present their views. They are men who seldom come before the House and make speeches and I wondered—there is no controversy, as far as I know—if we could not close debate and dispose of the joint resolution and go to the contested-election case.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was about to ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 28, 1919:

H. R. 13035. An act to amend section 4 of Chapter V of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive;

S. J. Res. 198. Joint resolution to suspend the legal requirements of assessment work on mining claims in Alaska for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, and extending to that Territory the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, and public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF BRITT AGAINST WEAVER.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the contested-election east of Britt against Weaver, and I would like to inquire of gentlemen on the other side representing the committee whether or not we could have an agreement as to the time to be occupied in the consideration of this case.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the record of this case is a very voluminous record of very fine type. I assume we ought to have as much as is possible for the House to give. I think we should have at least five or six hours.

Mr. GORDON. On a side?

Mr. DOWELL. On both sides.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. May I inquire of the gentleman how many speeches he expects to have delivered on that side?

Mr. DOWELL. We expect to have about four speeches I know of now.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there will probably be four or five speeches on this side. Now, I dislike very much to take up the time of the House under the circumstances in which it is placed to consider the dry details of an election case, but I know of no more important duty that the House has to determine than this, and I believe the House will not only be justified but it is the duty of the House to give due consideration to the merits of this case. I therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, that two and a half hours be accorded to each side of this case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that two and a half hours be allowed to each side for the consideration of this election contest.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. One half of the time to be at the disposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] the ranking Member on that side, and the other half by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Let me make this suggestion: And at the end of that time the gentleman from Iowa shall have leave to offer a substitute resolution and the previous question be considered as ordered upon the resolution and the substitute.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I accept the suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that debate upon this contest be limited to five hours, two and a half hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and two and a half by the gentleman from Iowa, and that after that time the gentleman from Iowa be permitted to offer a substitute resolution, and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the two resolutions until final disposition. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but there are a number of very important matters here to be disposed of. That will carry the House until after 6 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Florida—that an objection will not limit time; it will only extend it, because the only effect of this is to order the previous question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It may not and it may. I was going to ask, Mr. Speaker—this case has been pending here a long time, and it seems to me the report should have been taken up earlier; but here are a number of very important matters that have to be disposed of. For instance, one matter I have here is to provide hospital accommodations for these boys who are coming home. There are absolutely none now, and 15,000 of them now ask for accommodations and can not get them. Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me Members are pretty familiar with this case and the testimony is in print. I do not believe that any of these speeches are going to have very much effect about changing the minds of the Members of the House who have read the testimony. Now, why could not this matter be limited to, say, three hours? It does seem to me that in an hour and a half on a side these gentlemen can present the salient facts to the House, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon five hours.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that has already been agreed upon between the two sides, and gentlemen have arranged their speeches accordingly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the trouble; everything has been agreed upon and fixed before any request is made.

Mr. MANN. One of the reasons here is to close the debate at the end of the time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for two and a half hours.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], out of the time allotted to him, may have the privilege of yielding to the contestant time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that out of the time allotted to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] he be authorized to yield to the contestant, Mr. Britt. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] is recognized for two and a half hours.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] suggested a few moments ago that the record in this case was familiar to the Members of the House. I was very much encouraged to hear that statement from the gentleman, because, if I may assume it to be a fact, I shall be very greatly relieved from the duty which I have undertaken to impose upon myself in this case. I know how hard it is, gentlemen, in the midst of the congestion which prevails at this time, to call your attention away from matters in which you are vitally interested to the dry details of a contested-election case. And yet in equity and good conscience I do not know of any question which can present itself to the Members of this House which is more important and more lasting in its effects upon the character of this assembly. I esteem it a fortunate circumstance that the question involved in this case, to my mind, at least, is a question of law and not a disputed question of fact. And in the determination of this legal question your committee thinks that you will have adjudicated this case upon its merits.

The case here for your consideration is whether or not under the statute of North Carolina a ballot not marked in strict accordance with the directions of the statute is a legal ballot. There are some ninety-odd of these ballots involved in this case. They are referred to in the record as "unmarked ballots." If those ninety and odd ballots are valid and legal under the State laws, then, according to the judgment of your committee, the contestee, Mr. Weaver, is entitled to a seat in this body. If the so-called "unmarked ballots" involved in this testimony are not legal ballots, then, in the judgment of your committee, the contestant was entitled to a seat in this body and should have been given the certificate of election.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Were all of the so-called "unmarked ballots" duly considered by the committee in making this decision? Perhaps that is not quite clear. I am advised that in this particular county there were 28 voting districts, in either one of which there were numerous unmarked ballots; that the election reviewing board selected certain of the districts, namely, 5, in which they counted the unmarked ballots, and by so doing gave a majority to Mr. Weaver; but they did not count similarly unmarked ballots in others of the 23 voting districts. Is that correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to have that cleared up, then. I understood that was what had been the case.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that when I come to that detail I will endeavor to apprise him of what facts appear to be proven to the committee on that subject. The statement which he has made is subject to many qualifications. I might say in passing to the gentleman that out of the ninety-odd unmarked ballots covered by the report of the committee in this case only 33 were involved in the proceedings to which he makes reference.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. I would like to know what you mean by an "unmarked ballot"?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman proceed to make his argument without interruption. I should like to have a clear statement of the case.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman will permit me, I think we might as well have a definition first, so that we can understand what is being talked about.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Let the gentleman proceed, and perhaps the gentleman from Illinois will understand what he means. The gentleman from Virginia is a very clear lawyer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Gentlemen, what is meant by the "unmarked ballot" under the State law is this: They have no Australian ballot in the State of North Carolina. They have no general ticket in the State of North Carolina. The voter goes to the polls and asks for a ticket. He is handed a ticket. Under their law there is a separate ticket for every class of officers voted for in the election. There is a separate ballot for State officers; a separate ballot for county officers; a separate ballot for township officers; a separate ballot for Members of Congress; and a separate ballot for each political party with respect to all these officers. Under the laws of North Carolina prior to the year 1915 the only requirements as to the ballot were that it should be printed or written on white paper, and the size of the same should be prescribed by the State board of elections. In that year the legislature undertook to legalize primary elections, and in a long statute embracing many sections one was incorporated, namely, section 32, which provided in substance that opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted for at the general election there should be placed a small square, and the choice of the voter should be indicated by making a cross mark in that square opposite the name of the candidate for whom he desired to vote. That was a primary-election law.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. GRIFFIN. May I ask whether that is true, even though there were only one name on the ballot?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I was trying to expound to the House the requirement of the statute, which was without any qualification, that opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted at the general election there should be placed a square, and the choice of the voter should be indicated by placing a cross mark in the square opposite the name of the candidate for which he desired to vote. It must be perfectly obvious to the House that that requirement of this primary law was intended to apply to a general ticket in a general election. Now, it so turned out that the general-election law made no provision for any such general ticket; but, on the contrary, when the congressional election was held the only ticket which confronted the voter as to Congress were two separate ballots, one headed "Republican ticket," upon which was printed the name of James J. Britt and opposite his name a square, and which ballot carried the statement printed by the State board of elections to this effect, "To vote this ticket make a cross mark in the square." Now, likewise, there was a Democratic ticket, headed "Democratic ticket," and "For Representative for Congress in the tenth North Carolina district, Zebulon Weaver," and opposite his name a square, and incorporated in the body of the ticket, "To vote this ticket make a cross mark in the square." There were two separate ballots, the Republican ballot printed upon one slip of paper, the Democratic ballot printed on another slip of paper.

Now, these ballots were presented to the voters when they presented themselves at the polls, with only one name upon each, and the voter took the ballot and handed it to the judge of the election who kept the box, to be deposited in the box, or he put the ballot in the box himself, which he had the right to do under the State law. It was a separate ballot box. There were five ballot boxes in use at that particular election in November, 1916. There was a box for the presidential electors, a box for the State officers, a box for the county officers, a box to receive the ballots for township officers, and a box for congressional candidates.

It turned out that upward of 36,000 people voted in that election, and, with this direction printed on the face of the ballot by the State board of election to the effect that a cross mark must be placed in this square, it happened that nearly all of these 36,000 voters followed the directions of the State board of elections and placed the cross mark in the square opposite the candidate's name. But it also transpired that when the returns were fully inspected it was found that there were ninety-odd electors who had not been careful enough to place the cross mark in the square opposite the candidate's name, and when the canvassing boards came to review these returns——

Mr. KEARNS. Were these ballots on separate pieces of paper?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman, as I tried to make it plain before, that these ballots were on separate pieces of paper headed "Democratic" and "Republican," each with one name thereupon, and placed in a separate ballot box.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Did this regulation of the State board provide that no ballots should be counted except those marked according to the State regulations?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The State board of elections had no such authority. It could not have undertaken to pass on the validity of the ballot. Under the North Carolina law the only function to be performed by the State board of elections, in regard to this point, was to prescribe the size of the ballot.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would like to know if the law prescribed the form of the ballot as well as the size?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The State law provided that the ballot should be printed or written, or partly in writing and partly printed, on white paper, and the law devolved upon the State board of elections the duty to prescribe the size of the ballot.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. I did not catch what the gentleman said in reference to the 90 electors complained of. Did they leave off the cross mark in voting?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Out of these thirty-six thousand and over ballots cast in that election there were some ninety-odd on which the cross mark was not placed in the square opposite the name of the candidate.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is a separate ballot box for each candidate for Congress; that is, a box in which is deposited the Democratic ballots and one in which is deposited Republican ballots?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No.

Mr. AYRES. All these ballots were deposited in one box?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; in the congressional box.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. The gentleman spoke of the printed directions. Were the instructions to the voters prescribing that the ballots should be marked in the square prescribed by the laws of North Carolina?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No.

Mr. GORDON. Then the board of elections had no right to prescribe such a regulation.

Mr. ALMON. Where was that instruction placed?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It was printed on the face of the ballot.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I think it possible that the gentleman has already stated it, but it is not clear in my mind. Were the Democratic and Republican ballots all put in the same box? And if they were on the same ballot, how would the voter be given a ballot? Would a Republican be given a Republican ballot, and a Democrat be given a Democratic ballot?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Under the election laws of the State the State board of elections sends out the tickets, and they go to the county boards, and they distribute them to the election officers in the different precincts. The Republican ballots are distributed among the Republican election officers, and the Democratic ballots among the Democratic election officers, and when the voter comes up he gets his ballot from the Republican judge if he is a Republican, and a Democratic voter gets his ballot from a Democratic judge.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman be permitted to present his argument in his own way without interruptions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is up to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; but let the gentleman make it short.

Mr. KEARNS. In this particular State a man must vote, then, for all Republicans or for all Democrats? Is that true?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No.

Mr. KEARNS. That is a question I want to know about. They are on separate ballots and all the ballots are handed to a man?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The Republican judge will have the Republican ballots, and if I am a Republican I walk up to him and ask for a Republican ticket.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the voter himself ask for a Britt ticket or a Weaver ticket?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No. He goes to the Republican judge and asks for a Republican ticket, or he goes to the Democratic judge and asks for a Democratic ticket.

Mr. KEARNS. Suppose he wants to vote a mixed ticket?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. He can do that. He can go to a Democratic judge and get Democratic tickets if he wants to vote for other candidates who are not Republicans.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I think the gentleman should set us right at the outset as to the method of procedure. Then we will understand the gentleman better. Is an identifying mark put upon the printed ballot by the judge to distinguish that ballot from the unvoted ballot? What I mean is, does the judge put a mark upon the ballot, identifying it as a ballot which has been voted, or in other words, used, or is an unvoted ballot left in the possession of the judge, identical with the ballot that goes into the box?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is no identifying mark placed on the ballot. The fact that it is deposited in the box is the only proof that the law requires of its identity.

Mr. JUUL. It does not require identification as a ballot that has been voted?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one brief question?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is the law as printed on page 3 of the minority views a correct statement of the law?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. What statement does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. TILSON. On page 3 of the minority report it says "the law was as follows," and then follows a statement purporting to be the law. Is that correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I have not read it, but I take it that it is.

Mr. KEARNS. Let us have it read, so that we will know what the law is.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am going to read it in time.

Gentlemen, I was undertaking to say that there were ninety-odd of these ballots cast at that election that were found in the congressional ballot box on which no cross mark appeared in the square opposite the candidate's name.

The question that your committee had to determine, and the question which this House has to determine, is whether or not those particular ballots were valid and should be counted in this contest. The House must be familiar with the general rule of law that a provision in a statute of this character may be mandatory or it may be merely directory. Courts and text writers have undertaken to find some rule applicable to questions of this sort, and I think we can draw from the decisions of courts and from text writers and from the precedents of this House a principle which ought to be satisfactory and conclusive of the questions involved in this case.

The statute to which reference has been made by the gentleman from Connecticut, and the substance of which I have undertaken already to state to you, reads as follows:

That opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted at the general election shall be a small square, and the vote for any candidate shall be indicated by marking a cross mark, thus (×), in the square, and no voter shall vote for more than one candidate for any office. But there shall also be a large circle opposite the names of each party's candidate on each ticket, and printed instructions on said ticket that a vote in such large circle shall be a vote for each and all of the candidates of the various officers of the particular party, the names of whose candidates are opposite said circle, and if a voter in a general election indicates by a cross in such large circle his purpose to vote the straight and entire ticket of any party, his vote shall be counted for all the candidates of such party for the offices for which they are candidates, respectively, as indicated on such ticket.

Now, the question is whether that provision of the North Carolina statute is a mandatory provision or whether it be merely directory.

Judge Cooley lays down this rule for the purpose of determining such a question:

Those directions which are not of the essence of the thing to be done, but which are given with a view merely to the proper, orderly, and prompt conduct of the business, and by a failure to obey which the rights of those interested will not be prejudiced, are not commonly to be regarded as mandatory; and if the act is performed, but not in the time or in the precise mode indicated, it may still be sufficient, if that which is done accomplishes the substantial purpose of the statute. (Constitutional limitations, p. 113, and the following cases from State courts: Odiorne v. Rand, 59 N. H., 504; Pond v. Negus, 3 Mass., 230; Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt., 276; Colt v. Eves, 12 Conn., 243; People v. Hartwell, 12 Mich., 508; Edmonds v. James, 13 Tex., 52; People v. Tompkins, 64 N. Y., 53; State v. Baltimore Commissioners, 29 Md., 516; Fry v. Booth, 19 Ohio, 25; Slayton v. Halings, 7 Ind., 144.)

And relative to the construction of election laws in particular, the same author says:

Every ballot should be complete in itself and ought not to require extrinsic evidence to enable the election officers to determine the voter's intention. Perfect certainty, however, is not required in these cases. It is sufficient if an examination leaves no reasonable doubt upon the intention, and technical accuracy is not required in any case. The cardinal rule is to give effect to the intention of the voter, wherever it is not left in uncertainty, etc. * * * A great constitutional privilege—the highest under the Government—is not to be taken away on a mere technicality, but the most liberal intendment should be made in support of the elector's action wherever the application of the common-sense rules which are applied in other cases will enable us to understand and render it effective. (Idem, pp. 914 and 920.)

The rule laid down by Judge Cooley is supported by decisions in nearly every State of the Union.

The report of the committee cites a dozen or more of these decisions. Mr. McCrary, who was once a distinguished Member of this House from the State of Iowa, in endeavoring to elucidate a rule applicable to the same subject matter, uses the following language:

The language of the statute construed must be consulted and followed. If the statute expressly declares any part of an act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission shall render an election void, all courts whose duty it is to enforce such statutes must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits or affects the result of the election or not. Such a statute is imperative, and all considerations touching its policy or impolicy must be addressed to the legislature. But if, as in most cases, the statute simply provides that certain acts or things shall be done, within a particular time or in a particular manner, and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do, and directory if they do not, affect the actual merits of the election. * * * The principle is that irregularities which do not tend to affect the results are not to defeat the will of the majority; the will of the majority is to be respected even when irregularly expressed. (McCrary on Elections, pp. 93 and 94; and see to the same effect Tucker v. Com., 20 Penn. St. R. 493.)

I do not suppose this House ever had a chairman of the Election Committee more careful in his work than Mr. McCall, of Massachusetts, who was chairman in the Fifty-fourth Congress. In a very well-known report in the case of Yost against Tucker, which came from my own State, cited in II Hinds' Precedents, section 1077, Mr. McCall, on the part of his committee, made a report, which was adopted by the House, and in which he used the following language in discussing the subject we have under review:

Where the intention of the voter is clear, the ballot will not be rejected for faulty marking by the voter unless a law undoubtedly mandatory so prescribes.

"Where the intention of the voter was not in doubt the House followed the rule of the Kentucky court and declined to reject a ballot because not marked strictly within the square required by the State ballot law." (Moss v. Rhea, II Hinds' Precedents, section 1121.)

In many election cases which have come to this House it has counted ballots erroneously rejected because of a mistake of law on the part of election officers, and as cases in point I would cite the attention of the House to the case of Sessinghaus against Frost, Forty-seventh Congress, Hinds' Precedents, Volume II, section 975.

But it so happens in regard to this particular question we do not have to rely upon the precedents of the House. We do not have to rely upon the pronouncements of text writers. We do not have to rely upon the opinions of courts in other jurisdictions. The Supreme Court of the State of North Carolina, construing this very language in this statute in a proceeding instituted by the contestant, made the following deliverance:

If the matter was properly before us and we had jurisdiction to decide it, we would hold as to the congressional ticket which has only one name on it that all unmarked ballots ought to be counted for the respective candidates, because the purpose of the election is to ascertain the will of the voter, and the marking of the ballot can only serve a useful purpose in ascertaining this will when there are more names than one upon the ballot. (See Britt v. Board of Canvassers, 172 N. C., p. 797.)

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will it inconvenience the gentleman to respond to a question at this point?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I hope it will not.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have understood that a large number of ballots in this county were destroyed immediately after the election, and were not obtainable for any purpose within a few days after the election. Can the gentleman advise the House how many such ballots there were destroyed, in how many districts, and what evidence there was as to unmarked ballots in those districts where the ballots were completely destroyed, and can he advise us why they were destroyed?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. When I come to deal with the facts in this case I will endeavor to answer the gentleman's question. I am now trying to discuss the legal proposition, and when I have concluded that phase of the case I will address myself to the facts concerning which his question is put.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I did not follow the gentleman in reading the supreme court decision of the State, but do I understand the supreme court based its opinion on this fact, that since there was only one man's name on the printed ballot the ballots must have been handed by the voters to the election officer, and consequently the 90 that had not been marked must have been handed to the officer and must have been deposited in the ballot box?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The supreme court assumed that the ballot in question was cast by a qualified voter and was properly in the box. The judgment of the supreme court is based on that assumption.

Mr. KEARNS. And it must have been a Democrat, because he had the ballot in hand.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is no question about a Democrat or a Republican. Some of these unmarked ballots were Republican and some Democratic.

Mr. KEARNS. He was the man he wanted to vote for if he counted him, or he would not have had the ballot in hand.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not possible that the legal construction would open the door entirely to fraud for this reason? If it does, it is abhorrent to law, no matter whether the intent of the voter is expressed or not. The man goes to the judge and says, "I am a Republican and I want a Republican ticket." The judge gives him the ticket, he puts a cross mark on, which identifies him with the vote, and it is put in the Republican box. When the Democrat presents himself he goes through the same ceremony with the Democratic judge. Now, if we do not restrict the counting of the votes to those that are marked with a check, what is to prevent a disreputable judge, or a disreputable Republican, or a dishonest judge from slipping unmarked ballots ad libitum into the box?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I would like to respond to the gentleman from Minnesota, but he is continually dealing with facts and I am trying to confine myself to the legal principles.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It certainly has a legal bearing if the contention of the gentleman opens the door to fraud.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If Judge Cooley thought it was illegal——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He never passed upon any such situation.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I have endeavored to show what Judge Cooley thought was the proper legal rule and what Mr. McCrary thought was a safe rule of construction.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think that is a proper inference at all from the decisions quoted.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The House by its precedents established the rule that when the intention of the voter was plain on the face of the ballot, the ballot should not be invalidated by reason of failure to properly mark it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman's contention is absolutely correct in that particular, but it is not what I am trying to call attention to. If the method the gentleman states opens the door to fraud, will not that fact prevent its being a legal method? I understand that neither Judge Cooley nor the judge down there passed on that.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will turn aside from my argument and endeavor to close the door to fraud which seems to be open in the mind of the gentleman from Minnesota. There is no official ballot of North Carolina, as I have stated. Thousands are printed by the State board of elections and sent through the country, frequently through unofficial sources. Two or three times as many ballots are sent to the polls as are required by the voters in the election. In the ordinary course of things the voter would present himself to the judge and get a ticket, but the record disclosed the fact that frequently the officers of election having the tickets in custody would give out bunches of them to party workers. Republican Party workers had tickets in their possession at the polls, and Democratic Party workers had tickets in their possession at the polls, and the only thing in the world that saved the ballots from the perpetration of the fraud which the gentleman has in mind was that when the voter came to the polls with the ticket in hand and offered to vote the election officers looked to see if he had more than a single ticket and ascertain if he was a qualified voter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was the further protection that the clerk of election took down the names on the poll book and you could not have more ballots than you had names on the poll books.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I was coming to that; that was contemporaneous with the act of the voter.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That was the question I was going to ask. In this election did the number of names tally with the number of ballots counted in these precincts?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I can not answer that question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was any point made on it?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No question of that kind has arisen that I am aware of.

Now, returning to the legal proposition involved, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is nothing in the statutes of North Carolina which prescribes that a failure on the part of the elector to put that cross mark in the square shall invalidate the ballot. I do not see the gentleman from Connecticut in his seat, but I want to tell him that. That section of the primary election law contains every word with reference to the marking of the ballots. It was a primary law that the legislature was trying to enact. I have no idea upon the face of the earth that the legislature ever thought about the general election in enacting that statute. In fact, if gentlemen will take the time to read the primary law they will see from the whole text that it never was intended to apply to a general election. The section was evidently taken from a statute of some State in which there was a general ticket; it refers to a general ticket—that is, a ticket upon which the names of candidates generally were printed. But when this election came to be held it was found that no general ticket was to be used.

When this election came on in November, 1916, there was not a ballot to which that section of the primary law could by any possibility of reason have applied. Here was a slip of paper headed "Republican congressional ticket," on which the name of the contestant appeared. The testimony showed the ticket to have been 3 inches long and perhaps 2 inches wide. Another ticket of similar dimensions, upon which the name of the contestee appeared, was headed "Democratic congressional ticket." The voter got his ticket, folded it up, and went to the judge of election and handed it to him to put in the box or he stepped up to the box and put it in himself.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I am wondering, if this section of the law just quoted refers only to primary elections, whether the gentleman does not think the insertion of it in this report can only tend to confuse the House rather than to clear things up?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The State of North Carolina has nothing in its constitution which prevents the amendment of a general election law in this way. In the State of Virginia the constitution prescribes that no bill shall have more than one object, and that that object shall be expressed in the title. In that State, therefore, no such act as this could have been effective for any purpose.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman says the Supreme Court of North Carolina has passed on this proposition construing this particular law to which he has just referred.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I have read the language of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and if the gentleman followed me closely he must have seen that the court said that if it had jurisdiction to try this question and if it were properly before it, it would hold that all of these unmarked ballots should have been counted for the respective candidates for whom they were cast. In other words, that the provision of the statute was not mandatory.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The court said that it did not have jurisdiction, that the case was not before it, but that if it had jurisdiction and if the case were before it, then it would hold so and so. Of just how much value is that kind of a decision of any court on earth?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I shall permit the gentleman to ask a question, but would prefer to hear his argument later.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I notice that the result of this election was changed by a supplemental canvass in one county.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am coming to that.

Mr. REED. It was admitted that the State authorities did recognize this condition in the primary election law as applying to the general election law.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. This provision of the statute the State board of elections in North Carolina construed I think improperly, your committee thought improperly, and so thought the supreme court of the State.

The construction of the State board of elections, however, appears to have been accepted by the managers of both political parties in the district and was evidently accepted by the great bulk of the voters. But I will say to the gentleman from West Virginia that we are not concerned about the legal opinion of the State board of elections in North Carolina. We are not concerned to know how the contestant construed the statute nor specially concerned how the contestee construed it. What it does concern us to know, however, is whether these ninety-odd voters in North Carolina who possess the legal qualifications of electors should have themselves disfranchised by an improper construction of the law of their State. That is the question submitted to us. There is nothing in the statute itself which makes a ballot voted in this way invalid. Under the rule laid down by Judge Cooley, under the rule laid down by Mr. McCrary, under the precedents of this House, where the statute itself did not make the language mandatory, neither courts nor Congress would be justified in holding it so unless it concerned the essence of the election itself. It must be obvious to the House that the sole purpose of placing this cross mark in the square was to indicate the intention of the voter.

That was the sole purpose. There could have been no other. And where the ticket handed to the judge of election contained but one name I ask, in the name of common sense, how any doubt could arise as to the voter's intent? And if no doubt arose as to the voter's intent how can it be said that the placing of this cross mark in the square on the ballot concerned in any manner the essence or the merits of the election?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Would it not have been the same thing if they had demanded that the ballot be folded in three folds in order to vote?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If the law had said that the ballot should be folded in three folds, it would have had just as much to do with the merits of this case as it did to say that the cross mark should be put opposite a man's name when there was but one name on the paper.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What connection could there be between the way a ballot or a blank piece of paper is folded and the expression of intent on the part of the voter? The folding of the ballot does not express intent.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Exactly the same connection that there is between putting a cross mark opposite the name of the gentleman from Minnesota if it were printed in plain black type on that paper and no other name than his appeared upon it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not quite agree with the gentleman, but I would like to ask a question. As I understand, the North Carolina statute contains no provisions relative to how a ballot must be marked, how it must be deposited, or how it shall be counted. Am I correct in that?

My understanding, from the gentleman's statement of the North Carolina law, is this: It does not specify how ballots shall be marked, not even how they shall be printed.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Printed on white paper.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Except printed on white paper and of a certain kind, not how it shall be deposited nor how it shall be counted?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It says deposited by the voter himself or the judge of election.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; with that correction. Now, manifestly they must leave to somebody, some regulation, to say how the ballot shall be marked and how counted?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. How it shall be counted?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, canvassed.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The North Carolina election law is full and complete as to canvassing the vote. I am now trying to ascertain whether or not this vote had the right to go in the ballot box in this shape; and having settled that, I will try to help him count it thereafter.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not trying to count now. I am trying to find out in reference to how the voter can place his intent upon the ballot.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Simply by getting the ballot and putting it in the box.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Your election officer of the State of North Carolina construed the law to be that the man had to mark it or else he would not have put it in.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The State board of elections.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. All but 90 out of 37,000 did. I assume that that is true throughout North Carolina. For how long had it been the practice or how long had the State election board required that this marking should be had?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. This is the first congressional election held after the new primary law; and I will say to the gentleman, while it has nothing to do with the merits of this case, that after this experience the succeeding general assembly repealed section 32 of the statute, and it is no longer a part of the law of that State.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to this fact, that the State board of elections, when it met officially at Raleigh to decide upon the tickets, as an official body determined that the congressional ticket would have to be marked, and that was never changed officially.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They had required it?

Mr. WEAVER. They left one Republican member and one Democratic member to get out the tickets.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. A marvelous situation, it seems to me, where the voter can express his intent by voting for State and county officers one way, but when he is voting for a congressional office he can express his intent in an entirely different way. Of course, that statement condemns it; it can not be the law.

Mr. WEAVER. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that this board decided officially—decided in that way about it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Under the Australian ballot system, with which we are all familiar, the names of the different candidates are all, as a rule, printed on one ballot?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It is a general ticket, they call it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is also afforded under this system some distinguishing method by which the voter can indicate his choice in these names. In some States the voter marks out all the names except the one of his choice. In other States a cross mark is put by the one for whom it is desired to vote. In all the statutes under this system there is some method prescribed by which the voter indicates the particular candidate for whom he wishes to vote. This marking has nothing to do with preventing fraud. It is merely for the purpose of indicating the candidate of the voter's choice. Now, as I understand what the gentleman stated in this connection, so far as these particular ballots were concerned, there was but one name on the ballot.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Having that in mind I wish to ask a question that is suggested by the remarks which preceded what I am saying in this connection. How would a cross mark opposite the name of a certain candidate, whether Mr. Britt in one case, or Mr. Weaver in the other case, in any wise prevent fraud, or in any wise identify the ballot as an official ballot?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I know of no way by which frauds could have been prevented or eliminated in any way by marking the ballot.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am in a measure asking a question that has been partly answered, but how would a voter more strongly indicate his purpose to vote for a particular candidate than by depositing in the box a ballot carrying the single name of that candidate?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the judge of elections, under the North Carolina law, would have had no right to inspect a ballot of the voter when he came up to vote, except for the purpose of seeing whether he voted more than one ballot.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is the same as the Virginia law.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That being true, the disreputable character figuring in the imagination of my friend from Minnesota could not have been stopped at the edge of the ballot box by any mere cross mark on his ballot——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. One more question. As I understand the statement of the gentleman, but for this section that appears in the primary law, there would be no question whatever about this case.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. None whatever.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Hence it is a question of interpreting, so far as this body is concerned, that section.

The board of canvassers, not a judicial body certainly, nor standing on the same plane as five judges of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, undertook to interpret that section and misinterpreted it, according to the chairman of the committee. But five judges of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, not sitting as a court——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. They were sitting as a court.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So far as this question is concerned they were not passing upon it as a court, but passing judgment on same as five individual lawyers, composing the Supreme Court of North Carolina. In the latter capacity they opposed their judgment to the judgment of the canvassers. Is that correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is a fair statement.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then certainly the judgment of these five judges construing this section is more persuasive than the judgment of the canvassers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the law of North Carolina is there a statute providing that the ballots will be invalidated if they have distinguishing marks on them?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir; there is not.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The fact, then, of either marking or not marking the ballot has nothing to do with the distinguishing feature?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The sole purpose was to indicate the intention of the voter; who he desired to vote for.

Mr. HARDY. Right in that connection, was it not really to draw the distinction as to which candidate when there was more than one on the ticket——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It goes back to the same question of what was the intention of the voter when he cast his ballot.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The purpose of the Australian ballot statute was to preserve the secrecy and purity of the ballot, and one of the essentials was that there should not be anything to distinguish one man's ballot from another man's ballot.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is no such provision in North Carolina.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Referring to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], would it not have some bearing upon the reason for marking the ballot, as a matter of right and equity? If a ballot has any distinguishing marks upon it, under, for instance, the law of most States that would be an illegal ballot. Now, one of the best ways I could imagine for putting a distinguishing mark on the ballot would be not to mark it at all.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If they were all marked.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. If it was required to be marked or if the general practice was to have them marked, a corrupt boss, for instance, in a locality could say, "I will deliver you 90 votes." "How am I to know that I get the votes?" "I will say to my voters not to mark the ballot."

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is no such requirement in North Carolina.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Would not that be one way to practically insure the delivery of fraudulent votes?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. As far as I am aware, the statute had no relation to the subject of fraudulent voting whatever.

I stopped awhile ago with the proposition that there is nothing in the statute of North Carolina expressly invalidating a ballot of this sort; that there could have been no practical purpose in the requirement of the statute except to indicate the intention of the voter. I submit, therefore, that under the legal principles I have endeavored to present we are bound to hold that this provision of the statute is directory merely and never was intended to be mandatory; and that it would be a hardship and an injustice if we were to require that these 90 electors in the tenth North Carolina district should be disfranchised because of their failure to follow merely formal requirement of State law.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. FIELDS. In regard to the intention of the voter, the fact that the voter called for a ballot, which ballot contained the name of one candidate only, was regarded by the committee, as I understand it, as evidence of the voter's intention to vote for that candidate?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That was the view of the committee. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has suggested, discussing the facts in this case, that he had understood that after these ballots were voted and after they were canvassed they were destroyed. I wish to say to him that there has never been any provision of the North Carolina election law requiring the preservation of the ballots after they are canvassed. Not only were these ballots destroyed, but every one of the 36,000 others cast in this contest were destroyed, as far as this evidence shows. If I were to go down to that district and try to recount the ballots that were cast in that election I would not know where to find more than 9 of them out of 36,000, and that would be in the precinct of Tryon, in the county of Polk, where they did tie up 9 of these unmarked ballots and put them in a box and saved them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If I may be allowed to make an inquiry, and differentiate, if my information is correct, is it not a fact that the ballots in this county, in these voting districts, were destroyed before they were destroyed anywhere else in the State? Is it not a fact that they were destroyed before the canvassing board had completed its work?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is not a scintilla of evidence to support that in this record that I know of.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Another question. The election occurred on the 7th of November. When did the canvassing board make its final return in this district?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The gentleman has in mind some particular precinct or county. I am discussing the whole congressional district. Nobody has picked out any districts here except the gentleman himself.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman knows that there were unmarked ballots elsewhere in the district not counted at all. Everybody else knows.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the House that the committee in this report has endeavored to deal with every single unmarked ballot that they could find satisfactory evidence of the existence of in the whole district.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That may be true, but whether the unmarked ballots besides these were ever destroyed or not, or ever found, did not the canvassing board hold back the returns from this county until the 17th of November?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The gentleman evidently has some county in his mind—the county of Buncombe?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; Buncombe County.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. And the gentleman forgets that there were 13 counties in the district, and the ballots involved in the Buncombe controversy were a comparatively small fraction of the whole.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In Buncombe County did they not hold back until the 17th of November, and at that time were not all the ballots destroyed in that county?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that the canvassing boards met on the second day after election, November 9, 1916. In every county seat in that district but one, so far as I am advised, the canvassing boards completed their duties on the 9th of November, the second day after election; and in the county of Buncombe, to which the gentleman has referred, the board assembled on the 9th of November, and on account of a controversy which arose as to these very unmarked ballots, that board did not complete its duties until the 16th or 17th of November. That is the fact, so far as the record of the case discloses.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And at the time they made the final report were not the ballots under their jurisdiction destroyed?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I think the record shows not a single suggestion that any ballot anywhere, marked or unmarked, in that county was preserved one single moment after the election officer canvassed them on the night of the election.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think that is undoubtedly correct. That corresponds exactly with my information, that by the 9th of November every ballot was destroyed.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; all over the State.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It may be, but I did not hear so. And I will say to the gentleman that my information came from a northern business man who happened to be at Asheville, who had nothing to do at the time—and he is a Democrat, by the way—and he heard of the excitement, and out of curiosity he presented himself there and stayed there day after day and watched them, and when he came back he said, "If this is the way elections are conducted in the South, then God help the South."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman, does any of that appear in the record?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Not one syllable.

Mr. BURNETT. Why is the gentleman talking about things that are not in the case?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I do not yield. I do not mean to be discourteous to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; but the gentleman from Alabama has been. The gentleman from Minnesota never stated it was in the record. He said just exactly where it came from.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether we are trying this case on rumors outside of the record or whether we are trying it on the record?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor, and if gentlemen want time they will ask the Chair to be recognized.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. So far as I know this case, there is not a single fact connected with it that ought to be kept from the House. No ballot was kept in North Carolina after it had once been canvassed, so far as I know and believe. That is not peculiar to North Carolina, however. Some of the States require that the ballots shall be burned on the night of election. It was within only comparatively recent years in my own State that the ballots were preserved after they were once canvassed.

I have not seen and I have not heard it suggested by anybody connected with this case that there was any improper destruction of a single ballot on the night of election or at any subsequent time; and, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota, further than that, that I do not understand that there is any charge of fraud connected with the conduct of an election officer on the day of election. There is nothing in the contestant's brief which charges any specific wrongdoing against the election officers in the actual conduct of the election, and there is not, so far as I know or believe, a single line or a single syllable in this testimony which shows that a human being connected with this election ever did destroy improperly or try to improperly destroy a ballot voted in this election.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question for information?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. REED. The ballots having all been destroyed, the evidence of unmarked and marked ballots comes to this contest in what way? From evidence presented by the commissioners of election?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am coming to that in a moment. There was no preservation of the ballots here—not only of the ninety-odd ballots which were unmarked and which are here in question, but no preservation of the other 36,000 upon which the title to a seat in this House rests—so that in the nature of the case, gentlemen, we could not have a recount. There is no such thing as a recount under the North Carolina law.

When we came to ascertain the facts as to these unmarked ballots we had to take the testimony of the election officers themselves and of bystanders who were conversant with the facts, and it is upon that testimony that your committee has found that ninety-odd of these unmarked ballots were cast in that election. The very nature of the case admitted of no testimony but that of the election officers and bystanders who saw those ballots when they were counted. And upon that testimony—concerning which I will say to the gentleman from West Virginia if he will read this record he will find that there is but little conflict—your committee decided that there were certainly 90 of these ballots, unmarked, cast in the election, and that a proper canvass of the same added to the other votes cast showed a majority in favor of the contestee.

The gentleman from Minnesota has adverted to the fact that the officers in Buncombe County took several days to complete their canvass; that they received supplemental and amended returns before they completed their canvass. I would not be candid with the House if I did not say, as a lawyer, that while I entertain no doubt the election officers should have returned these unmarked ballots as they returned all the other ballots cast in the election, and while I hold it was in the power of the county board of canvassers to correct and amend any defective returns of such officers, yet I do not approve of the manner in which some of the returns were sought to be corrected in this case.

I do not think the election officers at the precincts in controversy, when they attempted to make out amended returns, had any power to act separately and individually. In my view of the law, when it turned out that in their returns they had not included these unmarked ballots, the county board of canvassers should have ordered them to be reassembled; or, if they did not order them to be reassembled, having themselves judicial power and power to send for persons and papers, they ought to have summoned the election officers before themselves and required them to complete their returns in accordance with the law. But the House should remember that these people were not lawyers but laymen.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask just one more question?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Wait a moment, and then I will yield to the gentleman. But in addition to that I want to say that while I disapprove of the manner in which these returns were amended, when these election officers were put upon the stand subsequently—most of them put there by the contestant in this case—in every instance except one their testimony established the fact that the returns were amended in accordance with the facts in the case. So that while they had done the thing in an improper manner in every case but one, they had stated the facts with absolute fidelity; and in that case the amended return was sustained by a decided preponderance of the evidence.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the gentleman has reached the essential and critical feature of the case. I really have not differed with the gentleman in his construction of the law up to this point. These election officers, after the time when their returns should have been submitted and sent in, not acting as a board, but each by himself, made a supplemental return. Several of them did that. Does the gentleman think, as a lawyer, that they had a legal right to do that act; and, if they did not have a legal right, should that supplemental return have been considered; and, if it should not have been considered, should not their first report, which they made legally and according to law, stand as the record in the case?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Now, gentlemen, this question about the supplemental and amended return is purely academic, so far as this House is concerned. It does not make any difference whether the Buncombe board made a mistake or not in seeking to amend these returns. If they did make a mistake, the House is here to correct that mistake; and the question before this body now is not whether they made such mistake, for that is immaterial, but whether these voters in Buncombe County cast these ballots, and, if they did cast them, whether or not they shall be counted.

Mr. HARDY. If the facts were shown to your committee, they would have included those facts even though there were no supplemental returns?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Had the supplemental returns never been made it would have been not only the right but the duty of the committee to pass upon those unmarked ballots.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In other words, that would only affect the original certificate, and does not at all affect the merits of the case now before this House.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The question involved before the Buncombe County board of canvassers concerned solely the right to the certificate in this case, and no action of the board could have precluded the right of this House to pass upon the merits of those unmarked ballots.

Mr. BURNETT. The question before your committee and before this House is, who got the votes, is it not?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. BURNETT. And that was the matter that was proven, was it not?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is true. Now, I want to give one other fact and then I am through. In the hearings on this case the contestant sought to discredit the character of these unmarked ballots because, as he alleged, it was not known who cast them, and because further it was not known whether they were cast by qualified voters or not.

I want to say that the character of these unmarked ballots is just as good and no better, is just as bad and no better, as the character of every one of the other 36,000 ballots put in the ballot boxes. Nobody could tell to-day who cast any of these ballots, except in a few instances of the unmarked ballots, but we know just as much about the unmarked ballots as we do about those that were marked. We know just as much about who cast them as we do about who cast those that were marked. We know just as much about the qualifications of the electors who cast them as we do about the qualifications of the electors who cast the marked ballots. The only assurance the House has on this subject is that bipartisan election officers, against whose character nobody has cast suspicion, conducted the election with what seems to us to have been entire good faith. No specific charge of fraud is made against any of them, and none was proven.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to be notified when I have used 30 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The gentleman from California makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting]. Not a quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Emerson	Little	Smith, C. B.
Bankhead	Essen	Lunn	Snook

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 315 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Further proceedings were dispensed with under the call.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 617.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 14746) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table with the Senate amendments thereto, to the end that the Senate amendments be, and they hereby are, agreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendments be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that. The matter before the House, the contested-election case, is of the highest privilege. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized by the Chair and is entitled to the floor. I submit that the Committee on Rules of this House can not interrupt a question of the highest privilege with the gentleman from Iowa occupying the floor, entitled to present the minority views on the report of that committee, by a report from the Committee on Rules, even though they have a right to report at any time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall not quarrel with the gentleman about the point of order. It is true that an election contest involves matters of the very highest privilege. It is also true that the Committee on Rules has the right to report at any time, and it depends largely on the matter of recognition. Does the gentleman say that he had been recognized?

Mr. DOWELL. I had the floor when the point of no quorum was made, and I was in the very act of addressing the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can we not settle up this thing in a very good-humored way? Will the gentleman yield until we permit this, without getting into any trouble over the parliamentary situation?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, it will take just as long to dispose of this matter now as it will after the other matter has been disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the importance of this is to get the bill to conference.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman from Iowa would be warranted in yielding the floor for that purpose. It will not affect the time allotted to him.

Mr. DOWELL. How long would it take?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will not take more than a minute or two.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to dispose of this matter as early as possible.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no disposition to interfere with the gentleman in any way.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have just been going over the Indian appropriation bill. There are a large number of items, and if it goes to conference at all, it should go immediately. There is no objection to this rule. I do not think that it will take more than a minute or two.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Speaker pro tempore will appoint the conferees. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. SNYDER.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF BRITT AGAINST WEAVER.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the able argument of my friend from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] presenting the views of the majority of the committee, but that argument was not convincing. I believe there can be no doubt about the general rule with reference to the marking of ballots. Even the dictum in the case from North Carolina, referred to by the gentleman from Virginia, called specific attention to that fact—that such provisions are usually held to be mandatory.

Yet the court says in this instance that if the question had been presented to them they would have held this provision not mandatory. There are so many cases holding that it is a mandatory provision that the matter is usually disposed of by the courts with a reference that the cases are so numerous it is not necessary to cite them. In a recent case in Colorado this identical question was raised, where only one name appeared on the ballot and a written name was placed on the ballot. The courts there held that it was not in compliance with the statutes, and therefore could not be counted. That is identically the question that is in the North Carolina case, but I am not going to waste the short time I have in speaking to this legal proposition, which I believe to be absolutely sound.

I want to get directly, if I may, to that which you are interested in, viz, the facts of the case. I am ready to say at the outset that this is a clear case where the election officers proceeded to take without any excuse the certficate of election from the contestants in the case, and I think before we have completed we will be able to show you at least some very suspicious circumstances. The evidence is not only suspicious, but conclusive that there never was a fair ballot and a fair count in the tenth district of North Carolina.

First I desire to call attention to two or three of the political manipulators in this district. First, Don Elias was the general manager of the Weaver campaign. He was the chairman of the Democratic congressional committee in that district. Next I call your attention to the name of J. W. Haynes, who was the county attorney of Buncombe County. He was very active in this case. I am going to call attention to some of the things that have been done, and then I am going to ask the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle if they are going to give their indorsement to such conduct as the record in this case shows has been carried on throughout this election.

In the first place, as was stated by the gentleman from Virginia, there was a provision for the distribution of the ballots to the various precincts in the district, and in this connection

I want to call attention to a letter which this same political boss, Don Elias, wrote just before election, dated October 30, 1916, and then I shall ask what was the motive of the gentleman who wrote the letter and for what purpose did he send it. I now read from this letter:

In order that no question shall arise hereafter, in distributing the ballots I am going to make up a package of one-third of the ballots, address it to the Republican judge, one-third and address it to the Democratic judge, and one third to the Democratic registrar; then wrap the three packages in one package and deliver the whole to the Democratic registrar. He will then become my agent for the distribution of the ballots, and on election morning will open them all up and give each one his package, but they will then be in the election booth. In this way the Republicans will not get hold of the ballots until the day of election.

I am marking all of the Zebulon Weaver ballots before they are distributed, and hope you will see the same is done in Henderson County. This will eliminate any possibility of a vote being cast which is not properly marked. Our Republican brethren can mark theirs on election day when they get them.

That is a very interesting document.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time. I yield for a question.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman claim that that was fraudulent conduct on the part of this man?

Mr. DOWELL. The letter speaks for itself.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. DOWELL. I yielded only for a question because my time is so short. This letter speaks for itself. This man was the chairman of the Democratic organization in that district. When he sent that to one chairman of the county, he may have sent it to all; and they were instructed what to do so that it would not be possible that a mistake would be made and a Weaver ballot cast unmarked. That was his intention, and that is what the evidence shows was done in many of the counties of the district.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I have not the time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just for one question?

Mr. DOWELL. I am sorry that I have not the time. What else happened? This is only a starter——

Mr. GORDON. It is a mighty small starter, I think.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask gentlemen to make their speeches on the outside or wait until I get through. We tried to give the other side all of the time possible.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman mean to say, in view of so many questions having been asked Judge WATSON, that he does not intend to yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I asked Judge WATSON not to yield.

Mr. BURNETT. Many gentlemen asked him questions.

Mr. DOWELL. If I had the time, I would like to answer all the gentleman's questions.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman has not the time; all right; I wanted to understand it.

Mr. DOWELL. What is further, in every voting precinct in that district there were two Democratic judges and one Republican judge appointed by the Democratic board. They served in all of those precincts, a partisan board, and they proceeded to hold this election, and when the time came for counting the vote on the night of the 7th of November they returned the vote without unmarked ballots. In the county of Buncombe, where this chairman, Don Elias, had his domicile, there were, according to the official count, on the 9th day of November following, the 28 precincts answered, giving 288 majority for Mr. Weaver in that county. In all the other counties, as was stated by the gentleman from Virginia, they canvassed the vote on the 9th of November and adjourned and made a proper return. In Buncombe County there were 28 Democrats from the 28 precincts assembled to canvass this vote. Not a Republican had an opportunity to say one word. When it appeared that there were only 288 majority for Mr. Weaver in that county the board proceeded to prolong its proceedings and, unlike the other counties in the district, they did not adjourn, but continued in session not only that day, but the day following and the day following, and then adjourned for six more days before they finally concluded this count of this county. But in the meantime they had heard from the other counties in the district and then Don Elias gets busy on the wire. Several days before the election he had time to write, and along at 4.20 of the afternoon of the 9th, when the other counties had canvassed the vote and when the vote had been counted in Buncombe County, he then sends a wire to J. M. Carson at Rutherfordton, N. C., as follows:

Give us more than 435 votes, if possible.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

A few votes will decide.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOWELL. No; I have not the time.

Mr. PHELAN. All right.

Mr. DOWELL. That was sent at 4.20 in the afternoon by actual count. Along in the same day the colonel returned the wire:

D. S. ELIAS, Asheville, N. C.:

The vote has been canvassed and the records filed. Weaver's majority is 446. Sorry did not get your telegram earlier.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Can you gentlemen on that side of the aisle stand for elections like that?

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I have not the time. I have more of this; this is not all.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Let us have it.

Mr. DOWELL. All right, you will get it:

SOLOMON GALLERT,
Rutherfordton, N. C.—

This was 4.20 in the afternoon that the same telegram was sent to this same official—

Give Weaver more than 452 if possible.

[Laughter.]

A few votes may decide.

Listen to this, just as significant as the other; and I call upon you gentlemen to listen:

Your telegram too late. Official vote had already been canvassed.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

As though it made any difference whether this telegram came or not. "Your telegram too late." He waited until 4.20 in the afternoon, when he had found that under the count Mr. Britt had 13 majority in that district. That is why this appeal was made; that is why he came back and replied, "Too late." [Laughter on the Republican side.] That is not all; I have not started yet. [Laughter.] Then he gets on the telephone. He first uses a letter, then he telegraphs, and then he wants to find out just what the fellow is doing, so he calls up—this is Mr. Haynes, his side partner, county attorney for Buncombe County——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Buncombe.

Mr. DOWELL. Where Mr. Elias lives, and he is the chairman for the party in Buncombe County, and he gets busy on the telephone, and Haynes calls up J. S. Davis, at Waynesville, Haywood County. He is a prominent Democrat, four times a member of the general assembly from that county, and I assume that in that community he was reasonably respectable; and I want you to hear the story of this man who has been four times in the legislature of that State, and then I want to ask if you are going to stand for this. If you are, I am deceived, for I can not conceive that anybody will put the stamp of approval upon such conduct as found in this conversation over the telephone which I am going to read to you. It is in the record of this case. Mr. Davis said:

Mr. Boyd talked first, and so finally he told Mr. Haynes that Davis was there and he would answer for himself. And so I went to the phone, and the first statement he made was that the returns were in from all the counties—that is, in the congressional vote—and it showed that Britt was elected by 13 votes.

Now, this is a reputable gentleman, and he is entitled to the confidence of every Democrat on this floor.

Q. Was that what you heard?—A. That is what Mr. Haynes said to me. That is the first thing he said to me. The returns were in from all the counties, and it showed Mr. Britt was elected by 13 votes; and that he wanted the canvassing board of Haywood County to throw out the vote of the south ward of Beaverdam, as he had been informed that it was irregular, and we would be justified in throwing it out. I replied to him that the board had adjourned, and they had all gone home except the chairman and the secretary, who were completing the work; and that the count had been made and that everything was regular, and we couldn't afford to; and I went on further and stated that a hundred men knew what the vote was, and we would put ourselves in a pretty bad predicament to throw out that vote; and, in fact, the board had gone home. Then he asked me to hire automobiles and send after the board, have them reassemble, and they would pay for it—said, "We will pay for it." I protested against that; said I would not do it. Then he told me that the complexion of the next House of Representatives depended upon Weaver being seated from this district, and that the eyes of the Nation and State were upon us; that it was very important; and he asked me if I would hold—not adjourn—hold what we had until he could send a man over to confer with us. At first I refused; told him I wanted to get through that evening, and a boy was there with a buggy to drive me home. I lived 10 miles in the country, and was very anxious to get home. He said he could get this man there by 5 o'clock. I told him then that we would hold and wait for him, but there was no need of it; that as far as Haywood was concerned the vote had been counted, and that if they wanted to make any changes—any stealing to be done—it could be done in Buncombe and not in Haywood.

Then this board that had been assembled in Buncombe County adjourned until the next day, and then again on Friday they adjourned until Saturday, and then they assembled in secret session behind locked doors, in violation of the law of North Carolina—these same Democrats who were on this convassing board—and this same county attorney, J. W. Haynes, addressed them. I want to quote just a word of what he said:

This is Sumner's testimony, found on page 192. He went to the door and found it locked. He finally got in just as they were closing the meeting. Mr. Haynes took the platform and used this language:

Gentlemen, the object of this meeting is to tell you what to do and how to do it, and I have done it.

Yet the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] said that these were laymen, unaccustomed to the method of doing things, and therefore may have made a mistake. But I find they assembled there, without any authority whatever, and in the secret of that chamber Mr. Haynes, the county attorney of that county, told these men how to take that certificate from Mr. Britt and seat Mr. Weaver in this House.

Then they proceeded and went to five precincts in Buncombe County. And on the 15th or 16th or 17th, I think, when they finally adjourned, they had presented to that canvassing board five additional amended and substituted returns, including 27 unmarked ballots for Mr. Weaver and 6 for Mr. Britt. Up to this day no man has ever seen one of these mysterious unmarked ballots except the officers who testified with reference to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asked me to advise him when he had consumed 30 minutes of time.

Mr. DOWELL. I would like to use five minutes more.

The case relied upon by the gentleman from Virginia, in which he stated that they would have counted these unmarked ballots if they had been before the court under a proper case with proper jurisdiction, in the same decision made this statement:

We would also hold that what are referred to as supplemental returns ought not to have been considered if, as the plaintiff contends, they were made up after the registrar and poll holders had fully performed their duties and without calling the registrar and poll holders together.

And it was admitted everywhere that this was not done. In Leicester they counted two votes for Britt when it should have been three. In Ednaville they failed to give Britt one that we are entitled to. In Chimney Rock one man had voted there, and after he had voted and when they were counting the votes they raised the question that he was an illegal voter, and they actually took a ballot belonging to Mr. Britt out of the box and threw it away. And no one, from this record, knew how the gentleman voted, and no evidence was introduced to show that he was an illegal voter. Therefore Mr. Britt should have that vote in Chimney Rock. In Hazel they had four under the original returns. The committee themselves failed to believe the man who testified that there were four votes and reduced it to two. We think there should not have been any, because Mr. Miller, who testified in the case, said there was but one unmarked ballot cast, and the registrar, who said there were four, and the majority would not believe him, and, of course, we had no reason to do so. But there was some conflict at Hazel. The clear weight of the evidence in that case shows that Britt was entitled to one vote and Weaver was entitled to none. At Beaver Dam Britt was entitled to five, and they only gave him three. At West Asheville it was two and three instead of five and two, giving Mr. Britt nine votes upon this count.

Under this testimony, in Bushnell precinct the majority never referred to it at all, and never give credit to any one. Mr. G. S. Welch, on page 372, says that there was a Britt ballot. Mr. Nichols says that there was one unmarked ballot for Britt. Mr. Monteith, a Democratic judge, says that there was one unmarked ballot for Britt and none for Weaver. Do you tell me that we are not entitled to the testimony of both Republican and Democratic judges, when there is not a single particle of testimony to the contrary? And yet they did not find it. I do not blame them. I am not charging them with doing anything improper. I think they failed to find this vote, as they did all of the ones following. In Swannanoa, Bartlett testifies, there was an unmarked ballot, and none for Weaver. In Waynesville one unmarked ballot there. And so it was in Morgan, one unmarked ballot for Britt, which was not counted; it was thrown away. And I come to Black Mountain. I want to call your attention to it, because it was very interesting. Shelton testified that there was one Weaver ballot and two Britt ballots. That is disputed by one of the judges.

In Rutherfordton we are entitled to 2, in East Flat Rock to 1, which gives Mr. Britt under this count 19 additional votes. The one extra vote for Mr. Weaver there takes one off, which makes 18. Under their count they gave Mr. Weaver 12 majority; and under that, which is fair and correct by the weight of this testimony, under the count of the unmarked ballots. If you throw down all the bars and let everything come in, and let everybody testify, if you let every scrap of testimony come in, Mr. Britt has a majority of 7, counting the unmarked ballots.

We found there were 36 men who voted who had no legal right to vote, who cast their votes for Mr. Weaver. We also find that out of 21 voters that Mr. Britt claimed were not permitted to vote, 14 were legal voters and should have been permitted to cast their vote for Mr. Britt. Mr. Weaver has been holding his seat in this House for two years without any legal right.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DOWELL. I am through, but what is the gentleman's question?

Mr. GORDON. Do you claim there was a conspiracy to defraud here and that Mr. Weaver was a party to it?

Mr. DOWELL. No. I want to say this for Mr. Weaver: There is nothing in this record to show that Mr. Weaver did anything that was not absolutely right. [Applause.] And I want to say for him that there is not a suggestion that Mr. Weaver was a party to anything that was not honest and upright. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Another question: Why, then, did you read those letters here?

Mr. DOWELL. They were not written by Mr. Weaver.

Mr. GORDON. They had nothing to do with this case, unless he was a party to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. To whom does the gentleman from Iowa yield further time?

Mr. DOWELL. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 40 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], based his argument chiefly on the validity of the unmarked ballots, and the contention of the majority of the committee is that the unmarked ballots are valid. Surely if the unmarked ballots are not lawful and valid, then they have no case, for the reason that the supplemental report of Buncombe County was based solely on counting and adding a number of unmarked ballots.

It appears that in passing upon election cases and determining what happened it is the practice or the custom for members of committees to assume an innocent attitude, to cast aside all practical experience in politics, rather than to use that experience, that knowledge, in the interpretation and construction of what actually took place. Now, gentlemen, we have all had practical experience, more or less, in politics; some of us, and a good many, have had official dealings with it. As deputy attorney general of my State for two years I have come in contact with election frauds, and rather than set aside all this knowledge and all this experience, I shall apply it and use it in this case and see what happened.

Now by some chance—just how it happened I do not know—a provision got into the statute of the State of North Carolina providing that ballots must be marked. You can see the purpose of that. Let us go into North Carolina for a moment and see the make-up of this congressional district, or of the State of North Carolina, and see the party that was in power in the State legislature, and you can readily see the purpose of trying this provision in their election law. Does it not appear as an experiment which turned unfavorable to the dominating party? All of the enlightened States of the Union have such a provision in their election laws. It was put into the law of North Carolina in 1915. Naturally all parties interested wanted to know how that provision of the law would be construed relative to the congressional ballot, which contained but one name, and it was generally accepted, and an opinion was rendered by the attorney general of the State, that all ballots had to be marked, and there is no doubt as to the construction of the law as understood by the managers of the party of the contestee, as you have already heard from the letter read by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], the "Bo" Freeman letter, in which he stated, "We will mark our ballots, and we will let the Republicans mark theirs on the day of election," tells the tale. So that everybody concerned on both sides understood and intended that the ballots should be marked.

Now, then, gentlemen, it was argued by the distinguished chairman that it was not necessary to mark these ballots, because the very fact that the ballot contained one name showed the intention of the voter. Is it not true that the ballot must give every opportunity to the voter to express his intent?

It is ridiculed that the mere marking of the ballot would show the intention of the voter. I ask the gentleman, You say that you have provided a law where the mere dropping of the ballot in the ballot box shows his intention? How is a man to vote who does not wish to vote for that candidate? Suppose a Democrat in North Carolina, for good and sufficient reasons, does not care to vote for that candidate, yet he wants to deposit a ballot. He surely does not want to deposit a Republican ballot, because by so doing he would vote for the Republican candidate. The only manner in which he can do so is by dropping his blank ballot into the ballot box.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In just one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not just yet. That is the manner provided by the law of giving the voter the opportunity of voting for this man if he wants to or passing it up and dropping a blank ballot; and the right of dropping a blank ballot as a protest against that candidate must be respected just as much as the right to vote entirely against him.

Let us see as to the development of ballots. We first started out with ballots where no action was necessary on the part of the voter. The voters receive the ballots and drop them in the boxes. You all know the history of ballot-box stuffing. That is just what made it possible. Then we developed the Australian ballot and the Massachusetts ballot, which required an act on the part of the voter to express his intent. The North Carolina statute required that, but in the case of the congressional candidate they had but one name on the ballot, and it was clearly the intent of the legislature to require that affirmative act on the part of the voter in marking his ballot to express his intent, and it was so understood.

After election day the returns were sent in. You heard what happened. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] did not tell you, but this is in the record, that the board of canvassers of Buncombe County met on the 7th of November, were organized, and proceeded to canvass the votes. They canvassed the vote of every precinct in that county—28 precincts—and there was no protest made. Each precinct was represented; the vote was called off; the Republican member, I believe, checked off the totals; they were written down; put on an adding machine; and the total number ascertained. After that, assuming that an error was found in five precincts of Buncombe County, the board were estopped from any further action. An order of a court was necessary to review in order to change the result as certified by the board of canvassers, and that is elementary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is it not a fact that the instructions sent out by these Buncombe County men disclosed that they had marked all of the Weaver ballots in advance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, as I understand, the committee did not see these unmarked ballots.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How do they account for there being any unmarked ballots for Weaver, when in Buncombe County they had marked all the Weaver ballots in advance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Those were workers' ballots. They have no official ballot in the State of North Carolina. Anyone can print ballots, and they have no official ballots such as they have in your State or mine.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All of the Weaver ballots were marked in advance, as I understand?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not all.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONDON. Under their practice a voter intending to vote the Republican ticket would ask a Republican worker or ward heeler for a ballot, and so a Democrat would ask a Democratic worker. It was to all intents and purposes an open ballot. Now, what difference does it make under the practice which prevails there whether a man marks his ballot or not?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To give a man an opportunity to express his intent and to require an act on the part of the voter to prevent illegal voting, of course.

Mr. LONDON. I know, but the ballot was practically an open ballot. All secrecy was removed, because a man intending to vote showed his intent by applying either to a Republican or to a Democrat.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, he might get both ballots.

Mr. GORDON. The voter indicates his intention by depositing the ballot in the box. Is not that an affirmative act?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not enough; no.

Mr. GORDON. That, of course, is a matter of opinion. Now, look here: The supreme court of North Carolina passed on all these interesting questions of law that you are talking about.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No, it did not; thank you very much for the suggestion.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PHELAN. Is it not a fact, testified to in the testimony, that ballots were marked by somebody else other than the voter, and that the voters took the ballots as marked and dropped them into the ballot box, and that those ballots were counted? Is that true?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true. That is an unfortunate condition which has grown up there.

Mr. PHELAN. That being a fact, is there anything in the North Carolina statute at any place to prevent that thing being done if people want to do it in every single case of every ballot deposited?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is not.

Mr. PHELAN. So that the only thing that determines a man's intention necessarily under the North Carolina statute is the depositing of the ballot and not the marking of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is where the gentleman and I differ. I say that the intent of the law and the words that they used in their statute required an act on the part of the voter.

Mr. PHELAN. But the fact that the law makes absolutely no provision to guard against anybody else marking the ballot is an indication, and I think a demonstration, of the fact that that part of the statute is not mandatory, but merely directory.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. LONDON. On this point and in connection with the same question, I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] to say that the law of North Carolina required the marking of the ballots only in primary elections.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; that is not so.

Mr. LONDON. What is your construction of it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will read to the gentleman the statute:

That opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted at the general election shall be a small square, and the vote for any candidate shall be indicated by marking a cross mark, thus (×), in the square.

So it leaves no doubt there. Now, the law cited by the majority of the committee is not applicable to this. The leading case cited in this brief report to any matter which is not of the essence, and I maintain that the marking of the ballot is the very essence of the ballot. The cases covered by the opinions cited by the majority of the committee refer to instances of immaterial acts, such as where returns are required and there are no forms available and a makeshift form is used, irregularities of that nature, but not to the ballot itself. I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that after North Carolina had tried the marked-ballot system and found how it worked in 1916 this provision was repealed in 1917. They repealed this provision the following year.

Mr. LONDON. The provision requiring the marking of the ballots?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The provision requiring the marking of the ballots. So does not that show clearly that my contention is correct?

Now, assuming that the marking of the ballot was not necessary, and contestee had a right to get a supplemental report from Buncombe County, then of course the contestant had a right to recanvass all the district and have all of the unmarked ballots cast for him counted. But then they tell us, "Why, we did not keep the unmarked ballots, because our law does not provide for it. We will have to go and get testimony." Then, in all such cases the testimony is conflicting, and the committee says, "We can not count these, because there is conflicting testimony." But they counted enough in Buncombe County to overcome the difference of 13 votes.

You have all heard the S O S call sent out for more votes, but, to the credit of the other counties, they refused to change. Buncombe County, however, kept up the reputation of its name and consented to give them. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Where did the extra ballots that the canvassing board of Buncombe County added to the official returns come from?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From the floor.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Was the S O S call issued by an election officer?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Who received the call?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Election officers. Give me a board like that, with such zeal, with its daring, with its courage, and I can go into any district in the South and be elected on the Republican ticket. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What testimony was there as to the number on the poll list corresponding with the ballots that were cast?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS], who follows me, will explain that. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will yield.

Mr. LONDON. There are two things that worry me. Was the S O S message, to which the gentleman from New York referred, which practically amounted to a demand that the vote be increased—was the recipient of that an election official? And the other question is, Were these unmarked ballots counted for both candidates?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. To be sure they were counted for both candidates. As to the first question—the man was not an election official; the uncontradicted evidence in the record and before the committee showed that the telegram was received after the official vote had been canvassed and did not affect the result in favor of Mr. Weaver, but on the final count they reduced the vote six votes in one precinct, and instead of his receiving a majority of 452 he only received a majority of 446. The uncontradicted testimony is that the telegram had no effect on the result in that county or upon the vote in that county.

The gentleman from Iowa, if you will recall, praised very highly the recipient of the telegram and said he was a man of the highest character and that he resented any imputation contained in the telegram.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As I understood, the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] was whether or not the telegram was received by an inspector.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; he said he was not. Neither the man who sent it nor the man who received it was an election officer.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I have only 20 minutes. The gentleman had an hour and declined to yield to this side. Now, gentlemen of the House, if there be such a man who intends to vote from a party standpoint or from prejudice, I can have no hope that my remarks will in any way influence him. However, I desire to lay down a few broad principles that govern this particular case. In the first place, gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber will agree that in all election laws the object of the law is to give the voter an opportunity to register his will in the election for the candidate of his choice. You will furthermore agree that the election machinery, where it prescribes the manner of holding the election, will give every intendment to ascertain the voter's choice, and the provisions of law as to the manner of holding an election will be regarded as directory, unless the law itself provides that the failure to do some particular act shall result in the vote not being counted, in which event it is mandatory.

I want to call the attention of the House to the particular provision of the law of North Carolina regarding marked and unmarked ballots. Prior to 1915 the law of North Carolina simply provided that you cast the ballot without any square or any mark upon it whatever.

Let me call your attention to the further fact that in North Carolina they have separate boxes for different offices to be voted on. For instance, they have a ballot box for the county officers, and that is a separate box. There is another box in which voters are to deposit the ballots for candidates for Congress. There is another box which contains the ballots for candidates for State offices, and still another box for precinct officers. So when it comes to casting a vote for Congressman the ballot, whether it be Republican or Democrat, necessarily contains but one name, the single name of the congressional candidate for whom the voter desires to register his vote. No other ballots go into that particular box except those for Congressman.

This provision in section 32 of the act of 1915 of the Legislature of North Carolina seems to have been put on as a rider or an amendment to an election law, which in its title did not refer to general elections at all, but which referred to primary elections in North Carolina. Everybody knows that in a primary election where there is a number of candidates for the same office it would be perfectly proper to require some designation in order to indicate the choice of the candidate, where there were five or six. So in section 32 of this act there was a general provision that opposite the candidate's name there should be made this mark. I will show you that this did not intend to refer to general elections as a general proposition. I want to read this law:

CHAP. 101. An act to provide for primary elections throughout the State.

That is all the title that this act contains, and that is the subject matter of that act. It seems that some one obtained the adoption of section 32. I want you to bear in mind what was in the mind of the Legislature of North Carolina in enacting this statute. It was providing a method whereby the voters of different political parties might select their candidates for office when there was more than one competing for some particular office. Section 32 provided that opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted at the general election shall be a small square, and a vote for any candidate shall be indicated by making a cross mark in such square, and no voter shall vote for more than one candidate for any office. It is apparent the general election and the primary were confused, because, of course, a voter is not going to vote for more than one candidate for the same office in the general elections. If he did, his act would be absolutely nugatory, and there would be no way of indicating his choice.

Mr. GORDON. He would have to vote two tickets.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. He would have to vote two tickets, both Democratic and Republican, because the law prescribes that on the Democratic ticket there shall be only the name of the candidate of the Democratic Party, and that there shall be a separate ticket for the Republican ticket. To show, furthermore, that the legislature in enacting that statute had no real intention to regulate the general elections or to impose that requirement upon a voter in voting in general elections, the next session of the Legislature of North Carolina which convened repealed expressly that particular section, and I have here, if any Member of the House wants the reference, the act of the Legislature of North Carolina repealing section 32 of the general primary law, because it was called to its attention and it was realized it had no proper place in that law.

If it had been the intention of these men who cast these unmarked ballots to perpetrate a fraud and cast illegal ballots, and if in certain sections of the country there is that political cunning and that political fraud that is intimated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], do you suppose that these shrewd politicians would have hesitated to have marked the ballots? Would they have overlooked the marking of the ballots? To be sure if they had been fraudulent they would have met every requirement, both technical and otherwise, of that law, and you could not have found any flaw in it. So I take it that one of the best evidences that these ballots are honest ballots, that they were cast by voters who desired to vote for Mr. Weaver, is the fact that they are not marked. If this House desires to arrive at the choice of those voters who cast these unmarked ballots, how are we going to arrive at that choice? The voter could vote but once, of course. He had the privilege of going either to the Republican judge and getting a Republican ballot with Mr. Britt's name on it, or he had the choice of going to the Democratic judge and getting the Democratic ballot with Mr. Weaver's name on it. So the fact that he went to the Democratic judge to procure the Democratic ballot with Mr. Weaver's name on it is the first evidence that he desired to vote for Mr. Weaver. The testimony in this record is uncontradicted. The testimony by both Republican judges and Democratic judges is that the unmarked ballots which have been counted in the case by your committee were found in the ballot box with the other ballots which had been marked, and there is no evidence by any Republican judge in this case, not one particle of testimony, as to any fraud whatever in the depositing in the ballot box of these unmarked ballots. On the other hand, there is testimony in this record that the Republican Party officials in that district had given explicit instructions to their representatives on election boards that it was to be the duty of Republican election judges to preside over the congressional ballot boxes, so as to see that their interests were not overlooked. We do not charge that there was any fraud involved in that, but we do say that when the record shows that the Republican judges presided over the congressional boxes it does not lie in the mouths of these gentlemen to insinuate that they permitted ballots to go into the box fraudulently or improperly for the Democratic candidate.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Is there any allegation of fraud in this case?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. None whatever, except they make some allegations, both of them, that some parties voted who had not paid their poll tax. Each side makes those claims. Mr. Weaver states that the number of voters who he says were not entitled to vote is somewhat larger than the number charged by Mr. Britt. But the committee took the position that under the law of North Carolina the election officials in all those precincts had the judicial discretion and power to pass upon the qualification of those voters, as to whether they had paid their poll tax or as to whether they were liable to pay a poll tax, and the committee did not go into these individual cases.

Mr. GORDON. And the Supreme Court of North Carolina distinctly held those election officers had that jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Absolutely. I have before me the decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina in the case of Britt against the election officers. The opinion in this case is authority for the proposition just stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]. What does it further state with reference to the unmarked ballots? I take it that while this Congress is not bound in determining an election contest by the laws of any State, at the same time it has always been the custom and precedent for Congress in interpreting a statute to give great weight to the decision of the highest court of that particular State construing such act. The Supreme Court of North Carolina says, and this is a statute of North Carolina which it is interpreting, that while the particular question is not involved in a decision of this particular case, yet at the same time if the question were properly before the court it would be bound to hold that the unmarked ballots were legal ballots and should be counted, because the court says that they are evidence of having been cast and properly placed in the box, and the fact that they contain but one name is irrefutable testimony of the fact that the voter registers his will in voting for Mr. Weaver.

I want to call the attention of the House to the further fact that unmarked ballots were cast for both Mr. Britt and Mr. Weaver. When Mr. Britt made this contest originally in the courts he did not attack the returns in any county outside of Buncombe County. Buncombe County is the home both of Mr. Weaver and Mr. Britt.

Mr. Britt at that time made no charge in reference to the sending of this telegram in anywise affecting the count of the vote in this particular. Now, let us see——

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. LONDON. The statement in reference to the telegram would have been irrelevant in the proceedings in reference to Buncombe County.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. To be sure.

Mr. LONDON. Therefore he did not make that contention.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No. He could have instituted proceedings to involve the other counties just as well as to involve Buncombe County. If he could raise the question about Buncombe County, certainly in such a proceeding in these other counties he could raise a similar question and raise the question of this telegram, and as to that telegram it was evidently sent by a very zealous partisan. I am sure that gentlemen of the political astuteness of the gentlemen who are conducting the election contest on that side of the House would never have sent such a telegram. But, my friends, the proof is incontrovertible that, however much you may presume that a man intends to perpetrate a fraud, the facts are absolutely uncontradicted that it had no such result. Now, if you will——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have but a few minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was interested particularly in this revision of the returns from Buncombe County. In the course of the gentleman's address, will he discuss that?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If I have the time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It seems to me the whole case hinges around the county canvassers changing those figures.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will refer to that; the gentleman means the new returns.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a brief inquiry?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not to take all of my time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Suppose a Democrat determined to vote for Mr. Britt and put the name of James J. Britt—put it in and wrote a cross mark on it on a Weaver ballot and deposited it in a Weaver box. For whom would it have been counted?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is no Weaver box; there is just one box for Weaver and Britt both.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. For whom would it have been counted?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I assume—I do not——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He had a perfect right to do that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not know what the facts were and the particular way they counted those votes; but I will say to the gentleman he had the right to mark out the name of Britt and insert Weaver there and vote.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; the gentleman does not get me. Take the printed ballot exactly as it is with Weaver's name printed upon it and no cross mark after it. Then he writes in the name of James J. Britt and puts a cross mark on that. How would that be counted?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have got more concrete cases than I will be able to handle in my time, and I do not like to go into the realms of imagination.

Mr. BURNETT. Would not that manifest a clear intention to vote for Britt?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. To be sure. Anyone who was not satisfied with the printed ballot could write a new name on. If he wrote the name on the printed ballot, that would indicate that he believed in the doctrine, I suppose, that anything written with your hand overrules anything printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. When you write in another name on a ballot, thereby making two names thereon, and a cross mark is placed by one name, the name so marked will be taken as the candidate of the voter's choice. When there are two or more names on a ballot, it is necessary to put a mark by one of them in order to indicate the voter's choice.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. However, that is an academic question as far as this case is concerned. If you want to arrive at how the voter intended to vote, how are you going to arrive at it except by the evidence which a voter gives as to his choice? Now, it is certain that every man who put a ballot in the box intended to vote either for Britt or for Weaver, did he not? Every voter who put a ballot in the box intended to vote for Britt or Weaver, so if you have a ballot with Weaver's printed name on it, although it is not marked, and that ballot is deposited in the box, is not that evidence that the voter intended to vote for Weaver? If he did not intend to vote for Weaver, for whom did he intend to vote? Mr. Britt, you will say; but can it be presumed that a man who desires to vote for Britt, when he has an opportunity to go to a Republican judge and get a ballot with Britt's name printed upon it and deposit it in the box, would, contrary to that intention, procure a ballot with Weaver's name printed upon it and deposit it in the box. So if the ballot has Weaver's name upon it, although unmarked, is to be counted for anybody, it is bound to be counted for Weaver. What would be the necessity of the very useless requirement that, in addition to the name appearing there, the voter should mark a cross mark opposite the name?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It is absolutely unnecessary and serves no useful purpose whatever. I regret very much I did not have time to get to the question of the gentleman from Michigan. May I have one more minute to answer the gentleman?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan asked me a question in reference to the supplemental returns in Buncombe County. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as the proper procedure of making up those supplemental returns under the laws of North Carolina is concerned, the supreme court here in this decision intimates, and, I assume, if it were before it, would decide, that the supplemental returns could not have been made up except by the calling together of the election board.

But this House is not concerned with whether or not those returns were made out under the laws of North Carolina, provided this House finds that those votes were actually cast, and that they were properly voted, and that they evidence the intention of the voter to cast his vote for Mr. Britt or Mr. Weaver.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let me ask you right here. It is my understanding the ballot has been determined, and your committee would have no way of determining whether or not this supplemental report was a fake all the way through.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The record is full of testimony by both Republicans and Democrats.

Mr. PHELAN. And Mr. Britt himself acknowledges a great many of those.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. To be sure. And the evidence in the record in many cases is undisputed by both Democratic and Republican judges, as to how many were unmarked, and how many were for Britt, and how many for Weaver. And he who does not understand that record does not want to understand it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we are nearing the close of the great war Congress. This happens to be the first term that I have served here. But the Members of the House who have served in Congresses heretofore say that during the three sessions of this great war Congress there has been a manifestation of as little partisanship as has ever occurred in any Congress. Near the close of this session we are confronted with a problem which really involves no partisanship. On the surface one might think that a contest between a Democrat and a Republican might involve partisanship. But, after all, it does not, because the House of Representatives does not determine the question as to who shall represent the people of any district. The voters of that district determine the question, and it is for the membership of this House to perform the solemn duty to-day of reaching a judicial determination of what the voters did decide.

It is fortunate that in a case of this great public importance both sides are represented; it is fortunate for the sitting Member of the House that he has able men who have studied this record and concluded that he is entitled to serve in the House, and by reason of that fact his side of the case has been to-day ably presented. And I think it is fortunate, indeed, that the gentleman who is waging this contest had the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], with his clear insight, with his careful, industrious work, to lay before this House the great fraud that had been perpetrated in North Carolina.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I beg your pardon, but I have not the time.

I want to say in fairness to the sitting Member in this House, Mr. Weaver, as did my good friend Mr. DOWELL, that there is no evidence in this case of any act on his part which showed that he took any part in this colossal fraud to deprive the people of their rights to determine who shall represent them in this honorable body. Not only that, but at the time down there in North Carolina, in his old home, at the time this great fraud was perpetrated, there was a good angel by the side of Mr. Weaver which led him to say then—and I want you to weigh these words—at the time they were holding the secret meeting for the purpose of perpetrating this fraud, after they had adjourned and recessed from time to time, when it had been announced in the papers that Mr. Britt's majority was 13, and when they were behind closed doors to determine the question, Mr. Weaver, in talking over this matter when he found what was going on, said, "I have got 288 majority in Buncombe County"—which, by the way, would give Mr. Britt the seat in this House by 12 votes—"If I have not enough outside of Buncombe to elect me, they can not law it onto me." [Applause.]

He said, "They can not law it onto me." I am quoting from the record in this case. And then again, on page 192, he is reported to have said, "They are not going to take anything away from me, and they are not going to give me anything that does not belong to me." That is what Mr. Weaver said at that time. [Applause.]

This is a very clear question that we have here. I do not think the unmarked ballots ought to be counted. The law positively says that the vote shall be indicated by marking the ballot, and if they are not counted it is conceded by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] and by the majority report that Mr. Britt is entitled to his seat. But regardless of that, when they went behind it all and brought in the evidence in this case, taking into consideration all the evidence of votes in this case, it is evident that Mr. Britt is entitled to his seat if you do not count those ballots which were not marked. The chart here shows the facts.

And I am not blaming the gentlemen who prepared the majority report or who are advocating the seating of Mr. Weaver here. The majority and the minority differ in their construction of the evidence covering certain cases, which makes a difference of 9 votes. There were left out of the majority report 10 precincts, which makes a difference of 9 more—18 votes—and they only claim that Mr. Weaver was elected by 12 votes. So under that, if you did not go into anything else, Mr. Britt is entitled to his seat in the House. But I think that the gentlemen who prepared the majority report in this case are undertaking to lay down a precedent here that this House can not afford to follow. I wonder if you thought what the real effect was when the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] stated that the majority had determined that these boards had the ultimate right to decide these questions and that they would not go into 400 illegal votes charged here? Just think of that position. The House of Representatives——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Out of the 400 is it not a fact that a larger number are charged with having voted for Mr. Britt than having voted for Mr. Weaver?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is true; and if the gentleman's logic follows, all that Mr. Weaver needs to do is to pick up 300 more in the record and charge that they voted illegally for Mr. Britt. That is, the greater the fraud is, and the more evidence, the further you will go. If you steal a loaf of bread they send you to the penitentiary; but if you steal a railroad they will send you to Congress, some say. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. ROMJUE. Out of the race from which this contest grows did not those people contest?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. What was the result?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I understand the result was to send Mr. Weaver back. They might have gotten the wires to work a little earlier to send telegrams that did not "come too late" to elect him. But I do not charge that. The right of the people is plenary. They had the right to elect Mr. Britt in 1916 and Mr. Weaver in 1918. Take the case of my friend PURNELL, of Indiana. He ran in 1914 and was defeated. He ran again in 1916 and was elected, and he ran again in 1918 and was elected. I think he will continue to be elected if they have good taste out there, but the fact that he was elected in 1916 and again in 1918 did not give him the right to a seat in 1914.

But, gentlemen, I have gone into these individual votes, and I want to say that I think the majority report left out these precincts because they did not know the nature of the result. There was not any dishonesty about that, however. They decided they would not go into these individual votes, which cover about 1,200 pages, there, and when my good friend DOWELL and I went through these individual votes we found these other precincts with the unmarked ballots, and we found enough of them to elect Mr. Britt with great ease.

But outside of that and outside of everything that has been discussed here, the illegal votes that were cast for Mr. Weaver, which are shown up plainly in this case, when deducted leave Mr. Britt's majority about 46 votes. They did not go into them, and they say they are about equal. They further say that the illegal voters did not have to testify how they voted, and you could not introduce legal evidence outside of that. The gentlemen are mistaken about the line of authority. There is a line of authority to the effect that a legal voter can not be compelled to testify as to how he voted, because that is a confidential matter, especially under the Autralian ballot system. But all authorities say that an illegal voter who fraudulently casts a vote is entitled to testify if he wants to, and may be compelled to testify, unless it incriminates him, and you can introduce other evidence in the case.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him this question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Do I understand the minority members of the committee investigated each individual case of the 200 illegal voters charged by the contestee with having cast ballots for the contestant in this case?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman on the minority of the committee investigated the 156 individual cases in which he claimed that he had voted for?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I did.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Then I ask the gentleman why the minority of the committee, in writing their report, did not report the fact to the House?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, if the gentleman please, the gentleman has been here longer than I have. Here is what they say in the majority report about it:

Amid the pressure of other duties and with time at its command, it would be a physical impossibility for the committee to trace out the details of each of these near 400 cases, each depending for solution upon its own state of facts, and it has been able to investigate carefully only a limited number of them. * * * They "seem to us to have fallen about equally on both sides."

In other words, the distinguished chairman of this committee in his report said they examined part of them for Weaver and part for Britt, and in the parts they did examine they were about equal. He does not set out a single one in the report, and yet he is complaining because we did not set them out in our report. I can give the gentleman a list.

But aside from the question as to whether you could introduce other evidence about these illegal voters——

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman does make some statements in the minority report?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; but we did not set them out.

Mr. LONDON. You say the vote in favor of Britt is about 24, which is not quite in agreement with this table.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is the illegal vote. These are the unmarked ballots here. These illegal voters are the individuals who did not live where they voted, or who were under age, or who had not paid their taxes.

Mr. LONDON. How many are there of them?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There are 38 Weaver votes and there are 12 Britt votes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him about one vote?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. In the list of 21 which the contestant claims appeared to vote for him and were entitled to vote but were excluded from voting, may I ask the gentleman what he found to be the fact about a man named Heaton?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is not much dispute about that question.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I would like to see what you found.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I took a look at the hearings, and I found this: The attorney who represented Mr. Weaver was asked this question by the distinguished chairman:

Can you say how many, Mr. Lloyd, of those voters who offered to vote and who were entitled to vote and were prevented by fraud from doing so—can you say how many, Mr. Lloyd, so as to save us the trouble of investigating this?

He claims 21 were counted. We think 7 of those should not be included in the list, and probably there were 14 who were denied the privilege of voting who should have been permitted to cast their votes for Mr. Britt.

They have not mentioned those in the majority report, and in the computation made by the gentleman here on the floor of the House they have not mentioned them, and those 14 are counted in the 46 votes for Mr. Britt. Then Mr. CONNALLY of Texas, the gentleman who preceded me, said:

It may be that the judge was trying to find out if you made any admission to that effect.

He replies:

I do not make the positive admission, but I am inclined to believe that 14 in that list should be counted.

And finally, when driven to it, he named the 7 who ought not to be counted, and in the hearing segregated those who ought to be counted for Mr. Britt from the others that ought not to be counted. So those 14 should be counted.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Does the gentleman think he has answered my question about Mr. Heaton? My question is, What did you find to be the fact in regard to the vote of Mr. Heaton, who is named in the list by the contestant in his brief? What did you find to be the fact about that man who, it was charged, offered to vote and was entitled to vote and was not allowed to vote?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not recollect the specific facts about that case.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The record shows that he did vote.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The record in some of these cases shows they were not entitled to vote because it did not show that they were clearly qualified to vote.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The records plainly show that this man Heaton did vote and his vote was counted.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman refers to that single vote. Are there any colored males in that district?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There are some.

Mr. FOCHT. How many votes were cast by them?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The record did not disclose the colored vote.

Mr. BURNETT. They did not get into that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. They have the grandfather clause in North Carolina. They had the grandfather clause up to 1908, and they have the modified grandfather clause there now.

Gentlemen of the House, the distinguished chairman of this committee talked to me about these individual votes. They all say they have not gone into these votes, and the distinguished chairman further says these supplemental returns were not illegal enough not to be counted. I say Mr. Britt ought to be occupying the seat, because the original count gave it to him. Is it possible you are going to wrest this seat from Mr. Britt by a report and by a judicial decision which refuses to go into the question of the illegal votes that are charged to have been counted? I have the list here. Fred Carson went on the stand and testified himself that he was not entitled to vote. Will Owens did the same thing. S. S. Hooper did the same thing. J. I. Watson did the same thing. John H. Smith did the same thing. And so clear on down the line, a list of 38, nearly all of whom were called. There were many other cases, but it is a difficult thing to prove, and the evidence in each case did not go quite far enough. But this list of 38 is the list of those left after the acid test has been made and after you weigh the testimony more favorably for the benefit of the sitting Member. Those 38 votes ought to be added to Mr. Britt, and there were 12 that were cast for Mr. Britt that ought to be deducted.

Gentlemen, the question you have to decide and the question that the gentlemen on the Democratic side have to decide is the question whether we shall put the stamp of approval upon this colossal fraud that was perpetrated there in North Carolina. You remember the telegrams that were sent, the letters that were written, the phone calls that were made, the secret conferences behind closed doors by public officials that were held, the testimony showing that frequently they undertook to put in two Weaver tickets together, which occurred in eight or nine different places in this record, and the testimony of the continuous acts of these different precinct guards in refusing legal voters their legal right to vote, all show that a great conspiracy was formed, and it was carried out. Finally, when they did not have enough votes, when they had failed to steal in some of the other counties, they were told that if they stole any they would have to steal them in Buncombe County, and they started in. This board has a meeting. They added this vote up on an adding machine in Buncombe County, calling off either the official returns or the tally sheets, and added 288 votes for Mr. Weaver, which still made a majority in the district of 13 votes for Britt. They added it up and had it announced, but not in an official way, and then when they found what the total would be they went to work and recessed from time to time until the 17th day of November. For eight days they went about this fraud, and during those eight days they sent out and got supplemental returns enough to change the vote from 13 in favor of Britt to 9 in favor of the gentleman who is now the sitting Member from that district. Is it possible that we are going to put our stamp of approval on that conduct? When we vote in this case we reach that decision.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will.

Mr. LONDON. What is the law of North Carolina as to supplemental returns?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is no law, but the decision of the supreme court states that the supplemental returns ought not to have been counted. The Supreme Court of North Carolina holds that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not that the ballots ought not to be counted, but that the returns were not made in a proper way.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That they should not be taken into consideration. Does the gentleman think they ought to have been counted?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did the court say that they should not be counted, or that they were not made up properly?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. They decided that the vote should not be counted in five precincts as these gentlemen there counted them. They went out and took five precincts which gave to Mr. Weaver 26 and gave to Mr. Britt 6. That is what they did, and then when you go back and count them all, if they are good for Weaver they are good for Britt, and when you count them all you find Mr. Britt has a majority of about 6, anyway. They only claim a majority of 12, and when you adopt their figures it leaves Britt elected by 6 votes; but that is entirely outside of the question of the 14 admitted in there.

There is another admission in the hearings.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Was the total number of ballots cast increased by the supplemental returns?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly; Mr. Britt has a majority of 13 by the original returns. They sent out, after recessing, supplemental returns, not signed by the whole board but by Democrats only, except one was signed by a Republican who said that the facts stated were not true—they bring in these 5 not signed by all the board, but by Democratic members; they were added to Mr. Weaver's vote and cut Britt's majority down 13 to Weaver's 9.

Mr. LONDON. That was not my question. My question is, Was the total number of votes for Weaver and Britt increased by the supplemental returns?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Where did they come from?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The unmarked ballots came from the county of Buncombe. The pretense was that there were certain unmarked ballots. They found precincts were not correct, and they had to deduct 2, and when you count them all you find that Britt was elected by at least 6 votes outside of the 146.

Mr. LONDON. I should have asked whether the total number of ballots cast was increased by the supplemental returns.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not increased, if you consider the unmarked ballots as having been cast.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do the statutes of North Carolina require the canvassing board to make its return within two days after the election?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. They made the canvass, but they did not certify; they waited.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They made it up in accordance with the law except the certification, but thereafter the board never met for official action?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the individual members certified to these unmarked ballots as individuals?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Did the Supreme Court of North Carolina ever hold that the certificates by the individual members should be counted?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; the Supreme Court held by a dictum that the supplemental returns had no legal effect. The chairman of our committee asserted on the floor of the House that they had no legal effect, but when you admit the supplemental returns had no legal effect you have said that the certificate should be issued to Britt and he should occupy the seat until the contest was over. If they had done that Mr. Britt would have been the sitting member and Mr. Weaver the contestant.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They build their legal argument on the proposition, which is illegal, that an individual certificate to a supplemental return is lawful.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is true; but the gentlemen undertake to go behind all the returns and that is all right. I do not think the unmarked ballots ought to be counted, but we have taken them at their word for the purpose of the argument, and as shown by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], they ought not to be counted, and I could cite half a dozen similar cases holding that they ought not to be counted. But if you count all the unmarked ballots Britt was elected. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield some of his time? We have only one more speech.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There is but one more speech on this side. This side has 38 minutes and the gentlemen on that side have an hour, so I will ask the gentleman to yield first.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, one hour, to the contestant, Mr. Britt.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am profoundly grateful for the privilege of the floor to appear in my own behalf. I earnestly hope this question will be decided as a matter of justice between man and man, and one in which the public is also largely interested. I hope it will not be decided by you as Democrats or as Republicans or as independents. Justice asks no question of party or creed. It merely asks to be ascertained and administered. In 130 years since this House was first organized I venture to say that this is the first time a seat was ever claimed, much less held, on the floor of this House on the strength of election ballots that were outlawed, on election ballots as to which there is no positive proof that they were ever cast, on election ballots that are not in existence, on election ballots wherein only 3 out of 90 is there a scintilla of proof that any voter in the tenth district of North Carolina ever claimed to have cast them.

In the course of my remarks I shall make certain serious charges against certain individuals of the district, and I shall criticize some people sharply, but I want, in the very beginning, to make it perfectly clear that I do not mean the Democrats of the tenth district of North Carolina in any general sense. I know those men. I have run for Congress in that district four times, and have been twice elected; have run for the senate of the State assembly once and been elected, and in each and every one of those elections I have received the votes of a large number of Democrats; and I want to say now, 500 miles away from home, what I have said a hundred times at home, that the masses of the Democratic Party in my district, in honesty, intelligence, and uprightness, are the equal of a like number of men anywhere. The charges that I bring are against less than two score election officials and managers of the contestee's party.

One more word as to the consideration of this case. It is a long, long way to Tipperary, we have heard as a refrain lately. For two long years, after having knocked at the door of every court in North Carolina, I have journeyed regularly to this Capitol to urge that you determine the issue between me and the contestee. Twenty-five such trips I have made, at an enormous expense, and I rejoice now, although it is within three days of the end of the term, that you are to consider the issues involved in this contest, and determine them by your suffrages as Members of this House. So, gentlemen, I hope that to-morrow, after you have voted, there will come to you no troubling question of whether you supported your party or your section, but that, knocking silently at the hearts of each of the Members of this House, will come the question, "Did I do justice between man and man?"

I am amazed that the learned gentlemen on the other side should claim that the primary-election law of North Carolina was an inadvertence in so far as it relates to the requirement of marked ballots. If there ever was a law in that State that was made after deliberate consideration it was that statute; and let me show you from the record that that is true. If you will turn to the primary law of the State from which this law concerning the ballots is quoted you will find one-half dozen references to the general State election. I thought it was understood everywhere, under the American system of elections, that the term "general election" is used in contradistinction from "primary election." It is so used in North Carolina; it is so used throughout the States of the Union. Please take time to read this statute. In six different places in the statute, which the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] says is an inadvertence, reference is made to the "general election" of North Carolina, showing that the legislature intended to make provision for certain things relating to the "general elections" as well as to the "primary election." Let me read a word of it:

That opposite the name of each candidate on the general ticket to be voted at the general election shall be a small square, and a vote for any candidate shall be indicated by making a cross mark in such square.

I challenge the gentlemen on the other side to name a single exception under this law to the requirement that the mark must be placed on the ballot. Every ticket voted under this statute requires a mark. Why should the congressional ticket be excepted from that provision, and what does it take to make a statute mandatory? Let us consider that for a moment.

The statute itself uses the most imperative language. It says "shall be placed." It does not say "may be placed." In the second place, the construction of the statute was mandatory. The State board of elections construed it to require the cross mark. The attorney general of the State construed it to require the cross mark. Every State official that touched it held it to require the cross mark, and when they came to apply it they still held it required the cross mark. I thought I heard it said on the other side to-day that the State board of elections did not hold that the ballots should be so marked. The State board of elections was administered at that time by a Democratic chairman and one Republican member. Mr. Freeman, member of the State board of elections, swears they so held, and that the attorney general, through his assistant, so held. Not only that, but A. E. Holton, a prominent lawyer of the State, went to the capital to advise concerning it, and they told him that they must be marked. The candidate against the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN], Mr. Grissom, went to the capital, and they told him they must be marked. Let me call your attention to a few others who said they must be marked: D. S. Elias, Democratic chairman of the district, held that they must be marked; J. W. Haynes, referred to here to-day as the leading manager for the contestee, held they must be marked. Who else held they must be marked? Every single party manager, including the contestee and myself and every election poll holder in the places where amended and supplementary returns were made. Let us consider the terms "mandatory" and "directory." What can make a law more mandatory? The statute used mandatory language. The law officer of the State, the attorney general, held it to be mandatory; the State board of elections used mandatory language. Mr. Weaver used mandatory language. I used mandatory language. His managers used mandatory language, and the poll holders themselves sat in council on that question and decided that the ballots must be marked. I submit to this House that there never was any statute in the history of any State relating to any subject made more mandatory by its provisions than was this marking of the ballots, and there could be no valid ballot without it.

I hold in my hand a copy of a circular of instructions which I prepared and distributed to all the voters of the district. Here is what it said:

Republican congressional ballot. (To vote this ticket make a cross mark.) For Representative in the Sixty-fifth Congress, tenth district, James J. Britt.

And I instructed the voters that if they did not place the mark there it would not be a valid ballot. Now, gentlemen, if the statute says it, and the attorney general says it, and all the State executives say it, and all the party managers say it, and the contestee says it, and I say it, let me ask you, in the name of all reason, what more is necessary to make it a mandatory provision? Gentlemen, I hold in my hand a specimen of the ballot voted for the contestee and myself at the election of November 7, 1916. Here are the words:

Democratic congressional ballot. (To vote this ticket make a cross mark in the square.) For Representative in the Sixty-fifth Congress, tenth district, Zebulon Weaver.

What is mine?

Republican congressional ballot. (To vote this ticket make a cross mark in the square.) For Representative in the Sixty-fifth Congress, tenth district, James J. Britt.

The ticket itself stated it, the contestee said it, everybody said it. Now, I ask you if it is fair for those who made the law, who construed it, who administered it, to put me in the position of doing a thing, and then let the contestee reverse that law and come here and hold a seat in Congress for two years on a law and construction, about which I had no choice, except to do what I was told to do? Is that fair? Let me submit this proposition to the gentleman, and it will be a good thing to reflect upon before you start to worship to-morrow. Suppose I had been short of election by 13 votes and I had wanted the seat in Congress which Mr. Weaver coveted, and I had gone to the State election authorities of North Carolina and had said to them, "You made the law, you construed the law, you administered the law, you made me put these marks on the ballot, but I want you to reverse it all so as to give me a seat in Congress."

Why, gentlemen, I would have been counted the biggest fool in North Carolina; I would have been laughed out of court. They would have said, "Britt, you are asking us to nullify the law as made and construed by the State officials after it is applied by your consent." I ask my Democratic friends to ponder over that before they cast their vote against me this evening, and to ponder it over in the interest of those principles of justice that seek all places for a temple and for all seasons summer.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. BRITT. I can not yield; I can not make my speech as I have planned it and yield. If I should yield to one gentleman I would be compelled to yield to others. Now, let us see. Here are five propositions, and I want you to get them. The unmarked ballots ought to be discredited because they are unlawful, but if we do count them I was elected. If you do not count them I was elected. If you count all your unmarked ballots in the district I was elected; if you leave all the unmarked ballots off I was elected. If you add the unmarked ballots, in addition to those other uncounted ballots that they admit I received, I was elected, and by any construction of the record under heaven that has reason or justice in it, the contestant was elected and not the contestee. Now, let us see what was done, and, gentleman, I regret to say some things that I must say now. What did those telegrams of Elias mean? Rutherford County had given Mr. Weaver 2,367 votes and had given me 1,941 as a final vote, and two days after his manager is asking that the laws of nature be reversed, that the laws of arithmetic be changed, and Haynes is crying, "Yonder in the Capitol Weaver's vote is needed."

Haynes is calling up Hill, of Jackson, and telling him to go into Graham County and threw out a certain precinct, and "We will stand by you if you will stand by us." What else? We find every effort made—a conspiracy if ever there was a conspiracy formed in the world—to cheat me out of the election after the news came that I had been elected by 13 majority. The Elias telegrams and the Haynes telephone messages are only a part. On the morning of the 9th the Buncombe County canvassers met. R. B. Stone had voted in the fourth precinct, but he lived in the sixth precinct. The testimony of Harkins and Gudger in the record shows that the board threw out this vote. But a few days thereafter, in one of those subterranean sessions—when things were done, God only knows what—this vote was thrown out. It is admitted by Stone that he had not been in the precinct for 15 months. It was sworn to by Harkins and Gudger. What took place in the secret meeting? Listen: Section 4350 of the statutes of North Carolina says the canvassers shall count and return the vote "in the presence of such electors as choose to attend." Note the words. Yet, they got down in the county commissioner's office, locked the doors, and there held a session after they had pretended to publicly adjourn until the next Thursday, and the meeting was broken up, and in the breaking up of that meeting they have Haynes, one of their managers, saying, "Well, gentlemen, I have told you what to do." And they did it. Now, what was the result? Listen: The news had gone out that Mr. Weaver's friends had found 5 unmarked ballots at West Asheville and Britt 2. Supplemental returns were made from that precinct which would give Mr. Weaver an increase of 3 votes. The news had come from the sixth precinct that Weaver had 7 and Britt 2. Supplemental returns were made from there. News had come from the second Asheville precinct that Weaver had 5 and Britt 1. Returns were made from there to Mr. Weaver's advantage.

The news had come in from Lower Hominy that Weaver had six there, and supplemental returns were made that gave Weaver the advantage. Now, gentlemen, here is the wickedness of the thing. They knew that Britt had received five unmarked ballots at Beaverdam precinct and Weaver none. No returns were made from there. Why? The news had come that Britt had received three unmarked ballots at Leicester. No returns were made. No advantage to Mr. Weaver. In Asheville No. 1 Britt had two, Weaver one. No return from there, because it would be of no advantage to Mr. Weaver. News had come from Swannanoa that Britt had one and Weaver none. No returns, for it would be of no advantage to Mr. Weaver.

I ask the Democratic Member to forget all the traditions of his party and meditate upon those facts, undisputed in this record, before he casts a vote in this Chamber this evening to put his approval upon that sort of conduct. What happened? Startling was the statement of one of the poll holders at Beaver Dam. He says, "If Britt wants them counted, let him count them. It is a matter of politics with us." We all know it was. What else was said? Malone, another member of the canvassing board—and if anybody challenges it I will name the page—said "It does not make any difference who has the vote; we intend to give it to Mr. Weaver." That was the talk. That was in the air. That was everywhere. And, gentlemen, what took place? The law says to meet at 9 o'clock. They met at 9 o'clock. They organized. They counted the congressional vote. They counted it all, and they made no objection to it except in Stone's case, and in that case they threw the ballot out. And, gentlemen, they then proceeded to count all the other tickets, the State, county, judicial, the constitutional amendment, presidential, and everything else. The returns were sufficient. I want to show you what the evidence was on that.

I received 4,037 votes in that county and Mr. Weaver received 4,325. Outside of the county I had received 13,971 votes and he had received 13,670. I had a majority of 13. They then proceeded to delay. I want to call your attention to something right here. It will take but a minute. Look at page 73 of the hearings before you. On page 73 are the returns published in the Asheville Daily Citizen on the 8th of November, 1916. The vote for every office is reported there except that of Congress. Why is Congress not put there? The returns were known. Everybody knew what the result was. Something was being held up. They said, "We are not going to dispose of that congressional vote now. We have got to do something before we can make that decision or else Weaver will not be elected and Britt will be." What did they proceed to do? Count all the other votes made by the same returning board. I ask you gentlemen of the majority if these returns were lawful for the presidential election, for the State election, and for the county election, if they were lawful for those purposes, why under heavens should the returns for Congress be held up? For no other reason than that they intended to seek an advantage in some way and did not want these returns yet published. Now, what did they do? On the 9th they worked, and again on the 10th, and on the 11th they adjourned until the next Thursday. During all this time I was trying to find out what was going on. My attorney moved that I be given the vote that I had, and the chairman said, "We are adjourned," without the form of a motion. Hill stepped up and reminded him what happened, and he said, "I don't give a damn." In everything it was high-handed. It was tyrannical. It was overbearing. It was secret. It was such as to say throughout, "We intend to do it, because we have made up our minds to do it."

While a handful of these fellows and Mr. Weaver's managers were doing that sort of thing the great body of Democratic voters were joining the Republican voters in protest, saying,

"Whatever the result is, let us have an honest count, and let the man elected have his place." And until this good night I have not lost my faith in those men, and until this good night they disapprove what was done.

Oh, somebody over there says, "But since that time they have voted for Mr. Weaver." But it was an extraordinary time. That is not in the record. We had been in a great war. The times were extraordinary. Everybody was supporting the President of the United States. Candidates for Congress were forgotten. No attention was paid to them scarcely, particularly in the South, and Mr. Weaver did receive nominally a majority of the vote at the last election. I do not know whether he will refer to it or not, but if he does let me say in advance that whereas votes were taken away from the Republican congressional candidate two years ago by the score, they were taken away by the hundreds in the election of 1918; yes, by the hundred, whereas they were taken by the score before.

Now, gentlemen, if you will count all the unmarked ballots in Buncombe County found for Mr. Weaver and found for Mr. Britt, I shall have, including the other vote in the district, a majority of 7 votes. If you go outside of the county and include all the unmarked ballots in the district, just as Judge WATSON has found them, 26 for Mr. Weaver and 21 for me, I would be elected in the district by 8 votes. If you deduct from the contestee's vote the unlawful Stone vote and the vote of West, who swore he voted twice for Weaver and accepted pay for it, I would be elected in the district by 24. And there are yet others, in my judgment, as the record absolutely proves, giving me a majority of 187. Take any view of it; take the unmarked or the marked ballots, count them or reject them, and make the returns as you please, and I was elected in the district.

Now, gentlemen, one more word about whether these ballots are proved. In North Carolina there must be four things done before a man can get the benefit of a vote at an election: First, there must be a lawful voter; second, there must be a lawful ballot; third, there must be the act of voting; and, fourth, there must be a lawful return of the vote. Gentlemen, if you will look over this report of the majority you will see that they are very careful to say that the supreme court by a dictum held that these ballots might be counted. But they do not go a little further and tell you, as they should have told you, that the same supreme court held that these returns in these five precincts, made in the way in which they were made, were absolutely null and void. Can it be possible that the vote can be legal if it was not lawfully returned? Every poll holder, Democrats and Republicans, in each of these five precincts, every one of them, swears that no meeting was held and no notice was given, and that the Republican member never heard of it, except in the Hazel precinct. Every one of the ballots returned in this way ought to be thrown out.

Gentlemen, this ballot is 3¼ inches long and 2 inches wide and one three-hundredths of an inch thick. They came from the State board of elections in closely packed bales. They were pressed together. There were the congressional, the electoral, the county, the township, and the constitutional-amendment ballots. They were pinned together. This ticket was pinned on the top. Now, everybody here knows how easy it is to stick two of those little Weaver ballots together; and yet you come here and argue that in all that uncertainty Mr. Weaver has had a right to a seat in this Congress for the past two years. Out of 90 men only 3 have ever claimed that they voted unmarked ballots. Who are they? Connolly said, "I forgot to mark my ballot, and I moved to throw it out because it was unlawful." He was an honest man and a good Democrat. West said, "I voted one intentionally, because I wanted to defy the law." And McClure said, "Hardin voted one because he did not like Mr. Weaver and would not vote for Mr. Britt because he was a Republican."

Out of 90 unmarked ballots those are the only 3 that anybody ever claimed to have voted. You can understand how easily those ballots could have been picked up together and pinned and deposited, and honestly so.

Why did not Mr. Weaver come here with the proofs? Let me tell you what they are. He ought to have come here with the unmarked ballots. That is the best evidence you know, as many of you are lawyers. He did not bring one of them. That is the highest proof. Then the next proof would have been the testimony of the voter that, since the matter was brought to his attention, he recalls that he had cast his ballot without putting a mark on it.

I am going to address myself to the mode of getting the certificate in a moment, and you will then conclude that it was unlawful. Now, what proof ought he to bring? He ought to come here with the ballots. He has not done it. He ought to come here with the testimony of the voters of that district, who swear that since the matter has been broached and their attention called to it they remember they put their ballots in the boxes and did not mark them. He only brings the testimony of 3 out of 90. What is the next thing he ought to have done? He ought to have taken the registered vote and have compared the total Britt and Weaver vote with the total registered vote, and have shown this House that the total Britt vote and Weaver vote was as much less than the registered vote as was equal to the number of unmarked ballots at that place. All voters voted either for Mr. Weaver or myself. The people of North Carolina are strong on voting when they get a chance. God knows some of us are strong on having our votes taken away, but we do vote, and we insist upon voting.

The next proof he ought to have come here with is this: He ought to have taken the highest vote of some Republican candidate and some Democratic candidate at that precinct. He ought to have added those two votes together and have seen how much more they were than his vote and mine added together. There is not a scintilla of testimony as to that.

Gentlemen, it is a great thing to be a Member of this House, provided you come here in such a way that you have the law and morals behind you; but I want to ask you if any man ought to rest at ease in a seat in this House basing his claim on ballots that nobody claims to have cast, ballots which were outlawed, ballots that nobody knows anything about except that there is some testimony that they were found in the ballot boxes.

Now I will address myself to the way the certificate was obtained, and I trust I may be understood on this point. When the State board of election gave the certificate to Mr. Weaver on the 19th day of December, 1916, they had before them the certified vote of the secretary of state, and the secretary of state had the certified vote from the register of deeds in the counties. That vote, as it was returned from Rutherford County, in the footing as compared with the items, showed Mr. Weaver 10 votes more than he had received, showed for me 10 votes less than I had received. The State board of canvassers did not add the items. If you had bought a bill of groceries or had traded a little at the store, being good business men, as I know you are, you would have added up the items to see whether the total was correct. They never added the items to verify the total.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITT. I declined to yield before, but I will yield this once.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman if in the hearings before the committee he did not admit that that miscalculation in Rutherford County was a mistake?

Mr. BRITT. I did not admit it. I said a question was raised concerning it. I asked permission to verify it, which I never had an opportunity to do. I merely said the question was raised.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. May I not ask you if the certified returns for Rutherford County in this record are all right?

Mr. BRITT. I do not know. I know the certified returns that the secretary of state had before him were not right, and I know that the State board of elections never had enough consideration for my rights to verify those returns. If they had added the votes from the precincts they would have found that even on those returns, after they had been stuffed with unmarked ballots from Buncombe County, even on those returns Mr. Weaver was short 11 votes, and I was entitled to the certificate. I do not know whether the Rutherford certificate contained a mistake or not. There may have been a mistake. If there was a mistake, it was their duty to correct it then and there, and until they did correct it Mr. Weaver was not entitled to the certificate

But that is not all. Three hours before the State board of canvassers gave Mr. Weaver the certificate the Supreme Court of North Carolina held that the amended and supplemental returns, made in the way they were made, were unlawful, and inferentially that no ballots returned by them could be counted. Notwithstanding that fact the State board of canvassers closed their eyes to my rights. They thought only of Mr. Weaver and gave him the certificate. If they had counted the 27 votes which the supreme court three hours before held were not lawful, because they had not been lawfully returned, and if they had deducted the 20 from Rutherford County, which, whether a mistake or not, were the only figures they had before them from that county, they would have found me entitled to the certificate instead of Mr. Weaver.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRITT. I will.

Mr. WEAVER. I have been for some time at least anxious to know the gentleman's position in regard to Rutherford County. Does the gentleman state to the House that he was deprived of any votes in Rutherford County, or that I was given any votes I was not entitled to in Rutherford County? I have been trying for a year to get that information.

Mr. BRITT. If that is the gentleman's question I will answer it, and if his mind is troubled I will ease it. The certificate I got was from the Democratic register of deeds of Rutherford County, and the certificate before the board of canvassers was from the Democratic secretary of state, and they both showed your vote 10 greater than it was, and mine was 10 less than it was.

Mr. WEAVER. What was the total vote shown by the certificate sent to the secretary of state for the contestant and the contestee?

Mr. BRITT. The total vote shown for you by the items from the precincts was 2,367, and you took 2,377. The total vote shown by the items for me was 1,941, and the count gave me 1,931. The State gave you a certificate on a false count.

Mr. WEAVER. One question more. What was the total vote by the State board of elections given to the contestant and the contestee for Rutherford County?

Mr. BRITT. The total vote they gave me was 2,331, and the items before them showed 2,341. The total vote they gave you was 2,377, and the items showed 2,367.

Mr. WEAVER. What was the total vote?

Mr. BRITT. That was the total vote; that is what they gave you. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. What does the gentleman claim was the correct vote of Rutherford County?

Mr. BRITT. Nobody knows from the Democratic returns. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to some other matters. I am not saying whether the Rutherford County vote was correct or incorrect; I do not know; but what I am saying is that they were so disregardful of my rights, so hasty to give the contestee a certificate, that they did not even have a clerk add up the figures; and the result was that the footings were false and gave him 10 more votes than he was entitled to and me 10 votes less than I was entitled to, as shown by the returns before them. As I have said, in the whole matter before them everything was run with a shameful disregard of the rights of the Republican candidate.

Now, gentlemen, I referred a moment ago to two things on the part of the State board of canvassers, and I referred to them to show the methods that were used and to show you that my rights were absolutely disregarded and trodden under foot. I had no voice in any of those matters. I could not be present and I had no authority.

Now, I am going to say something that may be aside. Take the whole thing; take the counting of the vote; take the returns of the vote; take the secret meetings; take the rush of matters; take the treatment that my friends received at every stage of the proceedings; and I want to say that in the recent great struggle we have gone through, in which you Democratic Members and Republican Members and all the men that gave your first born—I sent two sons there, and one sleeps on French soil and another may also, for aught I know—but I want to say to this House that the force and fraud and tyranny which our boys struggled against in France and Flanders was different from that which a few officials and managers of the contestee accorded my rights in North Carolina only in degree and not in kind. We were run over, knocked down, and trampled under foot. No; there was no difference, except in degree.

It was Rob Roy's maxim, "Let him take that has the power, and let him keep that can." They had the power, and they took. I could not keep. I had the right. I had not the power.

Now, gentlemen, I want to address myself to some votes other than those included in the unmarked ballots.

I want the attention of the House while I refer again to one vote to which I specially referred a moment ago.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITT. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. The same people in North Carolina counted you in once.

Mr. BRITT. Not one of the fellows that did the counting out this time. They counted me in when I had 768 majority, but if I had had only 13, I fear my fate would have been as it was this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYS. They might have robbed you of the 700.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That would be rather too big a job, brother.

Mr. BRITT. Now, let us go to the vote in the fourth precinct. I do not criticize the majority members of the committee; it is not my province. Why that vote, known as the Stone vote, was not counted is a mystery to me. There is absolute and unqualified evidence of its validity. The testimony of Stone himself shows that he has been out of the precinct 15 months and the law says that you can not stay out more than 4 months and vote. Harkins swears it, Gudger swears it, and swears that this vote was put in and then taken out. I know that it must be an oversight on the part of the committee, or they would have stricken that vote out, and they will strike it out when it is called to their attention. That reduces his claimed majority by the committee to 11. In one precinct in Waynesville, West swore he voted in the south ward. He voted for Weaver first, and they gave him a dollar, and then he went to the north ward and voted again. Why was it that the majority members did not cast that vote out? It ought to have been thrown out. That reduces the claimed majority down to 10 votes.

There are 21 votes treated on page 30 of my brief, open to your inspection. There I have set out the number of voters who claimed to have offered to vote for me, but were refused the right to vote; the same list to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] refers, and every single one of those men, with the possible exception of two, is a lawful voter. Mr. Weaver's counsel admitted, in effect, before your committee that 14 of these votes ought to have been counted. If they had been counted, as it seems to me you must count them, then, making every possible deduction, after you have given Mr. Weaver every unmarked ballot that the committee claims for him, and you have given me such as you have given me, still there is a majority of 24 votes for me; and on page 60 of my brief 156 names are set out of another class, men who voted for Mr. Weaver who had not paid their poll-taxes, or who had not lived in the State two years, or in the county six months, or in the precinct four months, or who were not in other particulars qualified. Yet there seems to have been, I am sorry to say, by the majority members of the committee, no consideration whatever of these votes. I ask that this House take into consideration these votes. Beyond peradventure there is legal evidence to show that out of 156 claimed illegal to vote for him, beyond any doubt 125 have not a scintalla of legality. I have a right to ask that those votes be cast from his votes, which would have the effect of adding an equal number to my votes.

Gentlemen, there are just a few things more to which I want to refer. One of the things is—and I refer to it here because you ought to be fully advised—that the sessions of the board of canvassers of Buncombe County were put off from day to day by a subterfuge. When they first met the votes were counted, tabulated, and were ready for proclamation. There was nothing wrong whatever with them, and even Mr. Weaver himself admitted it, and I want to read to you now what he said through the lips of one of his ardent supporters. I call it to your attention because Mr. Weaver had an opportunity to dispute it, had an opportunity to go upon the witness stand and deny it, but he never did. I read from page 192 of this record. If Mr. Weaver had let his 288 majority in Buncombe County alone, I would have had just what I did in fact have, 13 majority. John D. Sumner voted for Mr. Weaver. He worked for him tooth and nail, was one of his zealous supporters, although he was a Republican. He had become offended at me about something and he supported Mr. Weaver, and here is what he says:

> I said, "Now, Mr. Weaver, you know I was doing everything I could and assisted you and done all I could for you in the campaign, but when it comes to stealing, I am done with it."
> He stated further that they couldn't change that, and if they could they wouldn't, and if they did they couldn't lay it on him. I told him that Britt was elected, and that he knew it, by 13 majority.
> He replied that was so.

Among the men in the tenth district of North Carolina who never doubted my election for one moment at the beginning, never doubted it until men like Mr. Haynes began to say that the organization of this House depended upon it, was the contestee himself, and his friend swears that he told him that I was elected, and Mr. Weaver during 90 days of these hearings had the opportunity to go upon the witness stand and disprove it. But he never once dared to dispute the testimony of Mr. Sumner, and it stands on the record that he himself admitted my election.

Gentlemen, one word more about the canvassers. Why did they adjourn from the 9th to the 10th, from the 10th to the 11th; why the same thing on the 11th, why from the 11th to the 16th; why from the 16th to the 17th? The law says that on the day they meet they must count and return this vote. They put it off for 10 days, and for what purpose? They put it off until they could doctor the returns—doctor them sufficiently to give Mr. Weaver some sort of a prima facie majority and let the State board of canvassers award him the certificate, and when he once gets the certificate the seat belongs to him, as he thinks, and then when the decision comes it will be a late date in the term; and, I repeat, as I said at the beginning, for two long years I have knocked at the door of this House, journeying 25 times, 500 miles, to ask that my rights be adjudicated, at an expense far above the salary if I receive it; and now, within three days of the close of this term, after many, many other cases have been determined, it is up to you to determine whether I am to receive the seat for the remaining three days or whether Mr. Weaver shall continue to hold it. If it involved only the salary or the right to vote in this House, I assure you I would not have made this contest. I fought through the courts of my State, which stood like a solid wall against me. I would not have journeyed here so often; but, thank God, I have a little red blood left in my veins, and if I am finally overwhelmed and crushed I shall not cease to fight for my rights as an American citizen as long as any remedy is left me.

It is my duty to stand for those rights, and now for two long years, against majorities and opposing courts, I have fought for those rights. I appeal to you now not to vote as Democrats, not to vote as Republicans. I claim no vote from any man here because he is a Republican, but I claim I am entitled to a vote of this House on the record in this case, and that I ought to receive it. Gentlemen may say, as in two instances in North Carolina, the question of bribery was raised. A poor, loathsome creature, spotted all over like a leper with crimes, swore on one occasion that somebody had offered him something to obtain 18 votes. That creature, covered all over with crime, serving a term of three years in prison, was brought out to make an affidavit to that effect, and then, after it was done, they had such little confidence in his testimony that he was never indicted, they whom he charged were never indicted, no indictments were made on the charge of bribery. The whole thing was for the purpose of detracting attention from the gigantic frauds and abuses to which I have referred. That was all the result of the affidavit of a poor, miserable criminal, and following what was done by him, I do not say at whose instance, nor for what, but the day that he made the affidavit against me he was brought from the chain gang, and his sentence was reduced from three years on the chain gang to one year in jail instead, and he was made a "trusty," and, so far as I know, he may have been decorated and made a Knight of the Garter. [Laughter.] I mention this because nobody comes after me on my side to mention it.

Gentlemen, in conclusion I ask that you will vote on your conscience; that you will not vote by party or by section; that you will vote under that still, small voice that approves or disapproves. No three days added to the contestee's term by your votes as party men would do him or you any good. I ask it not merely to give me the brief term of three days, but I ask it in the name of justice; of the hope of the weak against the strong; in the name of a square deal. The hope of our institutions depends upon the principle that every qualified American shall have the right to cast one vote and have that vote honestly returned. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The law requires the Speaker to appoint a committee on accounts, consisting of three members, to act ad interim. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. PARK, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. JOHNSON, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SANFORD. The gentleman from Virginia has 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER], the contestee in this case. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, for two years I have occupied a seat as a Member of this body. I have occupied it believing as sincerely as any man who ever sat in this body believed it that I was elected by a majority of the voters of the tenth district of North Carolina. I do not wish to come before you, before the membership of this House, Republicans and Democrats, as a butcher of the reputations of men. My distinguished friend, who claims so many outrageous things have been perpetrated on him in North Carolina, is not careful, to say the least of it, of men who have been his friends in Buncombe County and in Asheville, close friends, and who resent, and who have resented for the last two years, the false accusations made and now repeated against them upon the floor of this House. I wish I had time to speak to you at some length upon the facts in this election case, but I have not. The contestant says that I said my majority in Buncombe County was 288, and that one of my supporters so testified. I wish to clear that up before I go further. He says that I said my majority in Buncombe County was 288. I never said any such thing to Mr. Sumners. I never said such thing to Dan W. Hill, and he knows it is false.

On the occasion referred to these gentlemen and Mr. Shelton came to me and said that somebody connected with the Buncombe board was having a secret meeting at the courthouse, and Dan Hill, one of the Republican managers, and Theodore Shelton, another, and Mr. John B. Sumners came to me, and I said, "Gentlemen, I will see that nothing like that occurs; I do not believe it," and I went with those men, although they were opposed to me politically, and I said, "If they do anything wrong here, and I am not elected, I would not accept the seat." But I found that no votes were ever counted for me that were not cast and found in the ballot boxes. And I never accepted it until the Supreme Court of North Carolina had decided the question of the legality of these ballots in the very case which the contestant brought. I think the decision was common sense, and I think it was in accord with common morals. Those ballots, though unmarked, were morally mine all the time, and the legal question was tested in the courts and I then accepted the certificate, and I now hold the seat by a majority of the votes of that district. You need not worry about that. John Sumners did not vote for me because he loved me. John was one of the progressive Republicans, and about that time, in the spring, they had had a primary election as to the Republican candidate for President of the United States to be nominated at the national convention. Nearly every Republican down there voted for Mr. Roosevelt. Ninety-five per cent of the Republicans were for him and Mr. Britt was a delegate to the national convention, and as such delegate he disregarded these instructions; and John Sumners, it is claimed, voted against him for disregarding the instruction of the primary. It was not because he loved me, but because he got mad about that incident. Here is the truth about what I said. Mr. Shelton told the truth about it, and he is one of Mr. Britt's witnesses. This is his sworn testimony in this record. He said:

> I was among the first to reach Mr. Weaver, I believe, and was present when he was informed as to what was taking place at the auditor's office, and I went with Mr. Weaver to the door and was present during the conversation that took place there, and I recall having heard Mr. Weaver say when we were talking on the street that there was only a difference of a few votes between what he claimed was his majority and what Mr. Britt claimed was his majority here. I don't recall that he stated the exact number.

How does this square with the statement of the contestant on this floor? And Shelton was his own manager and witness.

Now, that is the truth. And yet this man, claiming that he was elected, comes before you, relying upon Republican partisanship, and misrepresents such incidents as that to you. And I do resent it with every fiber of my being. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You can sit here if you wish and vote against me, but I hope there are honest Republicans upon that side who will not listen to such matters as this and to suggestions that telegrams and letters to determine their votes. I know nothing of the alleged telegram, even if the false construction asked should be placed on it. Gentlemen, if they had come to me I would have said not to send any telegram that might be misunderstood. But take all the telegrams, and they show only anxiety and do not suggest that anything should be done that way—wrong. I was not even there. I was 125 miles away from Asheville, trying a lawsuit, when the Buncombe County board acted. I never asked for a single vote to be counted for me that was not proper. I never asked for a single thing to be done that was not just. The majority report finds, and truthfully, that no vote was counted that was not cast. And you can take these 1,200 pages of the record, with all the venom of a defeated candidate—and no man has ever carried more venom in his system for the last two years than this contestant has—and I defy you, I challenge you, to find one single word or thing that I have ever said or done that does not comport with the highest honor. Yet I say that an attempt is made to distort the truth before this House. Are you going to defeat me here, gentlemen, because Mr. Elias sent some telegrams that I never saw or heard of, the meaning of which has been twisted and contorted by this contestant? My vote in Rutherford County was 2,377 and Mr. Britt's vote was 1,931—that is the true vote—and that is what each received. But I am going to tell you Republicans something that might interest you about this contestant. I am going to tell you Republicans and you Democrats something further about Rutherford County.

You received a brief recently, circulated by the contestant in this case. In that brief is a long statement about the Rutherford County vote, in which he says, gentlemen of this House, that 10 votes were taken from him and 10 votes added to me in Rutherford by failing to add up a column of figures correctly. The evidence in Rutherford in this case was taken in March, 1917. He did not file it up here before the Clerk until November of that year. He filed his brief in February, 1918, and when we opened the evidence I discovered in it an exhibit that was not offered in evidence, and was put in the record by him without legal warrant, not being a part of the evidence, and sent up here, purporting to be a certificate of the secretary of state about the Rutherford County vote.

And then I began to investigate this. He filed his brief here, claiming that something had been done to him in Rutherford County. I sent down to Rutherford and got the original returns, and what did I find? Under our law two sets of abstracts have to be made, and the original returns have to be filed in the clerk's office. The original returns were there and the other two abstracts were there. They were correct in every particular, and gave the correct vote as canvassed in each precinct; but in copying one for the secretary of state somebody made a clerical error in three of the precincts, which would have made a change, but the totals were correct all the time. I got a certified copy of those returns, of the original returns. He is strong on original returns, everywhere but in Rutherford. I put them in the record over here before the committee. The committee gave him 10 days to answer. He has not answered yet. And I charge, and I charge it openly and boldly, that he kept that matter secret, knowing that it was a clerical error, from May, 1917, until he filed his brief in February, 1918, expecting to deceive the committee and this House by what he knew was a clerical error. He has not said yet, and he would not say on this floor, what his position is in regard to Rutherford County, but attempts here now on this floor to claim that the Rutherford vote was incorrectly given and acted upon, and is in doubt. He knew this was a clerical error, and knew it for nearly a year before he filed his brief, and he tried to deceive the committee, evidently not knowing that evidence could be offered up here to refute the malicious charges against the State board and the canvassing board of Rutherford County. Why did he not, if he is honest, say, "Yes; I find that the true number of votes were given to each of us in Rutherford"? The original, undisputed original returns are on file in the clerk's office in Rutherford, and certified copies are filed with your committee. What was his duty as an honest contestant? Talk of a telegram by Mr. Elias. Get the record and the hearings and compare this deliberate attempt to defraud with a telegram that meant nothing wrong and accomplished nothing wrong.

Take him if you want him. The people have settled this question. He made it an issue in the last election. Do not forget that. He has the advantage of me; he has made that speech so many times that he has it by heart. [Laughter.] He made it before Judge Adams when he got out his mandamus. He made it before the supreme court, identically the same speech, about these unmarked ballots. He has lost every time. He has made it on the stump in western North Carolina. He has repeated it in the press in western North Carolina.

And yet, with all that, when he raised that issue in the last election, I said, "All right, make it an issue." The people there know that these unmarked ballots at Lower Hominy, Asheville No. 2, and from Asheville No. 6 were honestly cast for me. The people were there in possession of the facts, and I increased my majority in every single one of those precincts and in Buncombe County. And I will say this, since the last election we have established the Australian ballot system in Buncombe County. We have it there now. The voters went in, every man unto himself, under the Australian ballot law, and in every precinct where he charged that fraud was done I doubled the majority I had over him in 1916. [Applause.]

Let us see about his alleged 13 majority and what the Buncombe County board did.

The first thing demanded by Britt from the board on November 9, 1916, was that it should deduct from the original returns at Asheville No. 4, 1 vote cast for me by R. B. Stone. Stone was an honest man—an honest voter. He had always voted at that precinct for 17 years, and because he had moved across the street a short time before the election they demanded that this vote be deducted. The board refused to deduct this ballot from the original returns, and this man has decried the board up and down the State of North Carolina for this as a fraud.

Why did this minority committee not deduct from his vote at Asheville No. 1 the 3 illegal ballots cast for him by Burrell, English, and Tom Brown, who plead guilty to illegal voting in open court, and when the certified record of these convictions was before them?

At Lower Hominy precinct the judges found in the box 6 unmarked ballots for me. All the judges, Democrats and Republicans, testified that this was true. W. E. McCall, a candidate on the Republican ticket, testified that it was true. They were not counted with the marked vote, but a separate paper was pinned to the original returns with this statement: "Found for Mr. Weaver, 6 unmarked votes." This statement accompanied the original returns on November 9, and the board merely counted these legal votes, and they were determined by the Supreme Court of North Carolina to be legal. And he again cries "fraud" and has libeled this Buncombe County board at every opportunity.

At Asheville No. 2 there were 5 unmarked ballots for me and 1 for him. The two Democratic judges so testified; Joe Ford, the Republican judge, so testified. They further testified that it was agreed when the votes were counted that these unmarked ballots should be certified to the canvassing board to have their legality determined. The two Democratic judges, Garren and West, simply certified this fact and carried out this agreement, while Ford, the Republican judge, though he testified that the ballots were there, refused to discharge his official duty and certify to the truth. These ballots were counted for me by the Buncombe board, and this is charged as fraud in the face of the admitted facts.

At Asheville No. 6 there were 7 for me and 2 for Britt not counted. They were noted on the tally sheets as were those at Asheville No. 2. It was agreed that they should be sent to the county board to have their legality determined. This was done in accordance with this agreement and in accordance with the facts—the admitted facts—and were counted for me as the supreme court said they ought to have been counted. These ballots alone defeated this contestant.

At Tryon, N. C., there were found in the box 9 unmarked ballots for me and 1 for him. They were noted and preserved. The Democratic judges argued that they were legal, the Republican judge said they were not legal and refused to sign the returns with these ballots included, and thus kept out of the original returns these 9 votes for me. It was here also agreed that the ballots should be certified to the county canvassing board to have their legality determined. One of the judges of election states that he did present the matter to the board, but they were not counted. These ballots have not yet been counted for me, which would have increased my majority in the tenth district.

The majority of your committee have carefully considered the evidence as to every unmarked ballot not counted in the whole tenth district and finds that I was elected by at least 12 majority. Where are the morals of this matter? Shall we honestly count votes that were honestly cast, as the Buncombe County board did, or stand upon a technicality as to the marking and disfranchise the voters who cast these ballots?

Judge Adams decided against him when his mandamus was heard; the supreme court affirmed this decision and again he lost. The majority of your election committee has decided against him, and now by an organized effort he comes before the Membership of this House, asking to be seated by a partisan vote regardless of the decision of the court, regardless of the facts.

These votes were cast. There is not a single one that this majority report gives me that was not cast by an honest voter in that district. I wish I had time to go into the details of them. Yes, gentlemen, he knows they were cast and asks that he be given a seat in this Congress on a mere technicality as to marking. I would like to tell you how he got some votes that he did get. He thought I might refer to the evidence in the record as to the 18 votes bought for him at Asheville precinct No. 1. They are in the alleged majority of 13. The record shows that in the basement of the very courthouse where he was charging the Buncombe County board with fraud one of his supporters, whom he now is so ungrateful as to denounce as a criminal, bought 18 votes for him, and he now has the benefit of them in these returns. [Laughter.]

More than that, he talks of letters and telegrams. He knows that in this record there is uncontradicted evidence that in Jackson County two men admitted that they sold their votes; that they voted for him for $12.50 per vote. There is further evidence in that record that Charles J. Harris, one of the great Republican leaders in North Carolina, offered $15 to Dock Shular if he would vote for Britt, and he would not do it. Harris was an employer of Shular, and he turned him off the next day after the election because of this. We tried to get Mr. Harris on the witness stand. We subpœnaed him and he would not come. We asked for him when Mr. Britt took his evidence in Jackson, and he promised to produce him, and still he was not there to deny that.

There is evidence of corruption in Cherokee County, and in Buncombe County there is an affidavit in the record from a man by the name of Banks showing that the Britt supporters collected the voters and marched them up in solid phalanx, with one Republican leader at the head and another at the foot, to see that they voted right. The affidavit shows that they were paid. Why this marching of sovereign voters in phalanx to the polls? Telegrams? That shows how some of these votes that were counted for Britt were obtained.

Has it been shown that the telegram from Buncombe County cost Mr. Britt a single vote? Are you going to unseat me unless he shows you? The unofficial report was that Weaver's majority in Rutherford was 452. He said, "Give him more if you can." This was not an invitation to fraud; it was to a private citizen merely to see that every vote received was properly counted for me. They were sending men to all the counties, gentlemen. We did not have a German spy system in their offices as they had in ours, as we found out. [Laughter.] That telegram went over to Rutherford County on the 9th before the official count. Then Carson telegraphed back, and the brief he circulates among you does not contain this telegram. It was this:

Official vote counted. Weaver, 2,377; Britt, 1,931. No contest. Everything straight.

This was on November 9 and after the official count, which gave me 446 majority instead of 452, as unofficially reported. Where is the wrong?

He never mentions that, not for a single time. He expects you Republicans to act upon prejudice, which he attempts to build up against me, because I am a Democrat, in regard to a harmless telegram and letter, without showing any facts upon which to base his claim of election.

Now, what was done? Rumors were floating around that my majority in Rutherford County was about 452. I think both the Republican and Democratic headquarters were carrying it that way as an unofficial report. When the board met in Rutherford they counted up the vote and found my majority to be 446, 6 votes less than the figures referred to in the telegram. Is there a Republican on this side of the House who has any doubt about Rutherford County? There is no Republican in Rutherford County who thinks Mr. Britt did not get all he was entitled to.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. It was claimed that the unmarked ballots cast for you were counted and that the unmarked ballots cast for Mr. Britt were not counted. What about that? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. WEAVER. Of course, that is not the case. Let me tell you what happened before that board. Is that what you want to know?

Mr. KEARNS. I want to know about that. How about that?

Mr. PHELAN. Tell what that chart shows. That chart shows the unmarked ballots counted for Mr. Britt. It shows the unmarked ballots voted for both candidates, and it shows in some cases unmarked ballots before the contest ever arose, and in other cases it shows unmarked ballots since the contest arose.

Mr. KEARNS. It is claimed here that some unmarked ballots were counted and that others were not counted. I should like to know what the fact is.

Mr. PHELAN. The fact is that unmarked ballots were counted for both Mr. Britt and Mr. Weaver.

Mr. KEARNS. All of them?

Mr. PHELAN. All of those for which we have any evidence. Of course, there has been some dispute in some cases as to whether there was or was not a ballot. For example, one election official said there were eight for one candidate and four for the other. The other two election officers said there were seven and two. In that case we went by the preponderance of evidence; but we have counted unmarked ballots on both sides of this case.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then this chart is wrong, is it?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Absolutely.

Mr. PHELAN. That chart tells only one part of the story——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But it tells the part of the story that these men believe in.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will ask the gentleman, with reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio, if it is not a fact that the committee in making this report, or in counting these ballots, counted only the unmarked ballots for both Britt and Weaver about which there was, you might say, no controversy at all between the Republican judges and the Democratic judges.

Mr. PHELAN. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Where they agreed we counted them and where they did not agree we rejected them for both parties.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there anything in the North Carolina constitution which says that a statute can have but one object, and that must be expressed in its title?

Mr. WEAVER. No; not in North Carolina.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] to make that statement.

Mr. WEAVER. No; he said that was in the Virginia constitution.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If there is no such provision in the North Carolina constitution, was section 32 the law at the time this election was held? I notice that integrated throughout this so-called primary election law there are provisions governing general elections in North Carolina. I was led to believe by the argument made by the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. WEAVER. I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I have only 30 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should like to have the gentleman answer my question.

Mr. WEAVER. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is section 32 not the law of North Carolina?

Mr. WEAVER. It is not now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was it at the time this election was held?

Mr. WEAVER. Section 32 was in the statute at the time the election was held.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then why is it possible to count any of the unmarked ballots? This says a man must mark his ballot.

Mr. WEAVER. I would have to read you a long Supreme Court decision which determined that, and held they did not have to be marked. Now, I am going to say this to my friend from Iowa and my friend from Indiana: I am surprised that they as members of an election committee, charged with high duties, would put before this House the figures in this chart which hangs before you. I believe that Judge Watson in trying this case took as much pains to arrive at what were the true facts as if he had been sitting upon a chancery bench trying a case in equity. [Applause.] He did not give me all I asked for. He did not accept my claims. He has deducted many votes that I think I am entitled to upon the preponderance of the testimony, but where there was the slightest squint, and regardless of the overwhelming testimony in the case, these gentlemen, the minority, have attempted to put on that chart before you certain votes as cast for Mr. Britt that have no foundation. You know the difficulty of running through details like that in the few minutes I have. At Lester one judge swore there were three and another one swore there were two. But, gentlemen, I do not think Mr. Britt is entitled to a single one, because the evidence shows that there were about seven more votes already counted for Mr. Britt and me than there were men entitled to vote, as shown by the poll book. I do not think he is entitled to a single one there. The minority would increase this discrepancy.

Now, gentlemen, let us take Edneyville. The only judge of election who made any affidavit about that is on page 1160 of the record. His name is Edney. I suppose the place was named for him. His affidavit is in the record stating that there were two unmarked ballots for me and no unmarked ballot for Mr. Britt; but these gentlemen, the minority members of the committee, give one to Mr. Britt in the face of this evidence.

I want to say to you that I obtained or sent out to every election official in that district a report as to the exact number of these votes; and if they had been for Mr. Britt he could have shown it, and did show all he could. They are all in this record, and I had, in fact, a majority of 20 or 22 votes, counting all unmarked votes. Now, at Edneyville there were two for me and none for Mr. Britt. That is by the statement of the judge of the election. That is the statement made about it a few days after the election.

Take Chimney Rock. This chart gives Britt one. There was not any unmarked ballots for Mr. Britt at Chimney Rock. There were 2 for me, and Mr. Logan, the Republican judge, took them out of the box, dropped them down, and put his foot on them, and said, "Two illegal votes for Mr. Weaver." That was the way he disposed of them. They asked me, "Why did you not have a recount?" I said, "I could not get them out from under the feet of these judges."

Now, there was apparently 1 illegal vote put in the box at Chimney Rock. It was not an unmarked ballot, but a man voted, and then it developed that some months before the election, about July, 1916, he had moved over into McDowell County and was a resident of that county. Mr. Logan, one of the judges, said they took out that ballot. The other two judges said they did talk about it, but that they did not take it out at all, and it is still in there for Mr. Britt, and he asks to count it for him again. Why does this minority report try to give it to him again? But they claim it was cast and that the precinct judges had no right to deduct it after it was cast. Logan said the man had removed to McDowell County. Chimney Rock is in Rutherford. But suppose it had not been counted; it was illegal, and even then there should be uniformity in handling such ballots. If they go on that theory, there is an undisputed vote for me in the county of Cherokee. A man voted for me. Somebody raised the question as to whether he had paid his poll tax. He had not, but he had gone to list his taxes. It was a Republican county, and the tax lister said, "Well, you are so near 50 years of age that I will not charge you with a poll." It was a Republican official that said that. If he had charged him with the poll tax it would have been paid, but they took out one vote for me that had been deposited that day by this voter. Another young fellow voted in the adjoining precinct. He had been out to Oklahoma working in a packing house. He came up and voted for me, but the Democrats got uncertain about it and they took that vote out, and so if you give the vote to Britt at Chimney Rock, you ought to give me these two in Cherokee County.

At Hazel I am entitled to two votes, but Mr. Britt does not want to give me any. I am entitled to two votes on his own testimony.

Take the five precincts where the unmarked votes were counted in Buncombe County. If this case were before a jury the judge would have to tell the jury, "If you believe the contestant's evidence you will find the facts as the Buncombe board found them." That is a strong statement, but I mean every word of it. At Lower Hominy, six for Weaver are admitted; at Asheville No. 2, five for Weaver, one for Britt admitted; at Asheville No. 6, seven for Weaver, two for Britt, shown on tally sheet, proven by three witnesses, and practically admitted by the Republican judge. These defeated Britt. Did the Buncombe board commit a fraud when it acted only on the truth? The Republican judge swore these votes were found for me. At Hazel, what was the fact there? I am entitled to four votes. Spivey, who is a Democrat, was put on the stand by the contestant. He swore that there were four unmarked ballots for Weaver and one for Britt. Miller, Republican judge, said he remembered only one for Britt, and even said he was tallying, and he knew at one time during the count there were two for Weaver and one for Britt. Carlin corroborated Spivey. So I ought to have had four votes, but the minority disregard Britt's own evidence, take four votes from me, and give him one. That is the treatment I receive at the hands of this minority membership of the committee.

At Beaver Dam there was a controversy. One judge said there were five unmarked votes for Britt. Another judge and Ed Blackstocks, who kept the tally, said three, but the record shows that the aggregate vote already counted was greater than the number of men who voted at the precinct.

At Block Mountain two judges said there were none for either of us; and again the record shows that the vote already counted for both of us exceeded the number of men who voted by ten.

But the minority, in both these instances, disregard the facts, and attempt on this chart to give the contestant five at Beaver Dam and two at Block Mountain. But give him all these and the undisputed and conclusive evidence still gives me a substantial majority.

The Buncombe board has been maliciously assailed on the ground that they counted some for me and did not count other precincts. They counted every unmarked ballot shown by any sort of returns from every precinct, and they did not count any until they had submitted the question of their legality to Gen. Davidson, Bourne, and others, who filed a written opinion with the board. Did these disinterested attorneys advise fraud? No.

I could go on down through these other precincts shown on this chart. Let me tell you something about Bushnell. When they sent in the returns from Bushnell they sent up a Britt vote that just had my name marked off and the word "Britt" written on it. The judges did not know whether to count it or not. They sent it up and told the canvassing board in Swain County that they had a vote like that down there and did not count it in the original returns, and the board said to add it on. Gentlemen, have you ever heard of this contestant complaining of things like that? I say that it was right to put it there; but when they add a few honest votes that were counted for me in Buncombe, that I am going to show you were on the tally sheets, votes from Lower Hominy, 6 votes pinned to the original returns, 5 from Asheville No. 2, and 7 from Asheville No. 6, all voted on the tally sheets—when they count a few votes like that honestly cast for me—then he has howled and whined all over the State of North Carolina, and continues to do it, in order to obtain a seat in this Congress.

Take Bryson City. They gave him 1 there. The evidence of this is not worthy of consideration—should not stand in any court. L. B. Woodward, the election judge, swears all unmarked ballots were counted, but the minority report disregards this. At the same time this minority declined to give me a marked vote there that one of the judges swore was taken out of the box as a sample to mark another by and forgot to count it, and took it up to the canvassing board and they did not count it. They counted one for Britt and did not count for me. I ought to have 1 there.

They say that Britt had 2 votes in the south ward of Waynesville. Let me show you what the judge said there. Just to test the accuracy of the figures I want to read you what the only judge who testified about it said in regard to those votes. Mr. Mott, a mere bystander, swore he thought there were 2 unmarked votes for Mr. Britt. They chalk them up there for Britt, but Mr. Cagle, one of the judges, testified, and here is what he swore:

Q. Mott swore in September here at this place on behalf of Britt that he recalled 3 unmarked votes for Britt that were thrown out and not counted.—A. There was not one that was not counted. If there were any, they were counted. Every ticket that was in that box was counted. I counted them to Mr. Williams, one at a time, and Mr. Williams counted them.

Q. Was that unmarked ballot counted?—A. Yes.

Q. So every unmarked ballot found there for Mr. Britt was counted for him?—A. Yes; there was not any ticket thrown out.

While he has denounced the unmarked ballot as illegal, in this very instance of South Waynesville, upon the undisputed evidence, he is the recipient in the original returns of 2 unmarked ballots to make up his boasted 13, and the minority come in here now and wish to add 2 more for him, votes already counted and included in the original returns from that precinct.

Mr. GORDON. Who were the candidates in that district last fall—the same ones?

Mr. WEAVER. The same ones.

Mr. GORDON. What was the majority?

Mr. WEAVER. I had about 1,100. Upon the morals of this thing, the people of my district have passed upon an appeal made to them by this contestant. He made it the issue. I know that it is not in evidence here, still Mr. Britt referred to it. He made it expressly the issue and said that the people would adjust these differences between us. I told him all right, and when the returns came in, instead of his being elected, as he claimed he would be, I carried every Democratic county in the district by an increased vote and reduced the majority in every Republican county in the district. Now he comes up here and asks you to seat him.

Let us take East Flat Rock. The minority give Mr. Britt one unmarked vote there. As a matter of fact the Republican judge and the Democratic judge—and the testimony of the two judges is in here—said there was not one for either of us, and yet because a little fellow by the name of Jones said he thought there was one there for Mr. Britt they gave it to him, the Republican judge himself in this record having testified that there was not one for either one of us. This is a fair sample of this chart and the bona fides of the minority report.

I might say the same thing as to Rutherfordton. I want to test the accuracy of this statement a little further——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia (interrupting the count). I withdraw that until I can offer a resolution. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Zebulon Weaver was elected a Member of this Congress and is entitled to his seat in this House.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker I desire to offer the following substitute for the resolution just read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Zebulon Weaver was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-fifth Congres from the tenth congressional district of North Carolina and is not entitled to retain his seat therein.

Resolved, That James J. Britt was duly elected a Representative in the Sixty-fifth Congress from the tenth congressional district of North Carolina and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The vote is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-one gentlemen are present, a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the substitute resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa that Britt is entitled to his seat and Weaver is not.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 182, nays 177, answered "present" 6, not voting 65, as follows:

So the substitute resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. LEHLBACH (for) with Mr. PARK (against).

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. RIORDAN (against).

Mr. SWIFT (for) with Mr. MARTIN (against).

Mr. FREAR (for) with Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (against).

Mr. TOWNER (for) with Mr. DOREMUS (against).

Mr. EDMONDS (for) with Mr. SULLIVAN (against).

Mr. TREADWAY (for) with Mr. BOOHER (against).

Mr. MCARTHUR (for) with Mr. WHALEY (against).

Mr. COSTELLO (for) with Mr. HAMILL (against).

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (for) with Mr. AYRES (against).

Mr. SNYDER (for) with Mr. DEWALT (against).

Mr. BUTLER (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. EMERSON.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. SHERLEY with Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. VINSON with Mr. FRANCIS.

Mr. HELM with Mr. GLYNN.

Mr. HELVERING with Mr. ROBERTS.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER with Mr. VARE.

Mr. TAGUE with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from California, Mr. HAYES. After I answered "present" he came in the Hall and we agreed to destroy the pair, and I therefore desire to vote "no."

The name of Mr. BANKHEAD was called, and he voted "no."

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. TOWNER, recorded?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. DOREMUS. I desire to change my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. DOREMUS was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ASWELL, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we could not understand.

The SPEAKER. He said he was in the Hall, listening. The gentleman qualifies. There is no question about that.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. ESCH, to vote "present," but I understood when the Clerk called his name he called him as voting "aye."

The SPEAKER. He voted "aye."

Mr. BURNETT. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, this vote is very close. I ask that the vote be recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. We will see how close it is. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to a recapitulation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask how Mr. BROWNE, of Wisconsin, voted.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman has no right to find out how a man voted. The recapitulation will show that.

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman has no right. There is only 2 difference in the vote—181 to 179.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Which way? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to a recapitulation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the Chair announced the figures, but did not state which side.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and I am not going to until the recapitulation.

Mr. WALSH. Of what value is the recapitulation?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will listen, the Chair will tell him. Until a final announcement is made any Member has the right to call for a recapitulation, but if the Chair has announced which side carries it, he can not change his vote. It is a fine distinction, but that is it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. When the vote is submitted to the Speaker, should he not announce the vote?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker did announce the vote.

Mr. DOWELL. But not on which side the vote was cast.

The SPEAKER. The Chair just explained that to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. DOWELL. I understand.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Iowa seems to understand, but does not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the vote was 181 to 179?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One hundred and eighty-one noes? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced it, 181 ayes and 179 noes. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose some Member should come in and, on recapitulation, he said he voted "aye" when he voted "no"?

The SPEAKER. Until the final announcement is made any gentleman has the right to change his vote if he wants to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHELAN. Can a man who is in the Chamber, listening now, vote if he has not been here before? If a man was in the Chamber listening when his name was called, can he vote if he has not already voted?

The SPEAKER. Of course not. The recapitulation is only to verify what is here. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

During the recapitulation,

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, did the Clerk call my name?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name was called. He is down here voting in the affirmative. Does the gentleman want to change his vote?

Mr. SWITZER. No.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I wish to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia changes his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote. I voted under a misapprehension. I was here during the debate this afternoon. When the Speaker asked me if I was present I thought he referred to my being present during the debate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the Clerk call my name on the recapitulation.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is because you were not in the Hall.

Mr. THOMAS. I was in the Hall and voted "aye."

Mr. DONOVAN. I supposed I was asked if I was present during the debate. I want to state that I went to my dinner. When I was asked if I was in the Hall, listening, I supposed the Speaker had reference to my being present during the debate, but it seems the Speaker had reference to the vote. I was not here when my name was called. I understand I have no right to vote, and so I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman from Minnesota said I was not here.

After recapitulation,

The SPEAKER. The changes in the vote make the vote stand 182 yeas, 177 nays, present 5. The substitute is carried.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute has just been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to reconsider the vote by which the substitute has been adopted. Those in favor will say "aye."

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. GARLAND. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. We could not hear the Speaker, even.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again announce the vote. The recapitulation of the vote, with the changes, makes the figures stand yeas 182, nays 177, present 5, and the substitute is carried. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] moves to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was carried.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of reconsidering this vote will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 177, answered "present" 2, not voting 71, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was called, and he voted "yea."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. AYRES (for) with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (against).

Mr. HAMILL (for) with Mr. COSTELLO (against).

Mr. PARK (for) with Mr. LEHLBACH (against).

Mr. STEELE (for) with Mr. BUTLER (against).

Mr. DEWALT (for) with Mr. SNYDER (against).

Mr. MARTIN (for) with Mr. SWIFT (against).

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (for) with Mr. FREAR (against).

Mr. DOREMUS (for) with Mr. TOWNER (against).

Mr. SULLIVAN (for) with Mr. EDMONDS (against).

Mr. BOOHER (for) with Mr. TREADWAY (against).

Mr. WHALEY (for) with Mr. MCARTHUR (against).

Mr. RIORDAN (for) with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. HILLIARD with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. GARD with Mr. BROWNE.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. WALDOW.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a recapitulation, and I think he is entitled to it.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting in the affirmative.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. What is the proper time to call attention to any inaccuracy in the vote as read?

The SPEAKER. Now or never.

Mr. DYER. Then I desire to challenge the vote of Mr. CALDWELL, his name having been read as voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. His name was not read.

Mr. DYER. I understood the Clerk to read it.

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting in the negative.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, did the Clerk call the name of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEARNS, as voting nay?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those answering "present."

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. SHERLEY, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. SHERLEY, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, and have not voted.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is paired with our absent leader.

The SPEAKER. On this vote as corrected the yeas are 179, the nays are 176, present 2; the motion to reconsider is carried, and the question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. MANN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Everybody wants the yeas and nays. Obviously a sufficient number. Those in favor of the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will answer yea, those opposed will answer nay, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 183, answered "present" 6, not voting 56, as follows:

YEAS—185.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. AYRES (against).

Mr. SNYDER (for) with Mr. DEWALT (against).

Mr. BUTLER (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Mr. GOULD (for) with Mr. Charles B. SMITH (against).

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. RIORDAN (against).

Mr. SWIFT (for) with Mr. MARTIN (against).

Mr. FREAR (for) with Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (against).

Mr. TOWNER (for) with Mr. DOREMUS (against).

Mr. EDMONDS (for) with Mr. SULLIVAN (against).

Mr. TREADWAY (for) with Mr. BOOHER (against).

Mr. MCARTHUR (for) with Mr. WHALEY (against).

Mr. LEHLBACH (for) with Mr. PARK (against).

Mr. COSTELLO (for) with Mr. HAMILL (against).

Till further notice:

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. WOODYARD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SMITH. I voted yea. I wish to change my vote to present.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire if the gentleman from California, Mr. RANDALL, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is recorded.

Mr. MANN. He did not vote. Some other gentleman answered for him, but Mr. RANDALL did not vote.

The SPEAKER. Is Mr. RANDALL here?

Mr. MANN. I shall not name the other man who answered for him, but I know who he is.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Name him.

Mr. MANN. I will not, because I am not certain that he did do it inadvertently.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I ask that the gentleman name him.

The SPEAKER. He does not have to name him unless he wants to.

Mr. LITTLE. Is the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. ROBINSON, recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. LITTLE. I am paired with the gentleman, and so have answered "present."

The SPEAKER. The name of Mr. RANDALL ought to be erased from the roll.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MANN. A question of privilege can not interrupt a roll call.

The SPEAKER. Nothing can interrupt a roll call.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, this vote is very close. I ask that it be recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. Let us see whether it is close enough or not.

Mr. CRISP. It is close enough, all right.

Mr. MANN. I hope I will not have to make that request the next time.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 185, the nays are 183, answering "present" 5, and the vote is close enough to justify a recapitulation.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRIEST, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the Watson resolution as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. On that, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. All those in favor of the Watson resolution as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa will vote "aye" and those opposed will vote "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 182, answered "present" 6, not voting 57, as follows:

YEAS—185.

Anderson	Foss	Lundeen	Rowland

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. BOOHER (against) with Mr. TREADWAY (for).

Mr. EDMONDS (for) with Mr. SULLIVAN (against).

Mr. TOWNER (for) with Mr. DOREMUS (against).

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (against) with Mr. FREAR (for).

Mr. SWIFT (for) with Mr. MARTIN (against).

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. RIORDAN (against).

Mr. GOULD (for) with Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH (against).

Mr. BUTLER (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Mr. DEWALT (against) with Mr. SNYDER (for).

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (for) with Mr. AYRES (against).

Mr. PARK (against) with Mr. LEHLBACH (for).

Mr. HAMILL (against) with Mr. COSTELLO (for).

Mr. WHALEY (against) with Mr. MCARTHUR (for).

Until further notice:

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. WOODYARD.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 183 and the noes 184.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. A recapitulation is ordered.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those who voted in the affirmative.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I voted yea on that roll call, and I have not heard my name recapitulated as among those voting yea.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is recorded among those who voted in the negative.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I voted yea.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will change the vote to conform to the statement of the gentleman.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those who voted nay.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia (interrupting the recapitulation). Mr. Speaker, how did the Clerk have me recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to change my vote from the negative to the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia changes his vote from nay to yea, and the Clerk will so record him.

The Clerk concluded the recapitulation of those who voted in the negative.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those who answered "present."

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 185, nays 182, present 6, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Manual says, and I think that is a correct statement of parliamentary law:

> The motion to reconsider a vote on a proposition having been once agreed to, and the said vote having again been taken, a second motion to reconsider may not be made unless the nature of the proposition has been changed by amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question. Does not he think this is entirely changed?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. It is the same proposition, precisely. There is a good deal of question as to whether there was any necessity of having this vote, but the nature of the proposition has not been changed. It is precisely the same proposition which we considered before and upon which the vote was had after reconsideration, precisely.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. The gentleman from Massachusetts is making so much noise——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from South Carolina would keep still we would get through.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman from South Carolina has got a right to have order, and gentlemen have no right to make a disturbance over there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is noisy but seldom sensible. Now, here is exactly the same proposition——

The SPEAKER. Is it not exactly crosswise?

Mr. MANN. No; it is the same question precisely. How many times are we going to reconsider? I did not offer, when it looked as though the vote might be against us, to change my vote for the purpose of reconsidering, because I was satisfied that we had no right to a reconsideration after this vote under the rules, and I did not think—oh, I know the Speaker would not consider it from any partisan point of view [applause], but there must be an end to all conflict. Even as it is, we have had four or five votes upon the same proposition every time. It has only been one proposition voted upon in the House since we commenced to call the roll. How many times have we had a roll call—four or five times, I am not sure which? It has been the same proposition, and now to say you can reconsider—of course, it is a different stage of the proceedings, but it is a different stage of the proceeding if you reconsider and have a vote over again. It is a different stage of proceeding. The question is whether it is the same proposition under the precedents, or whether it has been changed by amendment, and there has been no change made, not the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." We have voted upon the same proposition now at least four times. I do not think it is possible, under proper parliamentary procedure, to keep the House voting forever upon a proposition because on one vote it goes one way and on another vote it goes the other way. On that idea a gentleman of the House on the next vote might keep us bobbing back and forth here all night purposely in order to take up time.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Suppose the House had decided that neither Mr. Britt nor Mr. Weaver was elected. Would it not have the right to ask for a reconsideration, and then they could declare neither one elected?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; but that has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. GARNER. It has.

Mr. MANN. Absolutely nothing to do with the question.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. Suppose a man on the first vote felt this way, that if either one of these men should get the seat it ought to be Britt. He may say I think neither one ought to have it, but if either man ought to have it, it ought to be Britt, therefore on the first vote I will vote for Mr. Britt. Now, when it comes to the second vote that man, without being in any way inconsistent, will vote against Mr. Britt because he does not want either man, which shows it is a different question involved in these two motions. [Cries of "Oh!"]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if any man here thinks that neither Mr. Britt nor Mr. Weaver was elected he has got no chance to vote that way at all. There is no resolution pending here that Mr. Weaver was not elected.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANN. In the original proposition there was no such proposition presented.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANN. Now it can not be separated.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman thinks neither one was elected, he had better go outside and hang himself. He can not vote that way now. If this resolution does not carry, there is no way of preventing Mr. Weaver keeping his seat. If this amendment does not prevail, there is no motion in order, and so Mr. Weaver was not elected.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman need not refer to me as he did. I am taking this proposition as I see it. I believe Mr. Weaver should be seated. I have been on this committee and have gone through all the evidence——

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to an argument.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman made a remark he need not have made. A man here might very well believe anything, in view of all this evidence, with 400 ballots in doubt; and I defy anybody on earth to come to a conclusion from those ballots. With 400 ballots in doubt, you might very well feel that way; and that is the way I feel.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what I call attention to is the fact that there is no chance under the existing parliamentary procedure for a man to vote that way.

Mr. PHELAN. He has had the chance, just as I have described.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A very simple test, Mr. Speaker, will show how utterly fallacious is the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If these propositions are the same, tell me why the second vote? If the first vote seated Mr. Britt, why was it necessary to take this second vote, and the fact that in order to seat him it was necessary to proceed to a second vote, absolutely demonstrates that the first vote was short of accomplishing the desired result. The first step in conjunction with a second is necessary to seat the contestant. One plus one, is not the same thing, or equal to one. As to the argument that a Member can keep the House here all night by switching backward and forward, that suggestion is as fallacious as the other contention of the gentleman from Illinois. If this switch fails to reconsider the pending proposition, Mr. Britt is absolutely and finally seated. This matter is thereby at once finally and fully disposed of. Hence there is no possibility of keeping the House in session all night by the simple act of switching backward and forward. We could reconsider the vote on the first proposition, because that was a vote on a single, distinct proposition. We reconsidered it. The question then arose as to agreeing to the substitute. We agreed to it. But that did not seat Mr. Britt. If it did, why did not the House stop at that point? Plainly it was necessary to take another step. The House took the first step toward seating the contestant. We are now dealing with the second phase of the proposition, and one absolutely essential to the determination of Mr. Britt's right to his seat. If we vote down this motion to reconsider, then, as I said a moment ago, that action will absolutely settle for all time all question of controversy in this situation. By refusing to reconsider Mr. Britt's right to a seat in this House will be finally established.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. I would just like to reply briefly to the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The first question before the House was the Dowell amendment in the nature of a substitute declaring that Mr. Britt was elected. The substitute was adopted. The question then came upon the Watson motion as amended by the substitute, and that was exactly the same proposition to submit to the House; the Watson motion was amended, and it comes clearly within the rules cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. You first voted upon the amendment and then voted upon the proposition as amended, and the House has never yet voted upon the Watson motion as a separate proposition. You are voting upon the same proposition both times, first as an amendment and then on a motion amended. And so the motion to reconsider could not be made first upon the amendment, and after the amendment is adopted, taking the original proposition as amended, you could not then make another motion to reconsider that, because you are moving to reconsider the same proposition in another stage of parliamentary procedure. And I submit that the substitute having been adopted, it comes within the rule cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. MANN. Why not have a direct vote?

Mr. GARNER. To lay it on the table is the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Well, we can stay all night, too.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is a motion to lay on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SABATH. Let us get through with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks that the vote be taken by the yeas and nays, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those who favor the motion to adjourn will indicate it by saying "aye"; those opposed will say "nay."

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks for a division. Those who favor the motion to adjourn will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-one gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. The ayes will be seated and the noes will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-one gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 151 and the noes are 171.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table. Those in favor of the motion will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 186, answered "present" 4, not voting 59, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. ESCH.

Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. WOODYARD.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. VARE.

On this vote:

Mr. MONTAGUE (for) with Mr. SLEMP (against).

Mr. DEWALT (for) with Mr. FOCHT (against).

Mr. SCULLY (for) with Mr. DRUKKER (against).

Mr. HAMILL (for) with Mr. COSTELLO (against).

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska (for) with Mr. FREAR (against).

Mr. SULLIVAN (for) with Mr. EDMONDS (against).

Mr. AYRES (for) with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (against).

Mr. PARK (for) with Mr. LEHLBACH (against).
Mr. POU (for) with Mr. WILSON of Illinois (against).
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. STEVENSON, vote?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. STEVENSON, did not vote.
Mr. DOMINICK. What gentleman from South Carolina did the gentleman from Pennsylvania inquire about?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked if the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. STEVENSON, had voted.
Mr. LEVER. Did the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. STEVENSON, vote? Is he recorded?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not vote.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The effect of the vote just announced is that the ruling of the Speaker does not stand as the judgment of the House, and the point of order against the motion to reconsider is sustained. The Chair therefore announces that the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is adopted, thereby establishing the right of the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Britt, to a seat in this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]
The SPEAKER took the chair.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I present the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BRITT, to take the oath of office.
Mr. BRITT appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill (H. R. 14516) for printing under the rule.
The SPEAKER. The conference report and statement will be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up a conference report.
Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MANN. If the House should adjourn now to meet to-morrow under the agreement that has been heretofore made—I was not in the House when it was made—would to-morrow be the legislative day of Saturday or Sunday?
The SPEAKER. To-morrow is Sunday and it would be the legislative day of Sunday. To-day would not extend over.
Mr. MANN. I did not know what the agreement was, whether we would take a recess or not.
The SPEAKER. Unless we take a recess, to-morrow will be a separate day.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. KITCHIN. Under the agreement for the House to meet to-morrow, if we adjourn to-night we would adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m.?
The SPEAKER. Yes.
Mr. KITCHIN. After the memorial exercises the House could do any other business it desired. Suppose it should recess by unanimous consent or by motion until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, that ends at once, because the session we have all agreed on begins at 11 o'clock to-morrow.
Mr. MANN. I did not understand the arrangement. I understood that the House was to meet to-morrow for the purpose of eulogies, but I was not in the Hall when the arrangement was made. If we are to go on with business to-morrow—and I apprehend that we are—we ought to do it under the legislative day of Saturday and not under the legislative day of Sunday.
Mr. KITCHIN. We could, by unanimous consent, set the order aside and then get unanimous consent to recess until 11 o'clock with the understanding that from 11 to 12 we will have the eulogies .
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13026. I do not call it up for the purpose of transacting any business to-night, but I simply want to get recognition.
Mr. COLLIER. What is the bill?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is the hospital bill.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Florida as soon as we get through the memorial exercises to-morrow.

ACCOUNTS BETWEEN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of filing a report concerning the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not file the report in that way, but he can include the report in his remarks.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The report contains no recommendation and the parliamentarian says that it will have to be done in this way.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the request is.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I said, I wish to include a statement showing the work done by the Committee on the District of Columbia in inquiring into the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The report is as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF ACCOUNTS BETWEEN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND UNITED STATES.

REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, APPOINTED UNDER AUTHORITY OF PROVISIONS OF THE ACTS OF APRIL 17, 1917, AND MARCH 28, 1918, OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

Acting under authority of a provision of the deficiency appropriation act of April 17, 1917, and a similar provision of the deficiency appropriation act of March 28, 1918, the chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia appointed a subcommittee, composed of Mr. JOHNSON (Kentucky), Mr. HILLIARD, and Mr. MAPES, to continue the investigation previously authorized of the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States. This investigation during the Sixty-fifth Congress, made with the assistance of accountants, disclosed that the District of Columbia was indebted to the United States as follows:

On account of the construction and equipment of the District jail	$125,000.00
On account of a loan to pay teachers in the District public schools	97,740.50
On account of the unpaid balance of a loan to defray District of Columbia expenses of the fiscal year of 1878	75,000.00
On account of loan made to the District of Columbia for the support of schools of the District of Columbia	75,000.00
On account of loan made to the District of Columbia to defray the expense of constructing and equipping a school building in Georgetown, D. C	50,865.00
	423,605.50

The reports of the accountants showing the foregoing items of indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States were referred first to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, with the request that this committee be informed as to whether these reports were in accord with the books and records of the District of Columbia. In each instance the Commissioners of the District of Columbia informed the subcommittee that the reports of the accountants, according to the books and records of the District of Columbia, were correct and that payment had not been made of any of the several items of indebtedness. The reports of the accountants were then referred to the House Committee on Appropriations. As a result of this latter reference the Appropriations Committee made provision in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1919 for the payment by the District of Columbia to the United States of the first two items stated above, viz, $125,000 and $97,400. This bill became a law on August 31, 1918, and these two amounts have been refunded by the District of Columbia to the United States. In addition, as a result of the reference just mentioned, the Appropriations Committee made provisions in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1920 for the payment to the United States by the District of Columbia of the remaining items enumerated above, viz, $75,000 and $50,865. This latter bill was passed by both Houses of Congress and is now in conference between the two Houses. No objection has been made in either House to the payment of these debts by the District of Columbia to the United States.
The subcommittee further reports that previous investigations of the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States made by the Committee on the District of Columbia and subcommittees thereof, with the assistance of accountants, disclosed the following additional items of indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States, all of which have since been paid, viz:

Relief of poor account, 1879	$3,825.00
Error, deduction from revenue, 1897	8,952.08
Interest paid on these two items	2,810.96
Washington Market Co., rentals	166,012.50
Interest on 3.65 bonds	586,067.23
Government Hospital for Insane	282,754.26
Court fines in United States cases	235,750.88
	1,286,172.91

Because of the investigations made by the subcommittee on the District of Columbia, there was also paid by the District of Columbia to the United States $719,536.09 on account of other errors in the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States relating to the Government Hospital for the Insane.
The report of the accountants on the above item of $166,012.50, Washington Market Co., rentals, was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury and approved by him. Additional to the refunding by the District of Columbia to the United States of this last-named amount, the effect of the approval of the report of the accountants by the Comptroller of the Treasury is that the United States has received, or will hereafter receive, rentals from the Washington Market Co. in the amount of $202,500 (assuming that this company is permitted to retain possession of Center Market), which otherwise would have been lost to the United States.

The aggregate of the foregoing amounts which have heretofore been recovered or which will hereafter be recovered by the United States as a direct result of the investigations conducted by the committee is $2,631,814.50.

All of which is now reported to the House of Representatives.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, March 2, 1919.

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 1, 1919.)

The Senate met at 1 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR HUSTING.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. No. 482) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Senator from Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, PAUL O. HUSTING was born in the city of Fond du Lac, Wis., April 25, 1866. His father, John P. Husting, a native of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, emigrated to the United States in 1855. It has been my privilege to know the father of my late colleague and friend, Senator HUSTING. He is a man of rare character and exceptional refinement, a skilled watchmaker, who brought with him from his fatherland a love of music and art and a ready command of several languages.

The mother of Senator HUSTING is a woman of that native power and marked individuality so typical of our strong pioneer stock. She is the daughter of Solomon Juneau, who, in 1818, founded the city of Milwaukee. A foolish pride in ancestry is a weakness. A just pride in ancestry may inspire a worthy ambition in one to render a high service to his generation and to posterity. I venture to dwell for a moment upon this branch of the ancestry of the late Senator HUSTING.

Solomon Juneau was the first white man who located on the present site of Milwaukee, where as the representative of the American Fur Co. he established a trading post. He built there the first log house in 1822, and two years later the first frame dwelling erected in Milwaukee. In 1835 he was appointed the first postmaster, and in 1846 he was chosen as the first mayor of Milwaukee. He died in 1856. He was at one time a man of great wealth and owned a large portion of the land on which was finally builded the metropolis of Wisconsin.

Solomon Juneau was of pure French or Alsatian ancestry, and was an honest, upright, forceful man, the trusted friend and counselor of the great body of Indians then living in the Territory of Wisconsin.

The author of the Pioneer History of Milwaukee says of Juneau:

> He was, without exception, the finest looking specimen of his race that I have ever seen. In height over 6 feet, large of frame, and straight as an arrow.

On an eminence in Juneau Park, overlooking the city of Milwaukee, and facing the sun as it rises over Lake Michigan, stands the commanding bronze statue of Solomon Juneau, the grandfather of Senator HUSTING.

The wife of Solomon Juneau, the grandmother of our deceased colleague, was of French and Indian blood. She was the grandniece of La Farrinee, the old Menomonie king. She was a woman of striking presence and high courage. On more than one occasion it is recorded that she saved the lives of the first settlers of that section, who would otherwise have fallen victims to Indian vengeance.

From his ancestry upon both sides Senator PAUL O. HUSTING inherited a fine nature, sterling integrity of character, and a rugged, intrepid courage that would make no compromise with defeat.

The great fortune which his mother would have inherited was swept away before her father's death.

The boy PAUL received a common-school education, and at the age of 17 challenged his fortunes single handed and alone.

He resolved to become a lawyer. His people had no means to advance his ambition. He had but the meager education that one could acquire in the district school. And yet that boy had in him the worthy purpose, the grim determination to cross swords with fate, and to fight his way to a high place among his fellow men.

Mr. President, with a father of pleasing address; with a grandfather on the maternal side, who, the author of the Pioneer History of Milwaukee says, was the finest specimen of manhood he had ever seen in his life; with a grandmother, the wife of Solomon Juneau, a woman of commanding and queenly appearance, it was one of the curious tricks of fate that our late colleague was endowed with a fine nature, a keen appreciation of art, music, and the best literature, and a vigorous mind, was so handicapped physically that he was at no inconsiderable disadvantage as a speaker. And yet so resolute was his purpose, so deep and sincere were his convictions, so direct and forceful his reasoning, that he became an effective and powerful debater and public speaker.

He was resolved to become a lawyer. He clerked in a general store. He passed the required examination and entered the Postal Service as a railway mail clerk. Is it to be wondered at, let me say to Senators, that this man all through his political life was found fighting on the side of the great masses of the people, with a keenly sensitive interest in the hard struggles of the worker?

Later he secured the position of assistant bookkeeper in the office of the secretary of state of Wisconsin. All the while his eye was on the position to which he aspired. He was climbing higher and higher. He wanted to be a lawyer. He had to get his legal education; he had no means with which to support himself while he did it. He had to hack his own way through all of the obstacles that lay ahead of him; but he never swerved from that fixed purpose which had entered his mind as a boy.

An interesting story is told of HUSTING, then a rugged, big-shouldered, sturdy, farmer-looking boy, going into the office of Gov. Peck, of Wisconsin, at that time. In his plain, homely, direct way he said, "Gov. Peck, I want a job where I can work and earn my salary and where I can attend the university law school." He at once secured the position from the warm-hearted governor of Wisconsin.

At last the way was opened for him to achieve his cherished ambition, and he entered the law school of the University of Wisconsin. In 1895 he passed the State bar examination and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession at Mayville, Wis. He soon became known throughout his county as a safe counselor and successful trial lawyer. In 1902 he was elected district attorney of Dodge County and reelected in 1904.

During the period in which young HUSTING was winning his way as a lawyer in Dodge County events were transpiring in the State which had an important bearing upon his career.

A political contest of profound significance came on in Wisconsin early in the nineties and continued for many years. It produced a deep and lasting impression on the life of the State and exerted an influence in many other States. It was a struggle for progressive democracy, democracy that is always advancing and that never halts; it was a determined effort, as it was first to put forth in the State, to bring the Government back to the people. It appealed strongly to Mr. HUSTING, who became active with the more progressive element of the Democratic Party, and was finally elected from Dodge County to the Wisconsin State Senate in 1906.

At that time, I may say, the majority of the Democratic Party was not controlled by the progressive element, and it is a testimonial to the aggressiveness, the power, and the forcefulness of this man that when he turned aside from his professional life to take part in the politics of Wisconsin the progressive element of the Democratic Party of that State was in the minority, but under the leadership of this self-made man and the others who worked with him the Democratic Party of Wisconsin became a progressive Democratic Party.

The great body of the progressive laws of Wisconsin had been enacted before Mr. HUSTING entered the State senate. But he at once became prominent in that body as the leading progressive Democrat, and was especially active in working for legislation to protect the natural resources of the State, and to carry forward step by step in an intelligent way legislation to advance and improve industrial and social conditions.

His leadership as a progressive Democrat made him the most available candidate of his party for the United States Senate in 1914. His great personal strength with the people generally who had confidence in his high purpose to serve public interest brought him such support among independent voters that he was elected to the United States Senate to succeed Hon. Isaac Stephenson for the term of office ending March 4, 1921.

The election of Senator HUSTING to the United States Senate from a strong Republican State testifies to the respect and the trust which the people of that Commonwealth reposed in the man. He had served but eight years in the State senate, but that brief period had sufficed to make him known everywhere as a man of sterling integrity, a close student of public affairs, an able debator, and a conscientious legislator keenly alert and sensitive at all times for the public interest.

As a Member of the United States Senate, as in the legislature of his native State, he impressed his colleagues with his industry, his courage, and devotion to his convictions at any cost or sacrifice.

In this body he stood squarely with the little band of progressive Senators who sought to secure a just system of taxation to support the war, voting independently on every single amendment that was offered here to increase the taxes upon wealth. Those amendments were voted down; but, pressing on and on, he supported by speech and vote, one after another, all those amendments, because they were sanctioned by his convictions. That was the spirit of the man. Upon all economic issues uninfluenced by politics, Senator HUSTING was absolutely free and independent in his thinking and expression.

Senator HUSTING was a free and ready Speaker, an aggressive, able debater. In the fight on the water-power bill and on the coal and oil bill, he at once gained recognition as a fearless antagonist who was undaunted by the overwhelming odds, but fought on and on to the very end for his convictions.

Senator HUSTING found himself in a peculiar position when the resolution declaring war was presented to this body. He lived in Dodge County, Wis., a county where the local and surrounding influences were against our entering into the war. There again came out the high qualities of the man's character. He knew that he had to sacrifice personal friendships; he knew that he would alienate the affection of neighbors; but he followed the course where his conscience pointed the way.

Mr. President, I did not agree with Senator HUSTING as to the necessity of our engaging in the European war. But, sir, I recognized his right to hold and express his opinions at all times and under all circumstances upon that as upon every other question, and I respected the sturdy and courageous way in which he asserted and maintained his settled convictions. Nothing could better attest the soundness of his conception of true democracy than the spirit of tolerance which he manifested during that period that sorely tried men whose opinions were in sharp conflict. He accorded to those who did not agree with him the same right to a free expression of opinion which he claimed for himself. He knew that you can have no real democracy where that right is denied.

Senator HUSTING's tragic death was a great shock to the Senate and to the country.

When the Congress adjourned October 6, 1917, he went directly to his home in Wisconsin, to find recreation in the one form which had appealed to him most strongly from boyhood.

The call of the wild was in his blood. It was a part of his inheritance. He loved the forests, the streams, the thousand lakes of his native State. He was an expert woodsman, a trained hunter. Whenever freed from his professional duties and the work imposed upon him by public life, he always sought recreation in the wilds of northern Wisconsin.

And so on this occasion after a brief visit with his aged parents and the other loved ones of the family, with guns and dogs and boat, he sought his heart's desire on one of his favorite hunting excursions. He was accompanied by a younger brother whom PAUL had trained to the skillful use of the gun.

Then the end came. It fell to his fate to go down under an accidental shot fired by his brother.

The story of the next few hours is harrowing in the extreme. Wounded unto death, it was hours before medical assistance could be secured. But Senator HUSTING knew from the first that death was at hand. With marvelous control he gave directions as to his business affairs, his first care being for those dependent upon him. And then he turned to meet the grim messenger with that same intrepid spirit that had marked his whole life.

I attended, as did many of the Members of the Senate and House, the funeral services at the Husting home in Mayville. Thousands of his friends were present from all parts of the State, expressing by their presence the high esteem and tender regard of the entire Commonwealth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is an oriental maxim as old as the earliest literature: "Earnestness is the path of immortality." The truth underlying this declaration is evidenced by history. No man of questionable sincerity ever ascended to great and abiding renown. The gigantic figures of history, those which tower above the level of mediocrity and stand as sentinels along the avenues of human progress, have all demonstrated earnestness in thought, purpose, and action. Wit and humor have their necessary and proper places in literature and speech. They afford relief from austerity and relaxation from anxiety, but neither furnishes a secure foundation for permanent frame. Only they who devote themselves seriously to the important problems of life are remembered with admiration by the generations following them.

THE KEYNOTE TO MR. HUSTING'S CHARACTER.

Will not all who knew Mr. HUSTING intimately agree that earnestness was the keynote to his character and labors? As a Senator he went about the public business with a realization of the importance of his duties and responsibilities. Yet he was prompted by no exaggerated conception of his own capacity or obligations. He constantly kept in mind the gravity and dignity of his position. This characteristic made him a great legislator in spite of defects calculated to render him unattractive in appearance and unimpressive in utterance.

A MAN OF STRONG CONVICTION.

Mr. HUSTING was a man of strong convictions. He possessed great will power. In consequence, he formed decisive opinions on every public issue properly arising for his consideration. He never hesitated, rarely remained long in doubt as to the course to pursue, and universally took a bold and emphatic stand on public questions.

Former Speaker CANNON once said: "All important legislation is the result of compromise." Experience in Congress demonstrates that this is nearly true. It is rare, indeed, that the laws we pass reflect clear-cut victories for either contention in bitterly contested cases. There have, of course, been instances, many of them, no doubt, which constitute exceptions to the rule. Nevertheless legislation usually reflects a compromise.

Senator HUSTING never compromised. He fought every legislative battle to a finish, enjoyed victory with moderation, and endured defeat with resignation. An analysis of the legislative history of the United States will demonstrate the overwhelming importance, the real greatness of this attribute of characer so generally, if not universally, demonstrated in the public services of Mr. HUSTING. His speeches possessed a peculiar quality. They rarely thrilled and frequently sounded laborious, yet almost always held attention and usualy convinced. It would be difficult to describe the power of his utterances or to explain fully the reason for it. The secret of his effectiveness as a speaker depended upon two things: First, he never spoke save on important subjects, and, second, he had always clearly in mind the important and logical points of argument to be stated, so that in spite of awkwardness in manner and impediments in speech his addresses furnished information and carried conviction.

During his service in the Senate he never took the floor on a trivial or unimportant subject. Only the big issues claimed his attention. He never minimized their importance by frivolous discussions.

Perhaps there remains another quality to be mentioned accountable in part for the undoubted influence which Mr. HUSTING quickly acquired in the Senate. In every speech and act he demonstrated loyalty to what he believed to be the public interest. Selfish interests often subconsciously influence public men. Senator HUSTING was as free from recognition of them in his public acts as any man I have ever known. The old, unwritten rule of the Senate that new Members should preserve dignified silence of late years has been frequently disregarded. It seems destined to become a mere tradition. Senator HUSTING quickly became a factor in the deliberations of this body. His previous experience in legislation, his service in the State Senate of Wisconsin familiarized him with legislative procedure and relieved him from the embarrassments under which inexperienced Senators labor.

Mr. HUSTING took the progressive view of public questions. He believed in and advocated the conservation of our natural resources with a forcefulness which lastingly impressed his colleagues. While in political faith he was devoted to the Democratic Party, he always took advanced ground, and received his inspiration from prospects rather than from precedents.

MR. HUSTING AND THE WAR.

He was a party man and constantly supported the administration both in its policies and measures. From the beginning of the great war through which the world has recently passed he was proally and anti-German. Perhaps birth and racial instincts were responsible in part for his emphatic opposition to German propaganda. His colleagues will recall the frankness and fearlessness with which he exposed the efforts of Germany to unfairly secure sympathy and support for her cause by the publication in this country of false statements and by secret machinations. He was of Alsatian descent. Anyone who knew him and who understood his principles and nature would have expected him to aggressively champion at the first opportunity the cause which many here were slow to appreciate—the cause of the allies. His militant nature gave prompt and vigorous support to every step by which our Government advanced to war and to victory.

Mr. HUSTING's death was a distinct loss to the Senate and to the Nation. Few men who have served in the Senate during the present generation have more quickly earned recognition for serious-mindedness and devotion to duty than PAUL HUSTING. Before death called him he had become, notwithstanding his brief service, a leader among us. We respected his ability and admired his courage.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I did not know the eminent Senator who has just been eulogized in such fitting terms by the distinguished senior Senator from his State [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] until the junior Senator, Mr. HUSTING, came into this body as a Member. It fell to my lot, sir, to have such confidence of him as a trusted fellow Member might have; my seat was near him; I was frequently communicated with by him as to matters that touched his personal interests as an official here in the Senate. In that manner I learned to know some of those characteristics as they unfolded themselves in the man, and which the Senator-colleague, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, has detailed.

We have to-day heard from the senior Senator the first detailed history of the early struggles and career of this man whose career in this body so won our admiration. My mind reverts to fitting lines, which recite—

How truly that our lives
  Are as but the twinkle of a star
In God's eternal day.
  Obscured and dimmed by mortal clouds,
Yet may shine bright for Him,
  And, though darkened here, shine fair
To spheres afar.
  So let's be patient, lest we bar
His grace and goodness,
  And we fall supine;
In our hands our weaknesses are,
  Our strength, oh God, in Thine.

Where could we have had an exemplification of that more exquisitely proven than in the detailed account of this young man's life, as given us in the depictation of the Senator?

Mr. President, I was first attracted to what is called his courage. I live near the border of Wisconsin. I am one of the Representatives in this body of the State of Illinois. It neighbors upon the splendid Commonwealth which has been described by the Senator from that State. I knew much, sir, of its inhabitants, of the political weight and preponderance of nationality of its people; and I was attracted to that independent courage on the part of Senator HUSTING when he faced and braved what must have been the political fate of any man had things not gone as they did. It was apparent to every one that he was careless, whatever might be the fortune to himself. He must first consider his duty as he saw it to his country. Sir, all this facinated me as I beheld in him that element of utter lack of all selfishness and the presence of that warm impulse of true patriotism and influence within of that quality of the man which sought all about him to do that thing which he felt was right before God and man without regard to the consequences to his private fortunes or political destiny. From this unfolding I watched his career develop in this body in greatness of statesmanship. All was first demonstrated morning after morning when we saw by multiplied thousands and thousands these telegrams coming into the body seeking to intimidate as well as persuade Members to a certain course of official conduct on the self-defense of America. It appeared that the attempt was by their numerical strength and great preponderating majority, in order to frighten toward one political course or obstruct them from going in another. Then this man from a country where he might indeed have paused to consider the consequences, sir, struck them full and fair in the face, all with a defiance that was magnificent to behold, a courage beautiful to witness, and a manhood too seldom seen. We saw him exemplify the patriot and the statesman; and we there realized, after all, sir, that if, as the distinguished Senator said, he had been for a long time in an obscure existence and unknown in his merits he showed us how truly, in the line of that poet's couplet—

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear.

Mr. President, it fell to me, sir, after the death of Senator HUSTING to be in Wisconsin upon an errand that justified my going from county to county through that State. I heard the comments of those who had known him from his boyhood. I listened to the praise that fell to him for his career in the State legislature. I heard them speak tenderly of his poverty, and yet, as against it all, how he resisted any opportunity that could have enriched him and would have aided some personal fortune to him. Despite all its temptations, he preferred his way, a rocky path, but in the light; and then I knew why it was that confidence was so reposed in him that everywhere one went he met the single verdict, "He was an honest official, a true friend, a worthy citizen of his State." I was proud, sir, to hear that regard of those who were close to him.

Ordinarily, as you know, those who are close to us seldom see us. It is only those who view us in the perspective who see us correctly. Intimacies breed either exaggerations in our praise on the one hand or great injustices of criticisms on the other. Seldom do we see where one thrown so closely with his own neighbors could have been so justly measured, so fairly appraised, and upon whom so true a judgment could have been pronounced.

In this body, sir, his inclination along certain lines disclosed him particularly fitted in those things that protected his people against the ravages of institutions that combine too frequently to pillage public communities in the name of public welfare. He was not deceived in the efforts to seize the power of the different States in the form of water conservation and convert it to private welfare, that it might enrich the pockets of those who were as deficient in patriotism as they were wanting in honesty; and, indeed, sir, we caught the other glimpse of that long career on the part of this young gentleman, up to the later days of his life, in behalf of the thing he felt right toward his neighbor and to his fellow man. It was these, sir, that drew me to him; these, sir, that gained to him my confidence, and I trust, in part, contributed some of the reasons of his confidence in me.

He passed away at that sudden moment described by the Senators. It was when in his holiday, when he had gone to the woods, where he could worship in the temple of nature, amidst the angels of her flowers, amidst the giants of her trees, he fell, in sudden shock, at the hand of his own brother.

What a tragic suggestion that brings to us! We are inclined, Mr. President, to feel such to be a great and indescribable catastrophe; and yet I wonder, sir, if we can not indulge this thought: That nature has her way of paying her debt to her children and of attracting attention to the event that shows the tribute paid. When you have seen the sunlight upon a mountain peak, sir, your eyes are drawn to it in the glow and glory of all its beauty and we break into rapture of praise; but when the evening comes, sir, and the solemn shades befall it, we seldom turn to note it again. It is wrapped in gloom. It is dark and lost to view. Sir, the sun and radiance of the highest touch of his career fell upon him, and just as it glowed upon him with a radiance that a star lights a promontory he was stricken, and from this high moment passed on, but left to his people the reflection of all that he meant to them—a life of light that leads and duty performed that ennobled.

Sir, I do not know if he professed any creed or religion; but as I watched his course here, and heard it spoken of in the land where they knew him best, my mind reverts to the legend which justly embalms PAUL HUSTING.

You remember that Sir John Lubbock leaves us what he calls his celestial dream. He dreamed he had died, and he was at the gates of heaven when Peter, the gatekeeper, summoned a vigil to investigate the applicant for entrance. The sentinel asked, "Who are you?" He said: "I am John Lubbock." "And what brings you here? What is your religion and your church?" "I have no church. I have tried to do my duty to men. I have given bread to the hungry; I have given water to the thirsty; I have lifted the fallen; I have listened to a widow's wail, and heard the cry of a child and hushed both by my service." "Ah, yes," says the vigil, "well, and you have no church"—and Lubbock looked beyond, and there beneath the gleaming cross sat the sainted Catholic, and by the crystal fount was the Baptist, and where the celestial choir was singing was the Methodist; and the sentinel said, "Which of these do you choose?" And he said, "I am of neither house"; when the Master, hearing this, came out and said: "Ah, Sir John, we have up here heard much of you. Come you in, sir, and sit you down wherever you please."

To such a man as this man, PAUL HUSTING, let us believe, the great Master's voice at last said: "Come in, and, by the merits of the life you lived, sit you down wherever you please."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, owing to the accident of my birth in the State of which the late Senator HUSTING was likewise a native, and which he was chosen in part to represent in this body, an intimacy quite close sprang up between us very speedily after his entry upon the discharge of his official duties here. Nature had not been partial to him either in respect to his physical make-up or his vocal equipment. I have often had occasion to note, Mr. President, what advantage accrues to a man in public discussion who has a commanding stature, a well-proportioned frame, a sonorous and mellifluous voice.

Senator HUSTING had no such aids. The impression he made on his first appearance was distinctly disappointing, but he very speedily dispelled any idea that he did not measure up fully intellectually to the requirements of the high office to which he had been called, and before his tragic and lamentable death he had established a reputation among his colleagues and through the country for industry and intelligence, for courage and sagacity. Some men are gifted with a pleasing personality, facility in graceful speech, through the aid of which they quickly ingratiate themselves with strangers. Those whose talents and attainments are solid rather than showy are ordinarily compelled to travel a longer road to popular favor.

The career of Senator HUSTING in this body was brief, and it could scarcely be said that it was brilliant, and yet, Mr. President, brief as it was, his sterling worth came to be so generally recognized that not a few Senators went to him for counsel as to how to vote when suddenly summoned to the Chamber from their work upon committees or from other duties which had prevented them from following the course of the proceedings or attending to the merits of the debate.

He never permitted his judgment upon any measure to be influenced by considerations of personal friendship for its supporters, and he never yielded to importunities, however strong they might be, that did not wholly convince him of the error of his position. He has an item of service to his credit that has richly earned for him the gratitude of his country.

His sagacious mind enabled him to perceive that what was generally accepted as a more or less spontaneous expression of popular opinion—the outgrowth of the humanitarian impulses and peace-loving disposition of our people—was, in fact, a corrupt and sinister propaganda through which Germany attempted to wheedle America into inaction while she overwhelmed Europe and subverted the liberties of the world. With a courage and relentlessness which shall remain as one of the proud traditions of the Senate, and with a fullness of detail and an amplitude of proof that dispelled doubt and defied denial, he exposed to public view the ugly hydra-headed thing that sickened and died when brought to the light of day. By common consent his speech in support of the resolution in favor of a declaration of war against the Kaiser's Government was the greatest delivered on that momentous occasion. It was a ringing appeal to all citizens to be Americans and Americans only, and contributed much, no doubt, to the remarkable unanimity of sentiment with which the historic contest was prosecuted by the great Republic of the western world.

I admired Senator HUSTING living; I revere his memory dead.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, PAUL O. HUSTING, whose tragic and untimely death the Nation mourns, came to the Senate practically a stranger. Although possessed of strong and capacious brain, in it there had been lit no lamp of genius; he was not ambitious for fame; he was not wealthy; he had no capacity for political intrigue; he never set the stage for brilliant appearances, and yet with a service of less than two years in this Senate, where new recruits are weighed and measured by no common nor easy standard, he earned—and justly earned—an enviable distinction as a capable legislator, a stout defender of civil liberty; and when the mysterious finger of silence touched him there was felt throughout the length and breadth of our land the realization that a statesman upon whom the people could depend to advance the cause of truth and justice had passed from the national council.

The Senator who essays to take a leading part in the debates here must be prepared at any moment to stand up to his antagonists, to receive blows as well as to deliver them. It is a test which no man can escape. Senator HUSTING in full measure met this highest test. His method in debate was to ignore trivial annoyances but to destroy, not merely injure and weaken, the argument of his opponent. He was planetary, not meteoric. He "scorned delights and lived laborious days." He believed that neither the bird of beautiful plumage, nor the sweet songster, nor the chattering magpie, nor the turtledove, but the eagle, with eye that never winks and wing that never tires, was our national emblem. He was the grim and unrelenting foe of anarchy, sabotage, syndicalism, and communism, and with audacious boldness he smote those unclean hosts of crime and ignorance who with red banners and lying symbols assaulted the citadels of American liberty.

Though he lacked the golden romance of the warrior priest in mail
Who upon a silken palfrey went a questing for the grail,
Yet the soul of modern knighthood devised him on her forge
For the Eagle and the Lily and the Lion of St. George.

The world is filled with countless and interlacing filaments of influence which spread from one individual to another. No man can separate himself from the influence he leaves behind him. The voices of the dead are these influences that speak to us. The grave may close over a man; he may descend into dreamless dust; green grass and brave red roses may heal the scar made by his descent into the earth; he may sink deeper than plummet ever sounded into the airless meadows of the ocean, and leviathan may heave the billows above him, but there lives on this interlacing filament of his influence which he spread in his life.

It may be, and usually happens, that the sphere of individual action is circumscribed and meager, but this influence none the less operates.

The sun sets behind the western hills, but "by the bright track of his fiery car gives token of a goodly day to-morrow."

Senator HUSTING'S earthly labors are over, but his career sheds an encouraging light to the struggling boys of to-morrow. Although he is now invisible to mortal eyes, such a life as his leaves behind an influence that will never die.

Many public men of large ability, industry, and true physical courage who do not shrink from extreme bodily danger frequently quail before an opposing multitude for fear, doubtless, that their suggestions may be ridiculed, their prestige injured, their pride humbled, or that they may perchance find themselves in the minority at the next ensuing election. It is unfair to characterize such men as cowards. They suffer poignant mental anguish, and like the severed flax they fall asunder at the touch of fire. They lack an abundantly filled reservoir of moral courage, which is one of the noblest attributes that adorn the sons of men.

So, Mr. President, when we ask how came about the phenomenal rise of PAUL O. HUSTING from obscurity, when we seek to know why his loss was so keenly felt by the American people, we recall that Bulwer-Lytton, in his Richelieu's Vindication, says:

* * * I found France rent asunder,
The rich men despots and the poor banditti;
Sloth in the mart and schism within the temple;
Brawls festering to rebellion, and weak laws
Rotting away with rust in antique sheaths.
I have recreated France; and, from the ashes
Of the old feudal and decrepit carcass,
Civilization, on her luminous wings,
Soars, phœnix-like, to Jove! What was my art?
"Genius," some say; some, "Fortune"; "Witchcraft," some.
Not so; my art was Justice.

The art of PAUL O. HUSTING was courage.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Senator HUSTING was of short duration. I shall, therefore, not attempt to give a detailed account of the exceptional qualities which, I understand, characterized him in his early life, nor shall I attempt to portray any of the splendid achievements which he accomplished, beginning with his early entrance into political life. I am glad, however, to have the opportunity of briefly testifying to his splendid ability and high character during his service in this body. His early life's career has been beautifully portrayed by some of his more intimate and closer friends, by those who had the privilege of knowing him from his birth to his untimely death.

I had the privilege of serving with Senator HUSTING for only a short time in this body. I served with him on some of the committees. I served with him upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and in the discharge of his duties as a member of that committee he demonstrated with marked ability his genuine sympathy for humanity as well as a clear vision for constructive legislation which always would result in a full measure of the greatest good to the greatest number.

Senator HUSTING was an able debater and a forceful speaker. He was a unique figure of the real courageous, progressive type. His trials in early life seem to have imbued him with kindness and with sympathy, and he lived and devoted his great ability to the welfare of his people.

He was a Democrat in soul and spirit as well as in name, because he was an advocate of democracy or government by the people. He was loyal to his party, but more profoundly interested in the welfare of the general public. He was of a peculiar type, symbolizing simplicity and genuineness. He bore the earmarks of an early training in state affairs, and, representing a constituency like that of Wisconsin, it was inevitable that his political tendencies should be along progressive lines.

As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Senator HUSTING took an active part in dealing with the affairs of the Indians. He held very decided views with reference to Indian property and the conservation of the natural resources on Indian lands. He was firm in his convictions that the lands, as well as the other natural resources, should be used for the benefit of the Indians; and he was much opposed to the exploitation of Indian property by the white man, and very often sharply criticized the mismanagement of Indian affairs by those who have been and are the custodians of the Indians' property.

Senator HUSTING had firm opinions with reference to the development of water power, both on and off Indian lands. He believed in the doctrine that the natural resources should be retained by the Government for the use of all the people rather than the exploitation of them by a few men.

Although a new Member of the United States Senate, he was recognized as a man of ability and character. During the short time he served in the Senate he won for himself an enviable record, and he had the confidence of all who learned to know him. I believe I can truthfully say that he had the confidence of the entire membership of this body. He was held in high esteem by all those who knew him best.

I might go on and amplify on the character, the virtues, and the courage of PAUL O. HUSTING, but it is not necessary. The history of this man, the story of his life, of his devotion to his duties, to his country, of love and devotion to his family, will remain as the most lasting monument to his memory.

Mr. President, his untimely death was a shock to the membership of this body, to the people of the great State of Wisconsin, and to the entire country.

In company with other Senators I attended the funeral of Senator HUSTING. Naturally it was a most sad event, due to his tragic and untimely death. The bereavement to his aged parents, to his brothers, sisters, and other numerous friends, seemed almost unbearable; but in those clouds of sorrow there was a rift manifesting brightness and comfort; back of those clouds could be seen the beautiful life of PAUL O. HUSTING, and although his body was now to be consigned to the grave his soul was still living; the character of his beautiful life was visible upon the horizon; his friends and those who loved him most could see before them the sympathetic heart, his high character, and the virtues of his life, so that in death as in life the noble spirit of his own soul, his sympathy, his deeds, and his life work seemed now, like it always had, the real hope of solace and relief.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, PAUL O. HUSTING, born in 1866, clerk, laborer, lawyer, State attorney, State senator, and Senator of the United States, died in 1917 at the vigorous age of 51 years. Such in brief epitome is the career of a typical self-made American; of a man born under American institutions, early perceiving the opportunities they made possible to all able to take advantage of and to improve them; and crowding into a busy life, like a well-staged drama, a series of successes crowned with the attainment of a seat in this exalted body bestowed by a constituency whose political majorities had been almost uniformly adverse to the fortunes of the political party to which he belonged. Here, surely, is an answer to the discontent and criticism which proclaim that America is no longer a land of preferment, and that the door of opportunity has been shut in the face of the poor and the deserving. Here, surely, is full illustration of the great truth that under the shield of the great Republic the race is still to the man of resolution, of character, and of effort, that merit will win its rewards and moral courage its victories, that our people appreciate self-effort and make tribute to private integrity and political virtue. For this young man, the descendant of emigrants seeking fairer skies and better lands and freer governments, born in obscurity, reared in poverty, and circumscribed by their limitations, slowly, painfully but surely met difficulty and surmounted it, encountered obstacles and overcame them, measured his lance with adversities and overthrew them. Undaunted by a forbidding environment and undiscouraged by the keen rivalries of a competing world, he made a fulcrum for the lever of his purpose and lifted all hindrances impeding his pathway until his people, perceiving his worth and proud of his successes, commissioned him to vote and speak for them in the Capitol of the Nation.

Here the Senator's career, though tragically brief, fully vindicated their confidence and affection. He was transparently, obstinately honest, and never hesitated to speak and act upon his convictions. They may have been and, I think, sometimes were erratic, but they were his own, and right manfully he maintained them.

He came to this forum in the midst of a great European war which we were with difficulty seeking to avoid, while the struggle of the combatants was constantly interfering with, sometimes infringing upon, our rights or our natural interests. Sentiment was divided between the contending belligerents, and Senator HUSTING, representing a composite population, was more than once appealed to by some of his constituency to utilize the opportunities of his great office in behalf of one of the combatants. This he refused to do. But he was not content with refusal. From his seat he gave the great public the details of one of these appeals, demonstrated its conceited nature, exposed its origin and purpose, and proclaimed his devotion to America over all, to the land of his birth, to his country against the world. His voice was as that of one speaking with authority, his words the purifier of an atmosphere then altogether overcharged with hesitancy, with timidity, and with a spineless pendulosity characteristic of men in high position more concerned with retaining their seats than with proclaiming their convictions. Had Senator HUSTING done nothing more than this while a Member of the Senate, he would have done enough and more to vindicate the wisdom of the State of Wisconsin in choosing him as one of its Delegates to the National Capital.

One beautiful morning in October, 1917, by the Pacific seaside at Miramar in California, slowly recovering from a serious malady, I saw in the headlines of a San Francisco paper that Senator HUSTING had been accidentally shot and killed the day before. I read the details, which shocked me beyond expression. When I left Washington during the previous July, uncertain whether I should ever return, I thought of many of my associates, wondering, perchance, if some of them who had reached their three score and ten would be here to welcome me should I by good fortune recover and resume my public duties. I gave not even a passing thought to the young and stalwart ones like the junior Senator from Wisconsin, who seemed immune from the vicissitudes of life and death. Yet he was the first to go; not only that, but, save Senator NEWLANDS, the only face I missed in this Chamber when in January I resumed my seat. And only then did I learn all the details of his tragic fate. It is not too much to say that, coming at the time, his death was a national calamity.

Had his career been uninterrupted we know what it would have been by the features revealed in its unfinished proportions. Like the broken fragment of a Grecian statue, it suggests to the eye a vision of the genius which designed it and to the heart a sense of what the world lost when the exquisite figure was broken into fragments.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in the roll of names of men who have occupied seats in this Chamber will be found great patriots and statesmen who will always live in the history of this Republic. Great crises have always produced great characters, and when the history of this world war shall be finally written the name of PAUL HUSTING will always receive honorable mention.

Wisconsin is normally a Republican State by from fifty to one hundred thousand majority, but in 1914 PAUL HUSTING, a Democrat, was elected to a seat in this body. He had made an enviable record in the State senate in championing progressive legislation. He was a hard worker and an able debater there, and his experience thus gained was of great value to him in his work here. In this larger field he had the same aims and purposes as he had in State matters, and he was early recognized as a stanch supporter of progressive legislation here. One of his assignments was the Committee on Public Lands, and he took a deep interest in all legislation concerning our natural resources. Upon two great measures which have been before Congress for many years and are still pending—the mineral-leasing and water-power bills—he did a tremendous amount of work and took a very active part in the debate upon them in the Senate. He was rapidly making a national reputation in these matters, but it was in the events leading up to and following our entry into the war that he rose to his true greatness. Most of his colleagues from Wisconsin differed with him in these matters. It seemed at one time as if the people of Wisconsin differed with him, but with deep conviction as to the right course to pursue he unhesitatingly and unfalteringly followed it. He would not condemn his colleagues who differed with him; he assumed that they were conscientious in their position as he was in his. He chose rather to argue the strength of his own position than denounce those who did not agree with him. This is illustrated by an incident shortly before our declaration of war was made. A great loyalty meeting was to be held in the city of Milwaukee. He and I had been invited to address that meeting. We discussed the matter and agreed that we would attend upon condition that it be made an occasion for affirmatively demonstrating the loyalty of Wisconsin, but not for denouncing our colleagues who differed with us. We both accepted the invitation upon this condition, and an audience of 7,500 as patriotic citizens as ever breathed the air of freedom cheered Senator HUSTING and the other speakers to the echo, and he then made one of the truly great speeches of our time. Senator HUSTING lived in a county which before our declaration of war was largely pro-German in its sympathies. For a time many of his closest friends differed with him, but none failed to respect him, and, although he lived but a few months after our entrance into the war, at the time of his death he knew not only that he was right but also had the support of an overwhelming majority of the people of the State.

Mr. President, courage is not a very rare thing, ability is not a very rare thing, vision is not a very rare thing, but it is not often that we find all these qualities combined in one man as they were in Senator HUSTING. He had the courage, he had the ability, he had the vision, and for it the country will forever be grateful. Speaking upon the war resolution he said:

> Vital matters and principles that every true American holds dear are involved in the consideration of this resolution. Our honor, our rights, the lives of our citizens, our national safety, our sovereignty, yes, democracy itself is at stake. The perpetuation of this country and its institutions is the most important thing in the world to us, to the people of the whole world and to posterity. Our Government is an experiment destined to prove whether or not men are capable of self-government. The permanent success of this experiment means the eventual emancipation of all mankind, its failure spells the doom of freedom everywhere.

Senator HUSTING was a Democrat, but Republicans of Wisconsin forgot that and thought of him only as an American. The entire State mourned over his death. His friends were of every party and every creed. His sterling patriotism, in a most critical hour of our Republic, will long be remembered. In his death the State of Wisconsin, this body, and the country suffered a loss which can not be measured. He was one of the Nation's great men.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DAVIDSON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 483) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.
>
> Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Representative from Wisconsin.
> Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, we are here to-day to express the esteem and affection we felt for the Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON in his lifetime and to manifest the deep respect in which we hold his memory. Wisconsin may have had more brilliant Representatives in the House than our departed friend, but it had none more industrious and certainly none more unselfishly devoted to the public service.

Mr. DAVIDSON was born in Downsville, N. Y., June 18, 1858. His home was humble. He was always a hard worker, no less in youth than in manhood. He received his early education in the public schools of his native town and supplemented it by a course at the Walton Academy, New York. He taught school and later studied law, and graduated from the Albany Law School in 1884.

Shortly afterwards he removed to Wisconsin and began the practice of law in Princeton, Green Lake County, in that State, in 1887. The citizens of that county soon recognized his ability and sterling character, and in 1888 elected him to the office of district attorney. In 1892 he removed to Oshkosh, then the second city in size in the State, where he continued his successful practice of the law, but in a wider field than before.

Four years after he removed to Oshkosh he was elected to Congress and served through the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, Sixty-first, and Sixty-second Congresses. He was then defeated, but in 1916 he was reelected again from his old district and served in this Congress until his labors were ended by his untimely death in August, 1918.

Part of his district bordered on Lake Michigan, and he was naturally much interested in water transportation. Early in his first period of service in the Congress he was appointed on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and continued as one of the most valuable members of that committee until his defeat for Congress in 1912. Had he been returned to the Congress at that time he would have been the ranking Republican member of that committee. Upon taking his place in the Sixty-fifth Congress he was assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He labored earnestly to keep our country out of war, but when we became involved in it no member of the committee worked more incessently or intelligently for the success of our arms than did he. It is the opinion of many of the intimate friends of Mr. DAVIDSON that it was his untiring labor upon this committee which resulted in breaking his health and hastening his untimely death.

This brief mention of some of the leading political events of Mr. DAVIDSON's life gives no adequate idea of his sterling qualities or substantial achievements in public service. Because of his modesty or indifference to personal distinction his hardest work was done upon measures connected more intimately with the names of other men.

It was Mr. DAVIDSON's untiring work in the committees that shaped and perfected much of the legislation originating in the great committees of which he was a member.

While Mr. DAVIDSON knew the vicissitudes of political life, he met defeat with the same tranquillity with which he accepted victory. He never for a moment lost the confidence of his party either at home or in Washington, and was the nominee of his party under the Wisconsin primary election law when he was defeated for election in 1912 and 1914 in that State, as well as when he was elected in 1916.

His genial disposition and manly qualities won him friends in all parties and among all classes of people. His home was an ideal American home, and it was there he found his greatest satisfaction and happiness. A loving wife and daughter and two devoted and loving sons have been bereaved by the death of our friend, but he has left to them the memory of many happy years of beautiful association with him and the example of a life dedicated to high ideals and rich with worthy achievements.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I knew Congressman DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin, intimately and regarded him as one of my best friends in congressional life. We served together on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House for 12 years and always worked together in harmony, our views coinciding on most questions. During this period the committee made several trips to different parts of the country in order to inspect personally the projects presented for their consideration. These trips were, as a rule, very pleasant and instructive in the highest degree, for they gave the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee a chance to see the river or harbor or prospective canal on which it was proposed to expend, in many instances, large sums of money, to talk to the citizens of the localities, to visit the cities and important towns, to get an idea of the adjacent country, and in a general way to inform themselves at first hand before reaching a decision.

Members of the committee were thrown very closely together on these trips, some of which extended from one week to three weeks, and excellent opportunities were given for becoming thoroughly acquainted with each other. Mr. DAVIDSON and I were placed in intimate contact on several of these tours.

He was for some time vice president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, of which I had the honor to be president, and took a very active part in its councils. He addressed in the most eloquent and persuasive manner more than one convention of the congress, and was always one of its truest friends and advisers. Indeed, he was one of the principal organizers of this association, which had its rebirth at the city of Cincinnati in June, 1905, during a trip of the Rivers and Harbors Committee from Pittsburgh to Cairo, one of the most instructive and entertaining tours in which it was my privilege to participate.

"Jim," as I called Mr. DAVIDSON, was a true friend of the improvement and utilization of the Nation's waterways as carriers of freight and regulators of transportation charges. In the work of the Rivers and Harbors Committee he was always national in his viewpoint, never local or sectional. Though he watched like a hawk every interest of Wisconsin and never failed to champion it in the most loyal and effective way, he was a friend to every project of real merit that found place in river and harbor bills during his long service on the committee.

I was especially grateful for his constructive assistance in my pet projects—the improvement of the Ouachita River, La. and Ark., by means of locks and dams and construction of levees on the Mississippi south of Cairo, in order to protect that splendid region from the devastating floods of the Father of Waters. It was a long, hard struggle to secure proper congressional aid for the levee system. The fight began a great while before I entered Congress 20 years ago, and is still proceeding. During the past 20 years much progress has been made, and to no one outside of the valley is more credit due for friendly cooperation and assistance than to Congressman DAVIDSON.

If Jim disapproved of a measure pending before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, he would fight it hard, but if defeated would never exhibit any soreness or complaining spirit, and thenceforth the project would receive his support. I think he had as little animosity in his make-up as anyone I have ever known.

It was a great pleasure for Mrs. Ransdell and myself to visit at his beautiful home in Oshkosh, where we were entertained in a most hospitable manner by him and his charming wife. This was my first visit to Wisconsin, and I enjoyed it thoroughly, thanks to the courtesy and attention of Congressman DAVIDSON.

Another tie between Jim and myself was that he was an alumnus of the law school of Union University, at Albany, N. Y., having graduated, if I mistake not, in the class of 1884, while I am an alumnus of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in the class of 1882. Both of us were active members of the Union College Alumni Association of this city, and both very proud of our alma mater, old Union. The university has just cause to mourn his death as one of its most distinguished and able sons.

Jim was a tall, handsome man of very pleasing personality. His manners were sedate and quiet. Though possessed of great firmness and force of character, he was as modest and gentle as a woman, rarely raising his voice above an ordinary conversational tone. When aroused, however, he was very positive, and on any occasion demanding it made himself effectively heard and felt. I never saw him really angry, and he seemed entirely devoid of resentment. Indeed, Jim was an unusually even-tempered, well-balanced man, remarkably free from the usual weaknesses of the flesh, and on the whole as attractive as anyone I have ever known.

He was very devoted to his family, an indulgent, loving husband and father, true to his friends, and possessing the faculty of binding them very closely to him. A genuine party man, he never wavered in support of the principles and policies of the Republican Party, in which he believed implicitly; and he was thoroughly loyal to his family, his friends, his party, and his country.

Mr. President, there are many sad things in connection with official life in Washington, and nothing sadder than the loss of such true, tried friends as JAMES H. DAVIDSON had always been to me. I can say of him, as I could of very few men outside of my immediate family, that I really loved him and felt the greatest personal loss when apprised of his untimely death.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this Nation is not a pure democracy; it is a representative democracy. The people themselves do not legislate; they act through others. The whole theory of this Government is that it is one of delegated power. Senators and Representatives in Congress hold in trust the right to legislate for the people. Through them the people discharge the functions of government of a free people devoted to the principles of self-government. They are the agents of the people in the great task of government.

No greater trust can be reposed in mortal man than to permit him to control and direct the property, the liberty, the life, and very destinies of another and of a free people. No higher honor can be bestowed by one upon another than to allow the one to speak for the other in the affairs of government. Therefore the position of Senator and Representative in Congress is the greatest honor and highest responsibility that can be bestowed in this Republic.

Some men become puffed up by the importance and dignity of the position they hold when intrusted with power. They lose sight of those who honor and trust them, and dwell in the heaven of their own importance. Such men are unworthy of the honor and trust they enjoy and are unfitted to represent a free people.

JAMES H. DAVIDSON was not this kind of a man. He was true and faithful to the trust reposed in him. He never forgot the people who honored him. He always remembered that he was their agent, their Representative. Their wants and their needs had every attention by him, and the humblest citizen gained his consideration just as freely as the highest, and even more so. He knew the responsibilities and duty of his position. His highest aim was to discharge them fully and serve those who trusted him in the most faithful way, with the welfare of his country as his highest aim and purpose. He was not a brilliant man, but he was an able, trustworthy, conscientious, courageous, industrious worker with an abundance of good, common sense. After all, this is what makes a Representative the best and most effective Representative.

This man, whom we honor in this memorial service, was modest, true, faithful, and capable and most earnestly strived to promote the welfare of the people of his district and of the country.

To have been counted as one of his friends is a precious thing to me. Our association is a priceless memory. In personal character and manly qualities he was a man among men. He was kind, considerate, and gentle to a wonderful degree; yea, one can well use the word "lovable" in describing him and his intercourse with those about him. His personal attributes will live in the memory of his friends and loved ones until they, too, pass to the great beyond, whose mysteries he has solved. He has gone beyond the veil, but his sweet memory lives with us to spur us on to higher and better things. To-day we shed a tear to his memory, pay a feeble tribute to his virtues, and gain new strength by his example of duty well done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution believed that while Senators in a sense should represent their States, Members of the House should be directly responsible to their constituencies and familiar with local as well as general issues. A short term, and consequent frequent elections, were believed to be the most reliable means of providing a legislative body truly representative of popular opinion.

The Senate was designed to be a conservative factor in the legislative machinery. The short term prescribed for Members of the House requires them to obtain frequent indorsements from the electors of their districts, and at the same time it gives electors an effective means of checking up their Congressmen and of supplanting them when occasion justifies.

Notwithstanding the theory of short terms for Members of the House of Representatives, everyone of experience realizes the value to the public of long service in Congress, especially at this time when legislative subjects have multiplied and increased in perplexity. The people have come to know that experience in legislation is just as valuable as in any other sphere of activity.

Former Representative DAVIDSON experienced long service in the popular branch of Congress. This service was characterized by conscientious discharge of duty. It was also marked by exceptional ability displayed in the proceedings of committees and in debates upon the floor of the House. Many public men catch and hold attention through the promulgation of new theories or the championship of queer policies. They become associated with reforms, real or fancied, and advance to prominence with the progress of the cause with which they are allied. Mr. DAVIDSON had no fads. He was a sound, well-balanced, prudent legislator, content to reflect in his votes the enlightened will of his constituency. His speeches disclosed fluency and attachment to exalted ideals. As a speaker he was eloquent and forceful.

For many years he served with distinction and usefulness on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. His labors in that connection were marked by diligence and thoroughness. He made frequent investigations of many projects claiming recognition in the bills reported by his committee, and his judgment respecting them was sound and fair. He earned the confidence of his colleagues. They habitually consulted him and frequently abided his conclusions on topics with which he was familiar and concerning which conditions afforded them little opportunity for more direct information.

In the political landslide of 1912 Mr. DAVIDSON was defeated and remained out of Congress for four years. Upon his return to the House in 1917 Mr. DAVIDSON was assigned to membership on the Committee on Military Affairs. Everyone here knows that, on account of the large membership in the House, Members usually have service on only one and never on more than two important committees at the same time, while in this body every Senator serves upon several important committees. This is one of the greatest difficulties we encounter. Frequently a Senator is called on the same day to attend three or four committee meetings, and sometimes these meetings have under consideration matters of vital consequence. Hardly any one of us, under the rules and practices which have prevailed for a number of years respecting committee service, is able with the utmost diligence to perform his committee duties with that deliberation which is essential to the determination of great issues.

Mr. DAVIDSON did not vote for the resolution declaring a state of war with Germany. He justified his action on the theory that the United States might avoid the conflict and thus escape the loss which everyone knew must result from participation in the war. After war had been declared, however, he never failed in any instance to support by word and vote the cause of the Government and the measures of the administration in preparing for and in maintaining the conflict.

His name is not associated with any one great statute, but his painstaking and conscientious devotion to duty are reflected in the important general legislation enacted by Congress during the period of his service. He was a practical, capable, faithful officer, prompt and efficient always in the discharge of duty.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am glad to have an opportunity to bear a brief tribute to the memory of my old friend, JAMES H. DAVIDSON. He represented the sixth Wisconsin district in the House of Representatives for eight consecutive terms. After 16 years of service in Congress, due to the exigencies of unusual political conditions, he lost his seat and, after a brief interregnum, performed the rather unusual feat of coming back to the House. He would undoubtedly have held his seat in that body indefinitely but for his untimely death.

We are familiar with the different types of Congressmen. Some men make brilliant speeches and base their reputations largely on that qualification. Others are especially industrious in attending to the infinite details incident to congressional life. The first qualification is desirable, the second is necessary; but there is another feature of successful congressional service very much more important from the public standpoint—the careful, prudent, industrious, and level-headed Member who regularly attends his committee meetings and brings to bear on the public questions there considered his best judgment and intelligence. Such men are real legislators. They are neither for or against measures until they have heard the evidence, and then carefully analyze the evidence submitted to determine, without giving undue consideration to the requirements of their own constituents, what will be for the best interests of the most people. Those of us who have served a long time in Congress know how absolutely essential such men are in bringing about good legislative results. They are the wheel horses of Congress, and, while they seldom make speeches and even less often appear in the headlines of the press, they are invaluable in connection with the work of Congress.

When I came to Washington, at the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress, Mr. DAVIDSON had already served four terms, so that he was a comparatively old and experienced Member. I soon learned that he was one of the type I have attempted inadequately to describe. While a fluent and ready speaker, he seldom addressed the House except on occasions when measures reported by his own committees were under consideration and only then when it was necessary to do so in order to promote the enactment of legislation he thought should pass.

Indeed, Mr. DAVIDSON'S whole life was the typical career we expect of those who have undertaken a profession and reached a place of importance in practicing it. His training in the public schools, his later education, his experience as a school teacher, and his use of the proceeds from this occupation to acquire a knowledge of law and provide him a living during the early days of the practice of his chosen profession are familiar in the case of a very large percentage of the men who have reached positions of importance in the political world.

Mr. DAVIDSON always had the courage of his convictions, and his honesty of purpose and integrity were never once questioned by his associates in the other House. He voted against the declaration of war—an unpopular vote and one contrary to my own convictions—and yet not one of his colleagues interposed an objection to his appointment to the important Committee on Military Affairs, a committee which, very largely at least, was to conduct the preparations for the war's efficient prosecution. Nor did anyone doubt his loyalty to his country. He never tired in his efforts to prepare the Nation to take its place on the battle front in France and to bring victory to our arms. Undoubtedly his close application to the work of the war Congress helped to undermine his already failing health.

I can make these general observations concerning the life of Congressman DAVIDSON without reservation. I shall always recall with great pleasure the personal interest and friendship which existed between us. He was a good Republican, a loyal friend, and a devoted son of his adopted State. It is not too much to say, in my judgment, that a Congress made up of JAMES H. DAVIDSONS in efficiency, disinterested public service, and beneficial results to all our people would be head and shoulders above any Congress which has served the Republic.

To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go.

As Mr. DAVIDSON saw the light he selected the high way—a way he consistently followed on earth—and if high purpose, honesty, and steadfastness are rewarded his soul has gone the high way it so richly deserved. His taking was to me a keen personal loss and a much larger one to the State and district he represented so well.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it is a faithful saying that we never value our friends and associates at their true worth until they die. We live, labor, or otherwise associate with them and unconsciously, maybe, feel their qualities of mind and heart but seldom do we acknowledge their qualities as individual characteristics. We would probably know if we would stop long enough to analyze and understand that they exist. Sometimes some men and women have such pronounced special virtues that they arrest our attention and we give them credit while they yet live; but the ordinary man, whose apparent aim is to live a manly life and who succeeds in doing it, is by his acquaintances regarded simply as a part of the machine of the body politic, which if destroyed by mortality can be replaced by the mechanician of time and fortune and no disturbance is felt. When, however, death comes the friends and relatives pause for a brief time and review the life that has gone out. This constitutes the chief value of memorials. The occasion is always tinged with personal sadness, for however good and great and happy the life of the departed may have been, however kind and considerate we may have been to him while he was amongst us, yet memory becomes active and it is not long before we recall opportunities which have come to us to show our appreciation of our friend, but which we neglected to improve. Then we understand his nature and how we failed to recognize it when an honest demonstration of real friendship would have made his life brighter and sweeter.

The men who have been long in Congress have become used to crêpe-covered desks and flags at half-mast. The mortality rate in Congress is greater than in war or in a pestilence-stricken city. When I review my experience of 15 years in Congress and call to memory the 2,000 different Members I have known I am saddened by the long list of those who have been mustered out of active service and have passed into the great unknown from which somehow, someway, they came. I suppose that every man who comes to Congress believes that he made a mistake in entering public life. If he is conscientious—and I believe that most Congressmen are—he will doubt at times that he has done as well for his constituents and country as some other man might have done and will wonder if it all is worth while, anyway. At such moments his greatest compensation is derived from the fact that he has come to know good men and that he has absorbed benefits from such knowledge which have made him a little bigger and perhaps a little broader and better. It is life's friendships that compensate for labor, sacrifice, and disappointments. If the offsets of neglected opportunities, of selfish disregard of others, is not too great, the balance of memory's pain and pleasure may not be written in red.

Among the good men whom I first met in the Fifty-eighth Congress was JAMES H. DAVIDSON, from Oshkosh, Wis. He had been a Member of the National House of Representatives for six years when I entered. It has always seemed to me that the House membership of the Fifty-eighth Congress was the strongest that I have known. Certain it is that it contained many men of great and unusual ability.

Congressman DAVIDSON was not a brilliant orator or strongly inclined to publicity. He was modest almost to a fault, but he was recognized by his colleagues as an unusually well-informed man, and his judgment was sought and prized. On river and harbor legislation he was an authority. Representative Burton, of Ohio, was chairman of the committee which had charge of such legislation, but Mr. DAVIDSON was second in command only, and he was always equipped with full knowledge on the subject. He was a wise and conscientious statesman, though not a professional progressive. His desire was to serve his people, who seven times expressed their confidence in him by electing him to Congress. He knew they trusted him and he did not feel it was necessary to neglect his duties to be performed according to the dictates of his well-informed judgment in order that he might keep his ear close to the ground. He knew that sometimes creeping, crawling, buzzing insects infest the ground and their noises might well confuse the voice of the people. He trusted his constituents and they reciprocated the trust.

It is easy to exaggerate the good qualities of a friend at his funeral. By his friends I will not be accused of that fault when I say that JAMES H. DAVIDSON had the respect, confidence, and frequently the great admiration of all who knew him. It is especially true that his congressional colleagues regarded him highly and affectionately. He was as incapable of dishonor as he was of disloyalty or cowardice.

He was my personal friend and I was his, and as one who deeply regrets his death I pay my sincere tribute to his memory. He was one of the best men in Congress.

This may not be the proper occasion to speak in detail of his family and home relations, but his life story could not be faithfully told without reference to his family, which he loved devotedly, and which returned to him their great affections. He was preeminently a domestic man. He found his greatest happiness and satisfaction in his home surrounded by his devoted wife, his affectionate daughter, and his two worthy sons. Whether in his northern Wisconsin cottage, in his beautiful home in Oshkosh, or in his apartment here in Washington, he was most truly happy only when his loved ones were with him.

As I have said, I knew Mr. DAVIDSON intimately and well. I have worked with him in Congress. I have visited him at his home, which was always overflowing with true hospitality. I knew something of the motives which dominated his thought and action, and I fear it will be long before I look upon his like again.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, JAMES H. DAVIDSON had a long and honorable career in the House of Representatives. His value as a legislator was best known by those who knew him best and served upon committees with him. He was not often heard in debate, but when he did speak Members listened, for they knew whenever he addressed the House they would receive accurate information acquired after painstaking investigation. Early in his service he was assigned to membership upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and he made a specialty of the subject of our waterways. Few men in America had a better knowledge of the subject than he. In this field he was a mine of information. The important facts about every important waterway were stored away in his mind, to be called out upon a moment's notice. His view of waterway improvements was a national view. He was opposed to waste of money upon waterways that could not be justified from a commercial standpoint, but he recognized the great benefit to the country, as a whole, in the improvement of waterways upon which commerce could be carried cheaper than by rail. In his death the country has lost an authority upon the subject.

He was respected by all his colleagues and loved by those who knew him well. During the many years that I knew him I never heard him speak ill of a living soul. He never knowingly hurt the feelings of any man. He was not as aggressive in public matters as his ability warranted, and I believe this was due to the fact that one can not be aggressive in public life without often unintentionally hurting the feelings of those who differ with him. This he recognized, and I believe often deterred him from aggressive action. He had a friendly hand and genial smile for every one. He was the soul of honor and had a keen sense of public duty. Every vote cast by JIM DAVIDSON, as his friends affectionately called him, was a vote cast according to his conscience. He studied every question and sought only to find the right way. No one who may have differed with his conclusions ever questioned his motive. They knew he was doing what he thought was right.

To new Members coming into the House he was especially helpful. He sought them out, assisted them in every way possible, and out of his rich experience rendered them invaluable service.

His domestic life was perfect. He was a devoted husband and father and his family worshiped him. His was an ideal American home.

Mr. President, the true measure of a man is made by those who know him best, and, so measured, JAMES DAVIDSON was a true man. It is not what the world at large may say of us, but it is what those who know us best really think of us that counts. Those of us who served with him know in what esteem his colleagues held him. Those of us who attended his funeral know of the regard his neighbors and townspeople had for him. The entire city mourned. They realized even more deeply than we that a devoted husband and father, a kindly neighbor, a loved townsman, a friend of all mankind, had been taken to dwell in God's eternal city, there to wait a while for a reunion with his loved ones which should never end.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COMSTOCK.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 484) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. DANIEL W. COMSTOCK, late a Representative from the State of Indiana, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Representative from Indiana.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, when a good man and a faithful public servant dies, it is well that those who knew him in life should make acknowledgment of the character and the value of his service. Therefore, Mr. President, I rise in my seat to-day to pay a brief but well-deserved tribute to DANIEL W. COMSTOCK, late a Representative in Congress from the sixth Indiana district, for he was both.

The life of this man was typical of all that is best in American manhood—the most enviable and commendable manhood of the world in which we live. As boy and youth his lot was that of the average American boy of his State and generation. His greatest desire was that he might acquire an education, and this he won in spite of many obstacles which to other men would have been unsurmountable, being graduated from the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1860, when but 20 years of age.

He took up his home and entered upon the practice of the law in HENRY County, Ind., and two years later had so established himself in the esteem and the confidence of the people that he was elected by them as prosecuting attorney for his district.

It was at this time that Mr. COMSTOCK showed the stuff that was in him. The great Civil War was devastating the country. He not only heard the call to duty but responded to it by surrendering his office and the competency which it guaranteed, and enlisting in the Army of the Union as a member of the Ninth Indiana Cavalry. As a soldier of his country he distinguished himself, having received special commendation for unusual bravery in action.

He served as a soldier until late in 1865, when there was no longer need for soldiers. Then he returned to Indiana and took up his residence at Richmond, resuming the practice of the law. It was not long until his friends and neighbors recognized that his fairness, his evidence sense of justice, demonstrated his fitness for the bench, and he was elected judge of the court of that circuit. There he served with such credit that his party later nominated and elected him to the appellate court of the State, where for 15 years he was universally known and recognized as a wise and just judge.

Mr. President, ambition is a worthy thing; indeed, it may be said that it embraces most of all that is best in men. It is said that it was Judge COMSTOCK's ambition to serve his district in the Congress of the United States, and this ambition was happily gratified when, in 1916, he was elected to represent a district that has furnished to the Hoosier State and to the country some of the most illustrious names in our history. Judge COMSTOCK's name is worthy to be associated with the names of those great men.

But, Mr. President, Providence decreed that Judge COMSTOCK's congressional career should be but brief. He lived only three months after having assumed his office; but in that time he had demonstrated his qualities for service, as he had in every previous instance.

It is a matter of genuine regret to all who knew him that he should have so soon succumbed; but he has left behind him the record of a life well spent and the respect and the affection not only of his colleagues but of all who knew him.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity to commit to paper any remarks for this occasion, and within the limits of the allotted time I can not adequately estimate the life, the character, and the services of this distinguished citizen of my State.

He was born in 1840 and died in 1917, thus living in an eventful and, in fact, in an heroic period of the Republic. Like other boys, he played about, all unconscious of the tragic events that were shaping about him and in the final triumph and culmination of which he was to play a conspicuous part.

After graduating from the common schools he entered the university at Delaware and graduated there in 1860. Subsequently, as my colleague [Mr. NEW] has already said, he began to practice law at Newcastle; but shortly after entering upon the practice of his chosen profession he heard the call of duty, and that to him was a louder call than the demands of selfish ambition. He enlisted in the Army and served there with distinction until late in the year 1865. He entered as a private; he retired as a captain, thus showing the faithfulness of his service to his country in the time of its distress.

Subsequently he settled in the city of Richmond, Ind., and entered upon the practice of his profession; was chosen prosecuting attorney for two terms, judge of the common pleas court for 12 years, and afterwards was for 15 years a member of the appellate bench of the State of Indiana.

It was a matter of the greatest pride to him that he had showed his love for his country by service in the Army, and his devotion to his fellow soldiers and comrades of the war of 1861 was such that they afterwards chose him as the department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Indiana.

The Commonwealth to which we belong, Mr. President, furnished to the Nation 208,000 soldiers, as I recall, during the Civil War, and yet it is somewhat singular that in that hotbed of politics, notwithstanding the fact that the soldiers exerted such a very great influence on the political life of the State and directed the political energies of both political parties, but one of the soldiers of the Civil War found his way into this body from that State, and that was Gen. Benjamin Harrison, afterwards President of the United States.

It is another fact that we may well mention on this occasion, that Judge COMSTOCK was the last soldier of the Civil War to be elected to Congress from the State of Indiana, and, in the very nature of things, is the very last that will be so chosen. Therefore, as we remember him to-day as a man, as an individual, as a citizen, and as a patriot we also pay something of tribute to the soldiers of the Civil War, for, as I have said, his service in the Army was his chief pride in life.

Mr. President, sometimes we are apt to think that the heroic days of the Republic have gone, and perhaps gone forever, and there are those among us who are constantly mourning the decadence of the race. The flight of time casts a halo about men. As an instance of this fact, we are prone to speak of Senators of the days gone by as giants, and men in a way deprecate the existing condition of affairs and minimize those who at this time represent States in this great body and in its associate at the other end of the Capitol; but, after all, in the future, when history writes with her unerring hand the real truth of the present time, she will undoubtedly recite that the men who this day represent the States of the Union in this body and who represent the people of the various districts in the associate body measure up in patriotism, in character, and in high purpose with those of any preceding day in the history of the Republic.

Sometimes we have thought that we were so devoted to commercialism and so wedded to the thought of the accumulation of wealth that the great virtues were ebbing away, that men had lost that ruggedness of character and those essential fundamentals that make for sterling manhood and for the highest character of American patriotism, but when we reflect upon Chateau-Thierry, upon St. Mihiel, and upon the Argonne Forest we see that the virtues are still here and that in any time of stress or peril the same ruggedness of character, the same virility of manhood that characterized the generation gone will respond upon the call of the country.

Therefore I do not despair of the institutions founded by the fathers and handed down to us at such a great sacrifice of blood and of treasure, and I attribute this persistence of patriotism and this continuity of manhood to the noble example of men like the subject of these remarks.

Judge COMSTOCK represented for two months the district I had the honor to represent as a Member of the House of Representatives for a dozen years. For 25 years he and I were intimate personal and political friends and associates, and, echoing what the honored Vice President said to me but a few moments ago, he was one of the most delightful men it has ever been my privilege to know. He was a magnificent specimen of physical manhood; he had splendid traits and characteristics that showed in his very countenance and ever displayed themselves to all his friends in his social intercourse.

He was a just judge; he was an upright man; he was a conscientious lawyer; he was a true patriot; he was a noble citizen of the Republic; and we do well in the midst of the turmoil and even the tragedy of life, as it is now being enacted in the world, to withdraw for a brief period and pay our tribute of respect to this splendid man, who served his generation well and who has fallen asleep.

Mr. President, in accordance with arrangements heretofore made, I now move that, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator and Representatives, the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., Sunday, March 2) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Monday, March 3, 1919, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, March 2, 1919.

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 1, 1919.)

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock a. m.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM P. BORLAND.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain will lead in prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, with unbounded faith in the overruling of Thy providence for the final good of all mankind, we humbly and reverently bow in Thy holy presence and pray for that love which casteth out fear. Increase our love for Thee and for our fellow men, that when death comes to our dear ones, our grief may be assuaged by a perfect trust in Thee.

We meet here to-day to record on the pages of history the life, character, and public service of a Member of this House who passed from the scenes of this life far from home and native land—a scholar, a teacher, a professor, a president of a college, a writer, a statesman. Be graciously near to those who knew and loved him, especially to his bereaved wife. Comfort and sustain her in the blessed hope of the life everlasting.

Faith is the rainbow's form
Hung on the brow of heaven,
The glory of the passing storm,
The pledge of mercy given;
It is a bright, triumphant arch,
Through which the saints to glory march.

Hear us in His name. Amen.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 621.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Member of this House from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the proceedings of this day, do stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of WILLIAM P. BORLAND came as a distinct shock to all of the Members of the House. He had gone about the 1st of January, on a trip to France, and was taken ill while on his way to Coblenz, on German soil. He contracted a cold, which resulted in pneumonia and, finally, in his death, about the 20th of February.

I knew WILLIAM P. BORLAND intimately. His friendship I enjoyed and appreciated. He came to Congress and entered upon his services here on the 4th of March, 1909. He served 10 consecutive years in this body, the longest period of service of any Representative from Kansas City, which place he represented with such distinguished ability. That city is said to be the Cape Hatteras of American politics, and changes its Congressmen with unusual rapidity. It is notable that this courageous Representative stayed so long in Congress from this great Kansas City district. Mr. BORLAND was comparatively a young man. He had barely passed the half-century mark, being nearly 51½ years old.

The hand of the reaper
Takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory.

He was a graduate of law at the University of Michigan and commenced the practice of law in Kansas City, which was not the home of his birth. He was born at Leavenworth, Kans. He finally moved to Kansas City, which remained his home until his death.

He organized a school of law in that city and was the dean of that school. He wrote one or more law books, a textbook on wills and administration.

He entered political life comparatively early and was in the public eye up to the time of his death. He was a public-spirited man, a man of courage and strong convictions, and battled for his ideals. He hunted for the right. He did not feel the pulse of the public to learn whether what he did was popular but acted always from the impulse of what he believed to be right. He felt that his career as a Representative in Congress might end quickly and that he would be retired, because he was not allied to any great political organization in his city, and he came repeatedly to Congress, fearlessly asserting the right, and as a strong Representative of a great city and district—tied to the chariot wheels of no organization—he repeatedly came because he was the popular choice of this great district. Mr. BORLAND was an easy and ready public speaker, and took an active part in this House, was active in debate, a hard student, well informed, and handled his subjects with unusual ability. By reason of his public services he attained State and National reputation. His name was always before the public because of his activities as an industrious public servant. He was a member of the Appropriations Committee, where he rendered active and efficient service. He was vigorous mentally and physically, and bore evidence of a long and active life.

It was a great shock when we learned of his passing away. His anxiety to see and learn by personal contact what was going on in France and Germany caused him to breast the storm of severe weather in a hard winter, and he took a severe cold, resulting in pneumonia and death, which was a distinct loss to his State and the Nation.

WILLIAM P. BORLAND was popular because he was courteous. He was gentlemanly in his bearing toward his fellow men. His courage and intelligent work gave him the respect of his associates in Congress. He led a correct life, and was a man of high ideals and lived and loved to do the right. He was ambitious even beyond the office that he held, and if he had lived he would still have remained in the public eye and continued to be prominent in the affairs of the State and Nation. All who knew him intimately learned to love him for his many virtues; all who knew him and saw him in his daily work respected him for his high character and deeply regretted his early departure from life and its activities. We will miss him. He will live in the affections of those who knew him because of his courageous stand for what he believed to be right and good. Many notable speeches did he make in this great public body. He has gone into the great beyond. He has entered the gates of eternal life. He builded on earth a character that will remain a monument to bear evidence to his worth. His virtues and active efforts to help build for the right will be a sweet memory to his hosts of friends, who gave him support because they believed in him. His place will be hard to fill. He gave the example of a correct life, of the duties of a public servant, and the confidence of those who gave him opportunity for public service will be a lasting monument to his great and unusual public career.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I deem it an honor to stand in this Hall and pay a tribute to a departed friend and to a statesman of ability and courage. Mr. BORLAND, of Missouri, as we all know, was a man of the highest personal character. Upon his private life there was no stain. He was a worthy friend and a worthy citizen in private as well as public life. As a public man his work was greatly appreciated by the people of the State whom he had the honor in part to represent. I have not an extensive personal acquaintance in the great metropolis of Kansas City, where he lived, but I think that without using the language of extravagance I can say truthfully that I never met a man from Kansas City who did not have a word of praise for Representative WILLIAM P. BORLAND. I have no doubt he had his personal and political opponents, but it was singular and a matter of frequent remark by men who lived outside of Kansas City how highly our friend and departed colleague was esteemed by the people of his home city.

He was a man of much more than the average ability. He was a scholar, and by that I do not mean that he was a product of the schools. He was a man of much reading, a man of much research, a man of much investigation. He was a lawyer, a lawyer of more than usual ability. He was one of those lawyers who realize that genius consists mostly in hard work, and WILLIAM P. BORLAND was an industrious man. As a young man myself I wish to pay him a tribute for one thing. I wish to speak in behalf of the young lawyers, many of them in the State of Missouri, and pay to him not only a tribute, but also speak a word of gratitude and appreciation for the work which he did as an educator in the law. Many a young man in Missouri who to-day stands high in the profession that most of us regard as a very high profession, would not stand there to-day if it had not been for the untiring industry of our departed colleague and for his spirit of generosity and willingness to serve his fellow man. The Kansas City Law School has done much good in our State, and when I think of the Kansas City Law School I think of WILLIAM P. BORLAND. As a public citizen, as a Representative, and as a statesman he took high rank. His chief characteristic, or, rather the two characteristics which most impressed me as I watched his career were industry and courage. He took an interest in all the legislation of this body. I do not mean that anybody's mind is of sufficient breadth and power fully to master every subject that comes before this body, but, perhaps, on account of the varied interests of the great metropolis which Mr. BORLAND had the honor to represent, his duty as a Representative made it necessary for him to be familiar with and to participate in many fields of legislation. The next quality was his quality of courage. He stood for cleanness in American politics. Kansas City is one of the greatest cities in the United States. I speak somewhat from personal knowledge because I was educated within a few miles from there. It is a clean city as cities go. It is a city where public virtue and civic spirit is high, and on the right side, on the clean side of every public question, WILLIAM P. BORLAND, our departed colleague, was found. But he had his enemies. He catered to no pernicious influences. He never sacrificed his honor, he never sacrificed his manhood for public preferment. He stood four square to all the world and dared to do what he thought was right, and dared to do what he conceived was his duty. How well he did I need not say, for you men knew him as well as I. As a member of one of the greatest committees, perhaps the greatest committee of this legislative body, he was a useful, valiant, and able member, and I was impressed in the last year with the toil and the foresight and the wisdom which he displayed as a member of that committee in appropriating for the great needs of this titanic struggle through which our Nation has passed.

I am not surprised that when the armistice was signed, when the war was over—the war to which he had devoted so much of his time and of his heart interest and his intellect—he could not restrain himself from wanting to go across the sea and observe for himself as an American representative what the real situation was and what was the result of our efforts on the other side. I know that he was prompted to go by his deep and abiding interest in all the brave boys who have won the battle for our country and for humanity and for the civilization of the world.

And while upon this mission—this important mission—the summons came. Far from home—I will not say far from friends, because it is a matter of consolation to us to know that he was among those who cared for him well—when the end came he was among those who appreciated his worth and knew the things for which he stood. He was among Americans when he answered the last summons, and although those who were the nearest and dearest to him were far away at the end, I know that as he was brave in private life, as he was clean in private life, I know that as he was brave and courageous in public life he was not afraid to answer the last roll call. For I know that he could say with Tennyson:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark.

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in 48 hours the great war Congress will come to an end, and in this hour we set aside the pressing legislative business to pay our last tribute to one of the men who did much in this Chamber and in the committee to make possible the great victory that is about to be consummated in a peace that will bring, it is hoped, all wars to an end for years and years.

Mr. BORLAND had more than average ability, else he could not have achieved the distinction he attained. He was one of the recognized forces for good, truth, and right. He led many fights on this floor. His worth was recognized in the Committee on Appropriations when the chairman imposed on him the high responsibility in the present Congress of chairmanship of the subcommittee on fortifications.

Prior to this Congress he had not served on that subcommittee, but on the other important and leading subcommittees—the sundry civil, the District of Columbia, and the legislative. Being a stranger to the work, he immediately applied himself to the heavy task, as he did to every subject invested to him to take charge of, and after months of close study and laborious work he presented to the full committee, and later to this House, the fortification appropriation bill that carried the enormous amount of $5,600,000,000. His handling of that measure on the floor of this House showed the great work in which he had engaged to make himself master of the subject of fortifications.

We were all greatly surprised when we learned that he had lost in the primary fight for nomination. We had thought that his people would recognize his work and worth. If the people of his district had possessed the same estimate of him and the high regard in which he was held here, I truly believe that he would have been renominated and would have continued for many years the useful service that he had given to the country and his district these many years past. His whole life seemed to have been in preparation for public service, so favorably equipped was he for its needs. Though I did not know him intimately, yet my personal estimate of him from his work in committee and on the floor was that he was preparing and was peculiarly qualified to be advanced to higher position in the other body, the Senate of the United States.

It is sad to contemplate that in his prime his work should have ended so abruptly. If he had lived, the rich promise of the mid years of life would have been crowned with laurels of requitted labor and service. The future historian, as he studies the annals of Congress, will agree that WILLIAM P. BORLAND has left his impress upon the legislation of the greatest Congress that ever met—the war Congress that is about to close.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the news of the passing of our dear friend over yonder in France came to me as a very great shock and left me with a sense of profound sorrow and personal loss, for he was a rare soul, and I deem it a privilege to have been among those who were his friends.

One of the most universal hopes of the human heart is that when the summons comes to "join the innumerable caravan that moves into the silent halls of death" we may be privileged to meet that summons at home, in the midst of family and friends, sustained and supported by the sympathy of our loved ones. Our friend was not granted this boon, and yet the messenger of death was not unkind to him, for it granted him the privilege of passing into the eternities from a land that has ceased to be foreign to our hearts and sympathies, a land near and dear to us through the heroic service of millions of our boys, consecrated by the supreme sacrifice of our best beloved. A land from whose hillside and forests the souls of thousands of our brave boys went to their reward. Truly, if one may not pass to the great beyond at home, what better place from which to take our departure could there be than France, fair France, sanctified by the heroism and devotion of the brave and gallant of many lands, and among them the heroic soldiers of the great Republic?

Mr. Speaker, the eloquent young gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER], who has just spoken, referred to two among the many splendid qualities of our departed friend—industry and courage. He was tremendously industrious, but the two traits of his splendid character that most impressed me were courtesy and courage. How difficult it is in the clash of opinions on this floor, in triumph and more so in defeat, to keep one's temper, to maintain a judicial attitude, and to be uniformly courteous. How much all of us have at one time and another had to regret the word quickly and thoughtlessly spoken. It was a characteristic of our friend that no matter how the tide of battle ran he was calm and courteous, kindly and considerate. No man who has ever occupied a place on this floor has displayed more than he the quality of courage. I have come to the belief that the quality needed here above all other qualities and endowments is that of courage. We are drawn naturally to men with whom we agree, but as time goes on and our legislative labors continue we frequently become strongly attached to men with whom we often disagree, but whom we learn to value and appreciate as being sincere, conscientious, and courageous.

Some day American constituencies will realize that the primary qualification for a Member of this body is enlightened, unselfish moral courage. I sometimes think that within the boundaries of those things that we consider as being reasonable it does not matter so much what men's views are, do they but hold them unselfishly with conviction and maintain them with courage. Our friend, with a courtesy that never failed, combined a courage that never faltered.

We do not know what lies beyond the veil. We do not know what the future may hold for any of us. But we do know this, that for the splendid, loyal, conscientious, helpful, courageous soul of our friend the future and the great beyond can hold no terrors and have naught but good. He was faithful, courteous, courageous, conscientious always, and we do not despairingly mourn for him in his passing, much as we regret his loss, for every duty of his life was well done, and he has, we know, gone to a goodly reward.

Mr. IGOE assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] is recognized.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I feel should I not say something of the worth of the Hon. WILLIAM PATTERSON BORLAND I should be remiss in a duty which my State owes to his memory.

There is a very dear and historical connecting link between Mr. BORLAND and the State of Maryland, especially its metropolis, the city of Baltimore.

During the heat of the Revolutionary War there came to our then town of Baltimore 20 gentlemen of large means, experience, and generosity. Among this number was one William Patterson, who became one of the bulwarks of our city and State. He it was, together with other public-spirited citizens, raised money to equip the troops, helped form the banks, and provide means and money to develop and deepen the harbor and channels of Baltimore. Many other things vitally necessary to the winning of the war and the prosperity of the city were largely due to him.

In 1812 William Patterson's clipper ships plied the Seven Seas and did more to destroy English commerce during that war than any other one factor and hasten the conclusion of the war. It was Patterson who helped fortify North Point and Fort McHenry, where the English were repulsed and the Star-Spangled Banner was born. There was no citizen of our splendid Commonwealth who lived during those precarious times of two wars who did more for his adopted city and State than did William Patterson.

William Patterson brought with him to this country his daughter Elizabeth, afterwards known as Betsy Patterson, and a foster son Thomas Borland. It was William Patterson Borland, a son of Thomas, who settled in Kansas and became the father of WILLIAM PATTERSON BORLAND, our colleague, whom we knew so well. Betsy Patterson, the daughter, on the 24th of December 1803, as published in the Federal Gazette, was married by the Rev. Bishop Carroll to Jerome Bonaparte, the youngest brother of the first consul of the French Republic, afterwards the Great Napoleon, and from this sprang the grandson, the former Secretary of the Navy, Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore.

Thomas Borland and Betsey Patterson were brought up like brother and sister, and the splendid service of William Patterson endeared them both to the city of Baltimore and our State. WILLIAM PATTERSON BORLAND, our former colleague and friend, was a familiar figure in the House of Representatives. Always vigorous, always attentive to his duties, and as a constant attendant upon the sessions, he became known and loved by each and every one of his colleagues. The ability with which he grasped the various subjects of legislation was remarkable. His tenacity was almost beyond his endurance. When I first came to this House, eight years ago, he looked well and strong and the picture of health and vigor, but his constant and untiring energy greatly sapped his constitution, so that before he left for France, where he died, he showed the fatigue of the long sessions we have had during the past years.

A man of perseverance, good judgment, and a splendid speaker was our friend Mr. BORLAND. We shall miss him in the Halls of Legislation. Marylanders, whom he has addressed on several occasions, will grieve at his passing away. They will connect his work and his life with the history of his illustrious namesake, William Patterson, and his grandfather, Thomas Borland, of Maryland.

On behalf of the people of Maryland, on behalf of the great city of Baltimore, I extend to those whom he has left behind our tenderest sympathy, our greatest admiration for the deceased, and our fervent wishes that his family may look upon Maryland second alone to the State of Missouri, which he so admirably represented.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, death has laid its hand very heavily upon the Sixty-fifth Congress. During this Congress 14 Members of the House and 10 Members of the Senate have already passed to the great beyond. In the death of WILLIAM P. BORLAND the House lost one of its most scholarly and industrious Members and the Nation was bereft of a statesman of high order. His work in Congress was not confined to his district alone, but was national in scope and permanent in character.

It was my good fortune to become closely associated with Mr. BORLAND. We had many things in common. We were of the same age, graduated from the same university, entered the same Congress together, and for eight years labored together upon the Committee on Appropriations. In this association I came to know him intimately. I admired him for his great industry, his ripe scholarship, and, above all, his straightforward and manly character. In my experience I have rarely met a man in whom there were so happily combined those rare qualities of scholarship, of fidelity to duty, of industry, and courage that were combined in him.

His greatest work in Congress was in the preparation of the fortifications bill during the last session. That bill was prepared while we were at war and carried more than $6,000,000,000. Its preparation involved not only a study of our seacoast defenses in the United States, the Panama Canal, Hawaiian Islands, and the Philippine Islands, but it also involved the greater problem of supplying the American Expeditionary Forces in France with field artillery and field-artillery ammunition. This, in turn, compelled a thorough study of the productive capacity of America to furnish arms and ammunition necessary to win the war. It involved an examination of existing facilities and plants, the building of new plants, and the enlargement of plants already constructed. In the preparation of that bill it was necessary to study not alone the practical questions of supplying matériel, but also the scientific problems involved in their production. The work of Mr. BORLAND in the preparation of that measure was the admiration and delight of his associates. Neither the magnitude of the bill nor the many minute details involved in its preparation deterred him in the least from the most searching and thorough investigation required for the solution of the problems which it involved. When that great measure was considered in the House it was found to have been so thoroughly prepared that scarcely an amendment to it was adopted on the floor of the House.

I recall with great pleasure the manner in which he approached his work in the preparation of that bill. Weeks before the estimates were taken up by the subcommittee every member was furnished with a list of books and periodicals having a special bearing upon the production of the matériel which would be embraced within the bill. We were furnished by him with scientific references to the production of nitrates, liquid chlorine, picric acid, toluol, and other necessary ingredients of ammunition and high explosives, for which there was a great demand and of which there was a shortage in the United States. The preparation of that measure, therefore, involved not only a knowledge of science but a cool and deliberate judgment of a high order, and Mr. BORLAND'S work in its preparation is a monument to his statesmanship more enduring than granite.

Mr. BORLAND was a very industrious Member of the House. He called his subcommittee together early in the morning, and its work kept them in session ofttimes until the late hours of night. He shrank from no duty, but approached his work with genuine enthusiasm, and I have no doubt that his early demise was in some measure due to the unusual strain upon his time and strength which the consideration and preparation of the great bill which had been intrusted to his care exacted.

His work is ended. It was well and patriotically performed. The great State of Missouri, which gave him to Congress, will miss him. His friends and associates here, where he performed his greatest public service, will miss his counsel and advice. But the greatest personal loss will be felt by his family. He was essentially a home man, and when not engaged in his public duties he sought the companionship of home. Surrounded by a loving and interesting family, he spent his leisure hours with its members. And so to-day our tenderest sympathy goes out to the bereaved widow and family left to mourn his loss. To them, as to us, he will be remembered as a man of high ideals, of pure heart, pure mind, and pure speech. Those who knew him best loved him most.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I knew the late WILLIAM P. BORLAND intimately during the last 20 years of his life. He was the dean of the Kansas City Law School when I graduated from that institution. I knew him while he was teacher and I scholar; I knew him here in Congress as a Member of Congress. I served with him throughout his service here; I remember very well when he first came to this House. I had preceded him by two years in the Congress of the United States, and when I met him down in the well of the House yonder he said to me, "I used to teach you. Now you can teach me." I merely mention that fact to show the breadth of character and the generous disposition that he had.

As we see the lives of our friends ebbing away, as our friends pass to that unknown, we are always impressed with the mystery that enshrouds it and surrounds it, and we are again impressed, it seems to me, with the thought that death always comes too soon and in the lives of men that are so full of usefulness, so full of true worth, so full of generous and unstinted endeavor, the loss which we feel and the loss which we know the world suffers becomes more acute and is brought home to us with greater force.

Our late colleague had no enemies here and he had none at home. I used to live in Kansas City, Mo., myself. I was born in that State. I have known him intimately for 20 years. The State loses a great man, the Nation loses a great man, the Congress loses a great man. But it seems to me, after all, that when death approaches, as it must approach us all, it is worth something to his friends to know, and it will be worth something for his family to know, that while here he left nothing but favorable impressions behind and nothing but real and true service to the Congress, to Missouri, to the Nation, and the teeming millions that make up the Nation.

I was proud to be a student of his school. I was proud to serve with him here. I was proud to have known him. I was proud to have known of his clean, honorable career. I am proud to utter this word concerning his life and character. We may all mourn his passing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in this Congress the Missouri delegation in House and Senate has suffered an unusual percentage of losses. Senator Stone, Dr. Meeker, and WILLIAM P. BORLAND were all called to their last accounts. Senator Stone was 68 years old, Meeker was in the very prime of his life, and BORLAND had not passed his meridian. Senator Stone had nearly lived out the psalmist's allotment of three score years and ten. There was not a more robust man in the House than Dr. Meeker. BORLAND was not very much behind him in that regard; a little older, not so heavy, but a man of remarkably good health. If I had been called on to pick out 25 men in the House who in all human probability would be living a quarter of a century hence, I would have picked both Meeker and BORLAND. Mr. BORLAND was a good-looking man, a pleasant man, a good debater, a tiptop stump speaker, an incorrigible optimist. He was a lawyer of high standing, author of three or four law books, dean of a law school, and had served in Congress 10 years. He represented one of the finest congressional districts in America. I do not believe that there is a finer body of land under the sun than Jackson County, Mo., of which Kansas City, young, robust, growing, ambitious, is the metropolis. If a circle were drawn with a radius of 400 miles with Kansas City as the center, there would be more good land within that circle than any circle of the same size on the habitable globe. BORLAND was intensely proud of his district, as he had a right to be. He served the people thereof faithfully and well. He was also a popular lecturer. I do not know it for a fact, but I believe part of his trip to Europe, on which he died, was not only intended for the purpose of getting first-hand information about our soldiers over there but also to collect material for a lecture about things connected therewith. He waged some notable battles while in Congress. Sometimes he won and sometimes he lost, as happens to most Members who take an active part in the proceedings. He was always on the side of the people.

We were all much grieved, because of our friendship for him, to hear of his untimely death while still in the very prime of his splendid powers, and we were also greatly shocked because when he left his native country he was the very picture of health and seemed destined for a long life. I have often wondered why some people useful to their kind and their country are cut off in the prime of life, or even before they reach their meridian, while others live to great old age.

When one of our friends departs, we involuntarily repeat the question that Job propounded thousands of years ago, "If a man die, shall he live again?" It is one of the most interesting questions about which man ever reasoned. I have no sort of doubt that the question was old when Job propounded it. I undertook once to run back to its source the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. It extends back to the very twilight of recorded history, and the chances are it was debated and talked about and hoped for before history began, and it will still be discussed and talked about and hoped for by the very latest of our descendants.

It is a great pity that Lazarus was not interviewed when he came to life. He undoubtedly could have thrown a flood of light on the much-debated subject.

The ancients reasoned about it as clearly and comprehensively as we do. A great many people think that Christ originated the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, but it has been the doctrine of the human race, it seems, from the beginning. Socrates reasoned it out that when he saw the wicked flourish in this world and the good in unfortunate circumstances, that there must be a hereafter where these wrongs would be righted. When he was forced to drink the fatal hemlock, he said to his judges, "I go; you remain. Which is the happier fate?" To my mind the doctrine of the resurrection, which runs like a thread of gold through all the New Testament Scriptures, is of most consoling character. In the human heart there is an unceasing yearning to meet again and greet again those to whom we were nearly connected in this life. The sweetest words that ever fell on human ears were those of Christ: "I am the resurrection and the life," and it has sustained men and women in all the difficulties and cruelties of this world.

Among other characteristics, Mr. BORLAND was very active in his religious duties. His actions were correct, his language was chaste, and in this respect he was a model citizen. Defeat came to him as it comes to most everybody else in the long run, but he was so young, so vigorous, so well equipped, that I have no sort of doubt that if he had lived and had chosen to return to public life that his vacation would have been short.

In the House we valued him highly while living, and we mourn him sincerely in his grave.

Everything seems out of joint. Nature seems to have made a sad botch of the world.

It has been customary to rail at religion for the great catastrophe which in late years has come upon half of the world. They find fault and pick flaws, and many sorely tried and despairing souls have felt constrained to curse God and die. Yet over all the wreck of matter and crash of worlds we may still say, "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust,
Yet hope will dream
And faith will trust
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.

Great religious revivals follow great wars frequently, and the signs of the times indicate that a universal revival is now impending.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, again the flag upon the Capitol has hung at half-mast and the hearts of the Members of the House have been made sad by the news of the death of one of their colleagues. Again the unrelenting hand of death has beckoned to one of our Members, and he has left us for that bourne from which no traveler ever returns. The death of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND forcibly reminds us that in the midst of life we are in death. It was but a very few weeks ago that in the best of health and spirits and with the promise of a long and useful life before him he departed for Europe in order to personally visit the western battle front in France and to investigate conditions, particularly with reference to the boys from his own city and section who had given their lives in behalf of their country. Within two weeks after he landed in Europe he became ill, and the House was inexpressibly shocked and grieved to learn that he had passed away on February 20, 1919, near Coblenz, Germany.

Mr. BORLAND and I entered Congress together in 1909 and two years later were both chosen to serve on the Committee on Appropriations. Since that time we were closely associated in the work of the committee and a cordial friendship existed between us. I had occasion, therefore, possibly as much as any Member of the House, to observe the industry, courage, and intelligence which marked his whole career as a member of the committee and of Congress.

There is no committee in the House which requires a greater degree of industry on the part of its membership than the Committee on Appropriations. The appropriations carried are so varied and cover such a wide range of subjects that one must have industry and diligently devote himself to the study of the various subjects presented and have the courage to say no if he hopes to make himself a useful member of the committee. Mr. BORLAND possessed both of these qualifications to a very high degree. He never failed to do his duty, and the knowledge which he had acquired by close investigation and application was always most helpful to the committee and to the House in consideration of appropriation bills.

His courage was of a very high order. He never deserted a principle in order to build up his personal political fortunes. He acted always from the highest motives and with regard to what he believed to be the best interest of the country. If he erred at times—and there are none of us who have not—then it was an error honestly made. He never voted for or against an appropriation because of any possible effect his vote might have upon his own political future. In addition to his work upon the committee, he found time to devote to the study of all the important legislation that has come before Congress, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD gives evidence of the careful and intelligent consideration he had given to most of the important matters which have come before Congress during his term of office. He served his country faithfully and efficiently and has left behind him an enviable record for close application and attention to duty and an earnest devotion to his country and the people who had honored him and whom he served with signal fidelity and ability.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. BORLAND was greatly admired and respected by the members of the Committee on Appropriations, with whom he had served for eight years, and as an evidence of their affectionate regard and high estimate of his ability and value as a legislator, I desire to make a part of my remarks the resolutions which were adopted by the committee at its final meeting after news was received of his death. These resolutions are as follows:

The committee has heard with the most profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, of the State of Missouri, which occurred near Coblenz, Germany, on February 20, 1919. Mr. BORLAND first entered Congress on March 4, 1909, and two years later was chosen a member of the Committee on Appropriations, upon which he served until his death with signal ability, unimpeachable integrity, unquestioned fidelity, tireless energy, and a genuine devotion to duty, which was characteristic of his entire career in Congress.

Possibly the greatest service rendered by Mr. BORLAND as a member of the committee, and also as a Member of Congress, was as chairman of the Subcommittee on Fortifications in the preparation of the fortification bill for the fiscal year 1919, carrying more than $8,000,000,000 in appropriations and authorizations made necessary by the war. He worked unceasingly and tirelessly to familiarize himself with the many technical details of that bill, and the hearings which were conducted as a preliminary to its preparation evidenced his hard work, his unceasing efforts, and his intelligent and thorough grasp of all the facts necessary for its proper preparation.

In all of his public service he was actuated by the highest and purest motives and by the earnest desire to faithfully serve the country and those who had chosen him to represent them in the Halls of Congress.

In January, 1919, he went to Europe for the purpose of making an inspection tour of the battle lines on the western front and to investigate conditions as regards American soldiers and hospitals. While on this tour of inspection he was stricken with bronchial pneumonia and died far from home and native land: Therefore be it

Resolved by the committee, That the death of Mr. BORLAND is a distinct personal loss to his colleagues on the committee, and that the committee has lost one of its most useful members, the Congress a capable, careful, and efficient legislator, and the country a faithful and devoted public servant. Be it further

Resolved, That we tender to his widow and family our most sincere sympathy on account of their great loss. And that this memorial be spread upon the journal and a copy furnished by the clerk of the committee to his bereaved widow.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a word to what has already been so well said concerning the life and public service of my late colleague, the Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND. He was a faithful and efficient Member of this House for a number of years. He possessed great ability and was an indefatigable worker. While I did not agree with him in all positions he has taken upon public questions, I recognize his honesty and uprightness of purpose. I mourn with my other colleagues and with the people of my great State in the loss that has come to us in his recent death. To his widow and loved ones I extend my sincere sympathy. The death of our colleague is but another evidence of the fact that—

All that tread the globe are but a handful
The tribes that slumber in its bosom.

In the passing of this splendid representative of the people, it should cause us all to endeavor the greater to do our full part in giving to the people of the United States the best service that is possible while we are yet here.

Show us the truth and the pathway of duty,
Help us to lift up our standard sublime
Until earth is restored to its order and beauty,
Lost in the shadowless morning of time.
Teach us to sow the seed of many a noble deed,
Make us determined, undaunted, and strong,
Armed with the sword of right, dauntless amid the fight,
Help us to level the bulwarks of wrong.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of our colleague, WILLIAM P. BORLAND, came as a distinct shock to every one of us. It serves to remind us again of the fact that "in the midst of life there is death." At best, he has only preceded us a little while.

Life is a great mystery. We can not understand that why one so splendidly equipped to serve his fellows should be cut down in the very prime of life and others less fitted to fight life's battles are allowed to remain. We can only say "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

I believe that about 14 of our colleagues have answered the final summons during this present Congress. This should remind us of what Job said: "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble, he cometh forth like a flower and is cut down." * * * "His bounds are appointed and he can not pass."

Another has spoken of the uncertainty of life in these words: "Go to now, ye that say, to-day, or to-morrow we will go into such a city and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain; whereas, ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away."

The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is the only one that has answered the centuries-old question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Job's faith in God enabled him to really answer his own question. He says: "There is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease, though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet, through the scent of water, it will bud and bring forth boughs like a plant." Clearly prophesying the resurrection, thousands of years afterwards, Paul, descanting upon the same vital question, said: "But some man will say, how are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die; and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or some other grain, but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him and to every seed his own body." * * * "There are also celestial bodies and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestrial is another." * * * It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."

We, therefore, must believe in a future existence, and, by the same token, must believe that in this life we must prepare for this future existence.

I have no doubt but that this was the simple faith of our departed friend. May we all have an abiding faith in the efficacy of the shed blood of Jesus Christ, so that when we come to "pass over" we may know that we shall live again.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. BORLAND was the third member of the Missouri delegation in the House and Senate in this Congress to pass away. When I received word that he was dead it seemed that there must be some mistake, because but a few weeks ago he was here in our midst busily engaged in the work that he loved so well and enjoying, apparently, the best of health. He had decided to go to France to see for himself the battle fields upon which our victorious armies had fought, to study at first hand the condition of our forces, and to become better acquainted with the great problems that have followed the ending of this the greatest war of all time. His illness while so engaged was unknown to us, and consequently the news that he was dead came as a great surprise to all of his colleagues in the House.

As a Representative in Congress for 10 years he had taken a prominent part in framing the important legislation enacted during that period, and there were few men here who had a more comprehensive knowledge of the activities of the Government. As a member of the Appropriations Committee he had rendered splendid service in studying the needs of the various departments, and with the other members of that great committee had labored industriously, especially during the war, in providing properly for carrying on the necessary work of these departments. The members of that committee are not frequently given credit for their valuable service to the country, and yet there is no more important committee in the House. Upon their work depends largely the success of the departments, and in their hands rests largely the economical administration of these same departments. The members of that committee have a difficult and laborious task, and Mr. BORLAND brought to his work ability and industry unexcelled.

His service here was marked by an active participation in the proceedings of the House, and he was unusually well informed upon public questions. In his State he was well known as a public speaker and in his city took an active part in municipal affairs.

Mr. Speaker, no Member of this House was more devoted to his work, and the record he made here will always be a monument to his industry, energy, and ability.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on this occasion may have unanimous consent to revise and extend remarks in the RECORD and that Members desiring to do so may print remarks on the life, character, and public services of Mr. BORLAND.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Members have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of the late Mr. BORLAND. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of our late colleague, Mr. BORLAND, for whom I entertained the highest respect and admiration for his personal qualities and his distinguished services.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of the late Mr. BORLAND. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOSPITALS FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1161).

The SPEAKER. The time having elapsed which was set aside for memorial purposes, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, and I ask that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the report is not very long, and it has not been before the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right, I withdraw the request. Let the Clerk read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to provide immediate additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care and treatment of discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and the following persons only: Merchant-marine seamen, seamen on boats of the Mississippi River Commission, officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard, officers and employees of the Public Health Service, certain keepers and assistant keepers of the United States Lighthouse Service, seamen of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, civilian employees entitled to treatment under the United States employees' compensation act, and employees on Army transports not officers or enlisted men of the Army, now entitled by law to treatment by the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 2. There are hereby permanently transferred to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service for hospital or sanatoria or other uses the following properties, with their present equipment, including sites and leases, or so much thereof as may be required by the Public Health Service, including mechanical equipment in connection therewith, and approaches thereto, with authority to lease or purchase sites not owned by the Government, as follows: Hospitals, with such other buildings and land as may be required, at Camp Cody, N. Mex.; Camp Hancock, Ga.; Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Fla.; Camp Beauregard, La.; Camp Logan, Tex.; Camp Fremont, Cal.; and nitrate plant, Perryville, Md.; and such hospitals, with other necessary buildings, hereafter vacated by the War Department, as may be required and found suitable for the needs of the Public Health Service for hospital or sanatoria purposes. And for the purpose of such remodeling of or additions to the above-named plants as may be required to adapt them to the needs and uses of the Public Health Service, the sum of $750,000 is hereby authorized.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer, without charge, to the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of the Public Health Service such hospital furniture and equipment, including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles, in good condition, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals, and the President is authorized to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department of the use of such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures, appliances, furnishings, or furniture under the control of any other department of the Government not required for the purposes of such department, and suitable for the uses of the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 4. So much of the Battle Mountain Sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with its present equipment, as is not required for the purposes for which these facilities were provided, is hereby made available for the use of the Public Health Service for a period of five years from the approval of this act, unless sooner released by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to contract with any existing hospital or sanatorium, by lease or otherwise, for immediate use, in whole or in part, of their present facilities, so as to provide bed capacity and facilities for not exceeding 1,000 patients, and for such purposes the sum of $300,000 is hereby authorized.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the same will be for the best interests of the Government from the standpoint of cost, location, and of the emergency needs of the Public Health Service, to purchase the site, buildings, and hospital facilities and appurtenances, at Corpus Christi, Tex., known as General Hospital No. 15, and for such purpose the sum of $150,000 is hereby authorized.

"The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized to be held as an emergency fund for the purchase of land and buildings suitable for hospital and sanatoria purposes, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to select and locate, and to make additions and improvements suitable to adapt them to the uses of the United States Public Health Service, if in his judgment the emergency requires it.

"SEC. 7. By the construction of new hospitals and sanatoria, to include the necessary buildings with their appropriate mechanical and other equipment and approach work, including roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, vehicles, and live stock on sites now owned by the Government, or on new sites to be acquired by purchase or otherwise, at the places hereinafter named: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a finding that any hospital project hereinafter specifically authorized is not to the best interest of the Government from the standpoint of cost, location, and of the emergency needs of the Public Health Service, he is hereby authorized to reject such project or projects and to locate, construct, or acquire hospitals at such other locations as would best subserve the interest of the Government and the emergency needs of the Public Health Service within the limits of cost of such authorization.

"a. At Cook County, Ill., by taking over the land and executing the contract for the construction thereon of hospital buildings specified therein of a certain proposed contract executed by the Shank Co., August 31, 1918, and in accordance with such contract and the plans and specifications identified in connection therewith August 31, 1918, by the signature and initials of Brig. Gen. R. C. Marshall, jr., Construction Division, Quartermaster Department, United States Army, by Lieut. Col. C. C. Wright, and the Shank Co., by George H. Shank, president, at the cost stated therein, namely $2,500,000, with such changes in said plans and specifications as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury to adapt said specified buildings to the needs and purposes of the Public Health Service, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

"b. In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to execute the contract with the Shank Co. hereinbefore specified, with such verbal changes as are made necessary by a change in the contracting officers, and to assume all obligations in said contract contained, and to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

"c. At Dawson Springs, Ky., on land to be acquired by gift, the necessary buildings for a sanatorium having a capacity of not less than 500 beds. The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized for the construction of such sanatorium.

"d. The sum of $900,000 is hereby authorized for the construction, including site, of a hospital plant complete at Norfolk, Va.

"e. The sum of $550,000 is hereby authorized for the construction, on land owned by the Government, on a site to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, of a hospital plant complete in the District of Columbia or vicinity.

"f. The sum of $190,000 is hereby authorized for additional hospital accommodations, including such minor alteration in and remodeling of existing and authorized buildings as may be necessary to economically adapt them to the additional accommodations herein authorized for the Marine Hospital at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., the sum appropriated for additions to the said hospital by the act approved March 28, 1918, is authorized to be expended in full without the construction of psychiatric units.

"SEC. 8. In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, all new construction work herein authorized shall, as far as feasible, be of fire-resisting character, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts for the construction, equipment, etc., of such buildings on Government-owned lands, or lands acquired for such purpose, to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

"SEC. 9. For the purpose of carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, the sum of $8,840,000, and for furniture and equipment not otherwise provided for, the sum of $210,000, in all $9,050,000.

"SEC. 10. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to employ, for service within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sums hereby authorized and appropriated for construction purposes, at customary rates of compensation, such additional technical and clerical services as may be necessary, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the drawings and specifications for the above-named objects and supervision of the execution thereof, for traveling expenses, and printing incident thereto, at a total limit of cost for such additional technical and clerical services and traveling expenses, etc., of not exceeding $210,000 of the above-named limit of cost. All of the above-mentioned work shall be under the direction and supervision of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 11. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for necessary personnel, including regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service and clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and maintenance, hospital supplies and equipment, leases, fuel, lights, and water, and freight, transportation, and travel, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $785,333 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and made authorizations and appropriations for specific projects aggregating $7,100,000.

The amendment proposed by the conferees strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts new matter embodying the projects named in the Senate bill, with certain qualifications, limitations, and additions, and provides for a total appropriation of $9,050,000.

The bill embodied in the conferees' report consists of 11 sections, as follows:

Section 1: Authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to provide immediate additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care and treatment of discharged, sick, and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and other classes of persons, which are specifically named, now entitled by law to treatment by the Public Health Service.

Section 2: Provides for the transfer to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service certain hospitals, which are specifically named, situated at various camps now used by the War Department, and makes an appropriation of $750,000 to remodel and adapt them to the needs of the Public Health Service.

Section 3: Authorizes the Secretary of War to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury hospital furniture and equipment and supplies, and authorizes the President to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department of the use of lands, buildings, etc., under the control of any other department of the Government which may be suitable for the uses of the Public Health Service.

Section 4: Authorizes the use of a part of Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., by the Public Health Service.

Section 5: Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to secure additional bed capacity and authorizes the expenditure of $300,000.

Section 6: Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment the same will be for the best interests of the Government, to purchase the hospital known as General Hospital No. 15, at Corpus Christi, Tex., and appropriates $150,000; also sets aside an emergency fund of $1,500,000, for the purchase of land and building suitable for hospital and sanitorium purposes, as the emergency may require.

Section 7: Authorizes the construction of new hospitals and sanitoria at the following places, provided that if the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a finding that any hospital project specifically authorized is not to the best interests of the Government he may reject such project, or projects, and locate, construct, or acquire hospitals at other locations which will best subserve the interests of the Government and the emergency needs of the Public Health Service:

(a) At Cook County, Ill	$3,000,000
(b) Directions as to above.
(c) Dawson Springs, Ky	1,500,000
(d) Norfolk, Va	900,000
(e) District of Columbia	550,000
(f) Marine Hospital, Staten Island, N. Y	190,000
	6,140,000

Section 8: Contains directions as to fireproof construction and as to purchase of material and labor.

Section 9: Summarizes the appropriations for the foregoing and provides an appropriation for furniture and equipment, making in the aggregate $9,050,000.

Section 10: Contains the general and usual provisions as to technical and clerical services, and limits the expense therefor to $210,000.

Section 11: Appropriates for personal, clerical help, maintenance, hospital supplies and equipment, and so forth, and burial expenses of patients, the sum of $785,333.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT.

We, the undersigned conferees on the part of the House, beg to make the following additional statements in regard to the above-named bill as agreed upon on the part of the conferees.

We concur in the general features of the report except that portion of the same which designates specific places for the purchase or construction of hospitals, and we have reluctantly signed the report because of the fact that we consider the legislation as of extreme necessity and we believe that it is our duty to waive some serious objections to the bill as agreed upon to prevent a defeat of the legislation by the refusal of the Senate conferees to agree to what we think ought to be in the bill.

The bill as it was passed by the House put the responsibility of selecting the locations of the hospitals on the Treasury Department, where it belongs. The Public Health Service is a bureau of the Treasury Department and has all the facilities, including physicians, surgeons, and so forth, to intelligently make such selections. Congress has no such facilities, and yet for some reason this responsibility is put upon us by this bill. If the Treasury Department desired to shift this responsibility from its own shoulders to those of Congress, it has never given any good reason for such action, so far as we know. Extensive hearings were had before the House committee on the bill as reported by that committee. In fact, the bill was drawn by the department and sent to the House committee. Not a suggestion was made to the House committee that the department desired us to designate any localities, except in the separate bill for Dawsonsprings. On that bill we had extensive hearings, and the committee was convinced that there was an urgent necessity for immediate action while a comprehensive scheme was being worked out. For that reason the Dawson Springs bill was reported. On its consideration by the House that contention was overruled and the bill was passed, giving the President the right to appoint a commission to locate hospitals, and the Secretary of the Treasury was given the authority to construct and equip them. We had no intimation that the department desired to adopt any policy of specific location or designation until the general bill had been reported by the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This very naturally aroused a suspicion that the Treasury Department wishes to unload on Congress a responsibility that it is unwilling to assume to itself.

We mean no reflection whatever on any one of the projects proposed in the bill, but do think it strange that Congress should be required to assume a responsibility which ought to be carried by the Treasury Department. We have been informed that the Secretary of the Treasury desires the places and projects designated in the bill agreed upon by the conferees. If that is true, why should we be unwilling to confer by this legislation the power, the duty, and the responsibility on that department of doing so? The proviso, however, does put it up to the Treasury Department to pass upon the question as to whether there are not better places and projects, and we hope that that department will at least assert its authority if it believes some other place or project better.

FRANK CLARK.
JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to obtain some information before pressing the point of order.

In the original Senate amendment no authority was carried for the purchase of the hospital at Corpus Christi, Tex., as provided for in section 6 of the report agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to obtain some information from the chairman, not only as to the reason why the conferees agreed to adopt that project, but also why the conferees saw fit to depart from the policy of the House by designating the respective hospitals that are provided for in the conference report?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman's last question first.

The Senate took the position that Congress ought to name the places where these hospitals are to go; that Congress itself ought to legislate, and not leave it up to the departments to select locations. The House conferees objected to that, although we thought the Senate conferees were right on the general proposition that Congress ought to be specific in naming locations, and that that was their right and that it ought not to be delegated. But this bill had been framed, and the House had seen fit to leave the selection of all locations to the Public Health Service or to the Treasury Department. We insisted that no places at all should be named in the bill. The Senate insisted that these places should be named and that it was the duty of Congress to name them. We finally acceded to that view of it.

Now, what was the other question the gentleman asked?

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the selection of the hospital at Corpus Christi, which was not designated in the original Senate amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Senate conferees agreed that the property at Corpus Christi, which is now in the hands of the Government and being used as a hospital, having been fitted up for that purpose, is an exceedingly cheap piece of property and a great bargain. The Treasury Department had recommended it, I think, since the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it privately owned?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is a privately owned hotel, as I understand it, which has been taken over by the Government and fitted up for hospital purposes, and is now in use for that purpose and is a very splendid property, and worth very much more, as I understand, than the price named in the bill.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARNHART. Have the public-health authorities approved of these sites?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, will the gentleman from Florida inform the committee what is the policy of the Public Health Service in designating so many of these hospitals that have been erected in conjunction with war service at the respective camps, and particularly why they have designated mostly those in the South? I did not desire to raise any sectional question, but it strikes me upon reading the report that they have designated only hospitals in the Southland particularly, and have not designated the very complete hospitals that have been erected at camps in the North; for instance, at Camp Custer, Camp Devens, and Camp Grant.

At four of our northern camps we established permanent heating systems, not only to provide heating for the hospitals but for the camps themselves. I should like to have the viewpoint of the conferees, because when this bill was originally considered we did not give any consideration whatever to the designation of these hospitals. We voted a lump sum. The bill came in here, and the gentleman from Alabama asked unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table and send it to conference. I asked that the only question litigated in the House, as to limiting the facilities of these hospitals to those named in the House bill, should be adhered to, and I understood the gentleman from Florida that he would insist on that position. We now find that the bill has been broadened as it passed the Senate, and the House position has been departed from.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman has mentioned several matters, and I would like to know what particular one he wishes me to answer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why it happened that so many hospitals connected with camps in the South have been designated and none of those connected with camps in the North.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will pause for a minute, I will answer him.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will stop for an hour.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not ask the gentleman to do that. I will tell the gentleman that when this bill went to the Senate the Senate committee said there were a large number of these hospitals all over the country at military camps, and they took it upon themselves to ascertain if some of these hospitals could not be made available for the present use of the Public Health Service in that regard. They called the officials from the Surgeon General's office of the War Department, and they went into an extensive investigation of it.

They asked the officials of the Surgeon General's office of the War Department to indicate to them what hospitals at particular camps could they turn over for that purpose. This list of hospitals, as described in the bill, is a list of hospitals which the War Department said they could turn over for this purpose. These are all that can be turned over just now. But the gentleman from Wisconsin understands that this is simply the beginning of hospital construction and hospital use. Later on the War Department can turn over other hospitals, which they expect to do. Therefore, instead of trying to arrange hospital capacity sufficient now to take care of all the needs of the service, they are simply providing for a sufficient number to take care of the needs for the immediate present, with the idea that they will get more of these cantonment hospitals a little later which the War Department will be willing to turn over.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the gentleman's position, there will be other hospitals available for Government use after the War Department has no longer need of them. May I ask why the Government is going to the expense of $1,500,000 in the establishment of a hospital at Dawsonsprings, Ky., when we have these hospitals tributary to the District?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We will not have hospital capacity to take care of all the sick and wounded of the Government. It is absolutely necessary to build new ones now. The cantonment hospitals will not be sufficient to take care of all of them. And they are not of the character of hospitals for certain kinds of treatment. These particular ones are to be built—one in the city of Washington, one taken over in the city of Chicago, one at Dawsonsprings, Ky., and another at Norfolk, Va. These are the ones to be built and which we are assured by the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department will be needed for this purpose. Just as fast as the War Department can dispense with hospitals at the different cantonments they will be turned over to the Treasury Department for its use.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any estimate of the total charge on the Treasury by the Government establishing these permanent hospitals throughout the country and for their maintenance and operation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I can not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I renew it. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am at the gentleman's service.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman may have explained this before, but I have just come in from a committee meeting and was not able to get away before. There is a provision here which makes available the Battle Mountain Sanatorium at Hot Springs. The bill says it is not required for the facilities for which it was provided. Will that, in the gentleman's judgment, permit the transfer of the patients in that institution to some other place on the ground that they can be taken care of somewhere else, and therefore the facilities are not required?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not understand that they are to remove any patients from there. I understand that they are simply using that portion of Battle Mountain Sanatorium which is not being used for its original purposes. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman undoubtedly has in mind a bill which was before the House some weeks ago, wherein it was sought to transfer this institution temporarily to the War Department for hospital purposes. That bill did contemplate that there might be a transfer from the institution at Hot Springs to some similar institution of those who could be transferred without injury to their health. But there is no such provision in this bill. I may say to the gentleman that the capacity of the institution is somewhere about 600. The War Department has plans for glassing in the verandas, and in that event a considerably larger number of patients could be taken care of. There are only 330 there now.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Florida to this language:

SEC. 4. So much of the Battle Mountain Sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with its present equipment, as is not required for the purposes for which these facilities were provided, is hereby made available for the use of the Public Health Service for a period of five years from the approval of this act, unless sooner released by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

Now that language certainly, it seems to me, would permit the officials to transfer patients who were there to some other institution.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is mistaken about that. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the wording of it again—

So much of the Battle Mountain Sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with its present equipment, as is not required for the purposes for which these facilities were provided, is hereby made available for the use of the Public Health Service for a period of five years from the approval of this act, unless sooner released by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

There is no attempt at all to encroach upon any space that is needed for its original purposes, but the fact, as I understand it, is that a large part of that sanatorium is not in use, is vacant.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Just a moment; and the whole purpose of this is to allow the Public Health Service to use the portions of it not required for its present purpose, and that is all there is to it. There is no desire at all to transfer the present patients to any other place. That, of course, could not be done.

Mr. WALSH. But it gives opportunity, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not believe it could be done under the language here.

Mr. WALSH. The language is—

* * * as is not provided for the purposes for which these facilities were provided.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Who will determine whether it is required or not?

Mr. WALSH. If certain patients are now occupying certain quarters there, and they ascertain that they can be taken care of somewhere else——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. But I want to be assured that that language, in the gentleman's opinion, is not susceptible of that interpretation, and also to have a further assurance from him, as one of the conferees and as the chairman of the committee, that it is not intended to write this act in such a way as to permit those patients to be transferred at will and turn this entire institution over to this new service.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I assure the gentleman that it is not so intended on the part of any of the conferees. They do not intend to encroach upon the patients at all. It was the sole purpose of the conferees to take such space as was not needed by them and use it temporarily.

Mr. WALSH. And that they are to be permitted to continue there?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to have the gentleman's assurance.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has asked the gentleman from Florida whether it is the intention of the conferees—the gentleman from Florida being one of them—to remove the soldiers who are at this institution?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. DYER. Or whether it is their intention to interfere with them at all. The gentleman from Florida, of course, will not have anything to do with that matter when this bill is passed. As I understand it, under the act itself creating soldiers' homes the board may transfer every soldier there to some other home.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. There is no such power granted here.

Mr. DYER. They already have the power to transfer them to some other home.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman think these old soldiers ought to be taken out of that place and transferred?

Mr. DYER. That is not the question, but they have the authority to do so now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is just exactly what we want to guard against. These old soldiers who are in the sanatorium want to stay there.

Mr. DYER. Under the gentleman's agreement in this conference report, and under the existing law creating soldiers' homes, every soldier there can be transferred to some one of the other branches.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. He is not going to be transferred under the operation of this bill. That is dead sure.

Mr. DYER. The conference report does not prevent the board from transferring them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But here is the fact about it: Here is a sanatorium, a hospital, owned by the Government, for the purpose of these old veterans, and they are there being treated. There is a large amount of it that is vacant, that is not being used, and the whole purpose of this is simply to take over that which is not being used, and which will not be used, and use it temporarily. That is all there is to it—not to interfere at all with the status of the patients of the home now.

Mr. GANDY. And one thing more in that connection, if the gentleman will permit. Under the language of this proviso, if a sufficient number of veterans of former wars would enter this institution to fill it to its capacity, there would be no space available.

Mr. DYER. They have to make application to enter that branch, and the application has to be approved.

Mr. BURNETT. This does not interfere with the rights of those who could remove them. Certainly no right is conferred upon the Bureau of Health to remove them. It would not be right for us to undertake to interfere with the rights that already exist under the law of transfer, but what we meant is simply that this Bureau of Health could not occupy this if it was needed by the soldiers of any war and as long as it is needed by the soldiers of any war.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state whether there is anything in this conference report that would prevent the Treasury Department or the Public Health Service from making additions to the buildings and facilities there for taking care of patients. In other words, they can put up additional buildings, can they not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no; they can not put any other buildings at this place.

Mr. DYER. They can not put up additions there?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; not at this place.

Mr. BURNETT. They can at other places.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am curious to know the attitude of these gentlemen toward the soldiers of this war. I gather from the drift of their inquiries that they do not want the soldiers of the present war to enjoy these facilities although they may be afforded in this institution.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, that is not confined to the soldiers of the present war, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. To whom else?

Mr. WALSH. To others subject to treatment by the Public Health Service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Who are they?

Mr. WALSH. It takes in civilian employees.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman believe they will send any others in preference to soldiers?

Mr. WALSH. If they are not, they should be eliminated from the act there.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They were included in the act. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] raised the question on the floor, and we have simply included all persons whom the Government is absolutely solemnly obligated to provide hospital accommodations for; that is all.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You do not exclude soldiers of the present war?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think veterans of the Civil War ought to be shifted from hospitals to make a place for assistant keepers of the Lighthouse Service, or enlisted men of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, or civilian employees entitled to treatment under the employees' compensation act.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand their rights are not to be interfered with?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman asks in reference to the attitude toward the soldiers of the present war, and I am simply calling his attention that this bill is not confined to soldiers of the present war. Undoubtedly in a few years those receiving benefits under this act, the civilian service of the Government, may outnumber the soldiers of the present war, because they will either have been cured or are taking other treatment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I assume all of us do not want the interests of the veterans of the Civil War to be interfered with in any way, whether by soldiers of the present war or by civilian employees of the Government?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield in order to enable me to ask a question of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALSH. I yield first to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman will yield, I have been taking a good deal of interest in this whole matter for the last two or three weeks because there have been a number of bills affecting this subject introduced and some came upon the floor. What to me appears to be a serious thing is, first, will they under any circumstances interfere with the soldiers of the Civil War who are there now as inmates receiving special treatment which this sanitarium was established to provide?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not the slightest.

Mr. SLOAN. The second proposition is, Will it in any way interfere with or calculate to interfere with the incoming of the other Civil War soldiers who might be provided for there and would need treatment and a retreat there for those who have not yet become members of that home?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to be assured, because I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose. Here we have a great sanatorium built by the Government for the soldiers, and all we knew at that time were Civil War soldiers. Other soldiers coming in are entitled to consideration, but the first claim is to the Civil War soldiers, and whatever surplus space and equipment there, after the soldiers of the Civil War who are in there now, may be used for soldiers of this war, or other persons included in this report, and it goes no further than that. Is that the construction of the conference committee?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the construction, as the gentleman stated it.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This does not give any preferential rights to soldiers of the present war. This bill provides for the care of all persons enumerated in the bill, the employees of the geodetic service, merchant marine, Coast Guard, Engineer Corps, Lighthouse Service, of all the different branches of the service enumerated in the act, and has no reference whatever to preferential right for soldiers of the present war. There will be no prior rights given to soldiers of this war.

Mr. SLOAN. May I ask, Is it a fact that all during the next five years people pressing for treatment are more liable to be soldiers of this war than civilians?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely.

Mr. SLOAN. I am speaking of the general proposition; that they would be looked after rather than civilians.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely. I want to say to the gentleman that we are bound by a solemn act of Congress to take care of the different persons who have been mentioned in the bill, to give them hospital accommodations and treatment; but the gentleman knows and everybody knows that the soldiers of this country, of whatever war it may be, will be given preference in all these hospitals. It has been that way and always will be. We are preparing here just a beginning. No man can tell how much hospital accommodations are going to be required. We have got about 15,000 now asking for treatment. We are trying to take care of those as best we can. The fact of it is there will have to be other accommodations and larger accommodations provided to take care of all those wounded and sick growing out of this war.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Somewhat separate from the line the gentleman is speaking on now. I call the attention of the chairman to section 10 of the report. I would like to ask him in reference to the elimination of employees from the civil service that this service shall be employed without regard to the civil-service law.

What is the significance of that language and what is the purpose of it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It was in the House bill that passed the House and was not in conference at all.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I am familiar with the act that passed the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This provision was in the House bill and passed the House and was not in conference at all.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. But if I mistake not, there are several clauses here found that are over and above what the House measure carried.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think not.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is my amendment. I have not the bill before me.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think not. But the gentleman knows this clause was originally inserted for the purpose of giving a free hand for the erection and construction of these hospitals and the remodeling of hospitals quickly, so as to give these people the benefit of them at the very earliest possible date.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Then the gentleman is sure there is nothing carried over and above what was in the original House bill? My memory was different, but I will take the chairman's word for it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, there are no people in America who are more interested in proper hospital facilities for the soldiers of the present war than the veterans of the Civil War. Naturally it is so, because great numbers of them are their sons and their grandsons, and they feel a deep interest in every facility, and especially hospital facilities, which will be for their benefit.

But there was introduced into the House, and was discussed here on the floor two or three weeks ago, a bill upon this very subject of the Battle Mountain Sanatorium, which provided that these veterans of the Civil War and of the Spanish War were to be removed from this place. Naturally those who were interested in the soldiers of the Civil War feel a desire for assurance at this time that this is not in any way a renewal of that suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not in the slightest, I can say to the gentleman.

Mr. OSBORNE. That is what we want to know.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not in the slightest. I should not favor that myself.

Mr. OSBORNE. We want to know that these men are not to be removed, but that these soldiers of the Civil War of 55 years ago are to be left there in comfort in the homes provided for them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the entire purpose of the act, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. OSBORNE. And that those who need these facilities at the home, as suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], are not cut off?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, no. There is no such intention at all. It is simply to use the vacant space.

Mr. SLOAN. That bill provided that that sanitarium was to be transferred to the War Department, which was very obnoxious and objectionable to the members of that institution.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. There are included in the conference report, under section 7, six or seven subdivisions—Cook County; Dawsonsprings; Norfolk, Va.; and Stapleton, Staten Island—and then an authorization for a site to be selected by the Secretary. When the Dawsonsprings project was before the House, objection was urged to it on the part of a great many Members that the department should present some general scheme which would be adequate to furnish accommodations for all who probably would need hospital treatment and the facilities and equipment incident thereto. Does this measure present the general scheme now of the War Risk Bureau and Public Health Service to take care of what they calculate and estimate to be the number needing treatment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. You mean altogether?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the gentleman knows, there are hospitals at all of these cantonments over the country.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, we have designated in this bill all of the cantonments which we can get. It is hoped, and it is extremely probable, that we will be able to get a large number of hospitals at the cantonments that are now being used for the Army. So, therefore, the committee did not think it was wise to provide for the construction of a large number of new hospitals when we could probably get these other hospitals a little bit later on and with practically no additional cost to the Government. So that the bill at present does not provide all of the hospital accommodations which the Government is likely to need, growing out of this war, but they hope to get them from the other cantonments throughout the country without expending millions of dollars for them.

Mr. WALSH. Does it provide for all the additional construction which it is thought will be necessary outside of possibly altering and enlarging the hospitals at the cantonments?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It provides for all the additional construction which is needed now. It is possible that they may have to build another hospital or two. I do not know. No one knows. We can not possibly tell until they find out just how many patients they are to have and how long they are to require treatment, and so forth.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I might say to the gentleman that the representatives of the Public Health Service and of the War Department and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance were before the committee and set forth that there are a large number of hospitals now being created in the United States, most of them leased, as a matter of fact, and that these are available until such time as it can be determined what the permanent hospital facilities of the Government should be; and until that time only such are asked as are absolutely necessary to provide the accommodations for the decrepit men as the emergency necessitates. Therefore the bill as reported, it seems to me, in its economic features is fully safeguarded, because it is utterly impossible to ascertain at this time just how much of facilities we are going to need.

Mr. WALSH. If we keep soldiers in Russia and in Germany for the next five years, it will take us 50 years to catch up with hospital accommodations.

Mr. BARNHART. That is what I am saying to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. My inquiry was to know if this is in any way the general scheme of the two departments to provide the hospital facilities which they estimate will be required; that is, by additional construction and by transfer of cantonment hospitals to the jurisdiction of the War Risk Bureau and Public Health Service?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This is what they agree upon as being needed now: Both departments hope, and those that had the matter in charge hope, that it will not be necessary to build other hospitals. But, of course, we can not tell. It is utterly impossible, as the gentleman knows, for us to tell at this time whether it may be necessary to build another hospital or not.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Well, will the gentleman state what is to prevent the taking over of these hospitals at the cantonments in this country?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They are needed by the Army. The Army is using them.

Mr. WALSH. Six hundred thousand men are being detained at these cantonments now, men who want to be discharged. If they were discharged the hospitals would be available, would they not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether they would be or not. They are holding them because the War Department says they need them.

Mr. WALSH. They are holding the men?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They are holding the hospitals, because they say they need them. Now, we have got to trust somebody. Somebody has got to say whether they are needed or not, and I know of no better authority than the War Department, which has this matter in charge. They say they have turned over to us all which they possibly can deliver at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Later on they will be willing to turn them over as they can dispense with them, and then we shall be able to tell whether it will be necessary to authorize the construction of any further hospitals.

Mr. WALSH. I trust that the gentleman from Florida will do me the honor to agree with me that as long as we keep the men at the cantonments and do not discharge them they will need hospital facilities at the cantonments for those men who are not being discharged.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to know whether this discussion is going on in response to questions that gentlemen are propounding under the reservation of a right to object, because if an hour is permitted to be used in this way it can not be allotted to gentlemen desiring to speak. I want to know if this is in response to questions pending the reservation of a point of order, and whether it is to be included in the hour given for debate, if an hour is decided on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this talk for the last half hour has been on a point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] threatens to make or reserves the right to make. It would not be taken out of the hour.

Mr. WALSH. It will not be taken out of the hour, I trust, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. No; it will not.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for the gentleman from Massachusetts either to make or to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. DYER. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Florida shall have the time necessary to discuss the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The truth is that the discussion has drifted in a general confabulation about this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I think the House has the right to know something about the bill if it wants to.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the reservation of the right to object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report. I move the previous question.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reservation of the point of order was not expected to stop discussion on this report. There was no discussion on the Chicago hospital item.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It the gentleman will be patient, we can reach some conclusion as to the disposal of time.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Florida think it necessary for the gentleman from Wisconsin to keep still in order to reach a sensible conclusion? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Sometimes it is necessary to speak plainly about these matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida has 20 minutes left.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURNETT. That was the parliamentary inquiry that I made.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does any other gentleman desire time?

Mr. AUSTIN. I may want five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want five minutes. I may not use it all.

Mr. MANN. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I want to arrange about the time.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that I will want any time if the gentleman will make a statement.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the subject I wish to inquire about is one that I do not have sufficient information about to enable me to discuss it intelligently, but it is a matter upon which I would like to have some knowledge before I vote either for or against this bill. It is a matter that I think should be explained in fairness to the parties in interest and to the Government.

I am told that there has been maintained here in Washington during the past few weeks one of the most expensive lobbies that was ever maintained in Washington for one of the items in this bill. I have some doubt as to the correctness of this report, and have been unable to verify it. Personally I do not know how correct it is. It may have no foundation at all. I understand that that information has come to the committee. If I am mistaken, I want to be corrected. The lobby, as I understand it, is to have a proposition accepted to give a hospital to the Government. Some one in Chicago, I understand, either wants to present to the Government a hospital that he has contracted for, that is to cost some millions of dollars, and the Government is to pay for it and take a contract for its construction off his hands. From the language of the report there seems to be some contract connected with it, and if I am correctly informed, after the Government has used the hospital for the treatment of returning soldiers, this man is to take it back for a certain percentage—about 40 per cent, I am told—of what the Government pays for it, and then this man agrees to give it to the city of Chicago as a memorial to his son who lost his life in France. I do not know the extent to which the Government is bound by such contract. I am told that an expensive lobby is being maintained here in Washington in the interest of that proposition, and I think Congress ought to know all the facts in regard to it if that is true.

It is barely possible that if all the facts were known no objection would be made to it; that an explanation will fully justify the Government in the transaction as well as the donor. And it is due to both that all the facts be made public. I submit that so far as I can read the facts in this report they are not fully disclosed. They should be in view of the rumors referred to. I may be misinformed. I hope I have been, for I do not want to do anybody an injustice, but before this bill passes the full facts should be disclosed.

Unless the whole transaction is fully explained, we may be doing something that on full disclosure of the facts we would not do. Before we pass this bill we should know not only our rights but our obligations under the legislation proposed. We ought to know what the facts are.

If somebody wants to make a donation to the city of Chicago or to the Government, he ought to be permitted to do it, but no man ought to be permitted to reach his hands into the Treasury of the United States and take from there the cost of a building and with it erect a monument to his family. Men ought to erect monuments to their families out of their own pockets and not out of the proceeds of the United States Treasury. I would like to know from the gentleman from Florida or some one who knows all about it what the facts are.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit me to answer that, I will try to do it.

Mr. GOOD. And I will say that when this information is fully given I may not have any objection whatever, and other Members may not have any objection; but I do think that when we are considering a matter that involves $3,000,000 all the facts ought to be laid before us, so that we may know just what we are doing, and especially is this true in a case where there is some contracts to be executed in the future.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in any lobby, and I know nothing about the matters stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]; but I have taken pains to investigate the hospital facilities being afforded to the vicinity of Chicago. I have done this because of the large number of soldiers sent to the front from the State of Illinois. Our State sent something like 300,000 men to the front or to the camps, and necessarily we have a great many wounded men coming back. The people of our State were anxious to have facilities for the care of these men as near home as possible. I think the War Department, through the Surgeon General's office, investigated the question about which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has spoken, and the report made by the Surgeon General's office was to the effect that such an institution as the one referred to by him should be established. The building erected on the ground referred to is 2,040 feet long, four stories high, and of the best permanent construction that it is possible to make. The building itself cost, I should judge, something in the neighborhood of $1,500,000. It is a permanent structure of the best type, built under the direction of the Surgeon General. I understand there was no formal contract entered into between the parties who erected the building and the Government; that the contract had been prepared but not signed. In addition to the building there are 320 acres of ground. It is located substantially in the heart of the city of Chicago. It is surrounded by a great fence that makes it a private institution, so to speak. The land is worth at least $1,000 an acre, in my judgment, and will continue to grow in value as time goes by. If there ever was an ideal spot for the care of men who are to be rehabilitated, this is the spot.

Now, the interest that I took in it was this: They were building temporary wooden structures at Fort Sheridan for the care of our soldiers. Fort Sheridan is 37 miles away from Chicago, the structures are temporary in character, built of wood, regular fire traps, and I did not like to think of our soldiers being put in those fire traps. Besides, if the father and mother of a soldier who was being treated at Fort Sheridan wished to see him, it would take them a whole day to go and come and cost them about $2 apiece for railroad fare, whereas they could go to this place in Chicago in two hours, there and back, at a cost of 10 cents apiece.

Now, there ought to be some consideration given to both sides of the question. First, this building in Chicago is permanent. I had an idea once that what we ought to do would be to have our State build a permanent structure; that is, to pay the difference between the cost of a temporary structure and a permanent structure. It was proposed to the War Department with the idea that our State take it over at the end of the war; but the Government of the United States, through the War Department, would not listen to that proposition. The cost of this Chicago building to the Government, if you base it on the number of beds, will be less per bed at the price proposed in the bill than the cost of the temporary wooden fire traps that they are building at Fort Sheridan, and the Chicago building is permanent and fireproof. I say the cost will be less per bed. I mean what I say. I have gone into it as a builder. I have looked into the cost from the practical knowledge I have. I have no interest in the question of whether the individuals connected with this have a contract or make the sale. I do not care whether you adopt this or not, but knowing this matter was coming up for consideration, I thought I ought to know something about it, and I went out and looked at the building. I went into it and over it and examined its construction in every detail. I have been in the building business all my life, in a large way, and pretend to know something about it. I give you my word that I never saw a better piece of construction. It is specially designed under the direction of the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. BURNETT. Of the War Department?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the War Department and the Surgeon General's office combined. It was specially designed by them and constructed under their direction, although there is no contract and has been none, though everybody connected with it thought there was, as I understand it. I do not care what you do with it. It makes no difference to me. My only interest in examining it was to see whether it was a suitable structure. I say we ought to have permanent, fireproof construction for the men who are to come under our care as the result of injury. I say they ought not to be put into fire traps made of wood, costing more than the fireproof hospital.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has not answered my question yet.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question, I should like to have a minute.

Mr. GOOD. What is the proposition? After the Government acquires this, is it to be transferred to some other control?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will answer that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry? I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, what the program is, if any, to-day with reference to this matter or any other matters that are coming up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not inform the gentleman what is coming up.

Mr. DYER. Is there anyone here who knows whether there is anything else coming up after this conference report? I make the inquiry so that we can get a quorum here, if we are going to discuss important matters.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think we have two or three conference reports.

Mr. DYER. I should like to know if any other bills are going to be brought up to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] was recognized to submit a parliamentary inquiry. His inquiry was not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Pending that I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman can not do that when the gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. DYER. I can make the point at any time, but I will withdraw it until the gentleman from Tennessee finishes his remarks, with the understanding that I will renew it, unless I can get some information as to what is to be the program for to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will go to those who know, he can find out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I signed with my colleagues the conference report now being considered by the House. I did not do it until I had made a thorough investigation of the hearings in the Senate which lasted about a month. I not only read the hearings with an open mind, but discussed with the members of the subcommittee of the Senate all the rumors referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], one of whom was for many years an honored Member of this House, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Then I talked privately with the Members of this House representing the city of Chicago. In my judgment, the best proposition carried in the pending bill is the Chicago hospital, looking to the best interests of the Government and the welfare of the soldiers and sailors.

I do not know Edward Hines, of Chicago; never saw him; would not know him if I were to meet him, and no one has approached me on the subject of the Government taking over his hospital. I understand he retained an attorney to appear before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, a former Member of Congress from New York, Hon. William S. Bennet.

The necessity of an attorney, in my opinion, after reading the Senate hearings, was on account of a controversy Mr. Hines's partner had with a Chicago real estate man, who became connected with the Government. There was a dispute as to an offer submitted to this partner by the real estate agent that he would use his influence with the War Department officials, for $100,000 commission, to put over the proposition.

When Mr. Hines heard of this unlawful offer he sent for his Chicago attorney and later came to Washington City and reported the entire matter to the Secretary of War. He said not one cent should be paid in the way of a commission; absolutely repudiated and denounced it, and his conduct, according to the sworn testimony, from the beginning to the end is to his credit. These false rumors about a paid lobby in Washington were put in circulation by Mr. Hines's malicious enemies, and I can assure the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that there is absolutely no foundation for them.

According to the statement made by reputable leading citizens of Chicago Mr. Hines is a man of the highest standing and justly entitled to the confidence and respect of the public. He gave a son to the Army who lost his life in France. He subscribed $2,000,000 to the liberty loans. He has already expended over $750,000 on the construction of this hospital on land he owns. He did it after his representative came to Washington and submitted the proposition to the officials of the War Department. They made a personal investigation and they directed Mr. Hines's agent to go forward and the contract would be signed by the Secretary of War. Time was essential because the ships were returning with maimed and wounded soldiers.

The official report approving and recommending the construction of this hospital is signed by two majors, one lieutenant colonel, two major generals, and one brigadier general representing the Inspector General's office, the Surgeon General's Bureau, the construction department, and the Judge Advocate General's office, all of whom made an examination of the property, and so forth.

This hospital now is within five weeks of completion, at a cost per bed less than any other hospital provided for by Congress, except in the Corpus Christi, Tex., case. Not one cent of profit does it carry for Mr. Hines.

The hospital architects of the War Department drew the plans and prepared the specifications, and 800 men were put to work within a few days, and all materials assembled for a fireproof building. When completed it will be the greatest hospital in America, if not the greatest, most modern in the world.

Then these rumors with reference to an alleged bribe came up, and the Secretary, or one of his subordinates, hesitated or declined to sign the contract, either for that reason or because the Secretary believed under the law he could not erect a permanent hospital. Mr. Hines in good faith accepted the statement of the subordinate of the War Department and prosecuted the work to the extent of spending over three-quarters of a million dollars on it.

He makes this proposition, that if the Government desires him to complete the proposition he will finish it; the Government can use it for eight years, and then he will take it back, pay to the Government 40 per cent of the original cost and present the hospital to the city of Chicago as a fitting memorial to his gallant, patriotic son, who freely gave his life to the Republic he loved so well.

Now, I challenge the statement from the sworn record that there is an expensive paid lobby in Washington City to put this proposition over, for none of my colleagues in this House upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have ever been talked to or approached on the subject. The three Members of the Senate who sat with us on the conference committee assured us that they had no evidence of it, and they carried on an exhaustive investigation, lasting four weeks. No lobby was needed to secure favorable action on this meritorious offer. It appeals to the common sense, the sound judgment, and the patriotism of every Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, there is no selfish, sordid personal motive in this generous, noble, patriotic proposition of Mr. Hines. I do not know a parallel case in America, as far as the interests of the soldiers and sailors are concerned, where any public-spirited citizen has done what he is doing and has offered to do in this case. I stand here a perfect stranger to him, and I say it is unkind, in view of what he has done, to have it stated that he is trying to put over something that is improper, unmanly, unjust, or unfair. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to devote my time either to the defense or the condemnation of any project. I want to say this, however, in regard to the Chicago proposition: The statement the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has just made, that the hospital is almost now completed, does address itself to my favorable consideration. I know nothing about the facts of the case; I have seen the pictures that my colleagues from Illinois, Judge SABATH and Mr. MCANDREWS, have shown me. It is an immense building, an economically constructed building, in my judgment, and I know nothing shady about it. My friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] did not state that there was any lobby. The gentleman was perfectly fair, and he asked a legitimate question, because rumor had been going around and the gentleman had a right to ask the question and to know the facts.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say that I know absolutely nothing about it except a rumor, but there was a rumor in regard to it. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Did I understand the gentleman to say that the building was commenced under some agreement originally with the War Department or the Surgeon General for the building of a Government hospital there?

Mr. BURNETT. That is my understanding. I want to say that my objection to this report is that we were not given enough information. This information ought to have been conveyed to Members of the House, and should have been given to the House committee. I refused to sign this report until yesterday, because when the Dawson Springs proposition came up and a fight was made against singling out any locality, the House itself expressed its desire not to single out any proposition, but to make a lump-sum appropriation for hospitals to be located by a commission and constructed by the Treasury Department.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Just for a question.

Mr. HUSTED. In view of the fact that it has been stated here that there was no contract with the Government, formal or informal, how does it happen that this building was constructed under the plans and specifications prepared by the Surgeon General's office or by the War Department?

Mr. BURNETT. I think I made myself clear when I stated that I do not know about those things, and that is the main objection that I have to this report. I have signed the report, and I have signed it because I regard it as an emergency matter. I stated in reply to the query of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] a few days ago, when attention was called to the fact that the Senate had gone into specifications and had named this place and that place, that I did not like it, and he asked if I would oppose it, and I said that I would, but that I would not oppose it to the extent of jeopardizing the bill. I have done just that. I agreed to the report in respect to the Dawson Springs proposition some weeks ago, because we had before us day after day representatives from the Bureau of Public Health, and I thought we had information as to its desirability, availability, and immediate necessity. But when the House by its action overruled that view I felt I was instructed virtually to stand for a comprehensive scheme, and I did not believe that the Treasury Department ought to put on you and me the duty of selecting any place, be it good or bad. That was my position.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know much about this. The Dawson Springs proposition is in this report?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. When is that to be completed, when can it be had, if the report should be adopted?

Mr. BURNETT. It will take a good while——

Mr. CANNON. One, two or three years?

Mr. BURNETT. Perhaps a year. My recollection is that the hearings show that it can be completed within a year; but I am not sure about that.

Mr. CANNON. It is still at an estimated cost of $3,000 a bed?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know about that.

Mr. CANNON. I recollect that on a former occasion, when it stood alone, it was stated that it would cost $3,000 a bed.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. When is this Chicago hospital to be available?

Mr. BURNETT. They tell me that within six weeks it can be completed, and there is the strength of that proposition, regardless of whether there is a lobby here or not.

Mr. CANNON. I think some one told me who professed to know that it will cost the Government for the Chicago proposition in six weeks $1,000 a bed. It that correct?

Mr. BURNETT. I think so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. One thousand three hundred dollars a bed. It is much less than any other we have anyway.

Mr. CANNON. Whether it is $1,300 or $3,000, if any of them are necessary, and this information is reliable—and I do not know a thing about it—I suggest that this is the best one of the lot for the cost to the Government. While I live in Illinois and have lived there for many years, I have never had any particular love for Chicago. Chicago had less than 100,000 people, however, in 1860, and to-day it has two millions and a half, and we can not stop its growing and the necessity for hospitals.

Mr. BURNETT. I am not here to either defend or condemn. The Speedway proposition is one that has been assailed. I stand right where I stood when I asked that this bill be referred to conference. I believe that the Treasury Department, through its Bureau of Health, ought itself to determine these questions, and it aroused my suspicion that something was wrong somewhere when neither the War Department nor the Treasury Department nor anyone else wanted to assume the responsibility, but wanted us to assume it without knowing anything about it. They have technical experts to look to the matter much better than we had, in view of the fact that we had never had a witness before us in the House committee on these propositions. I have stated what I have believed to be the virtue of this Chicago proposition. If the Senate bill had been called to our attention 10 days ago, I should have insisted that it be brought back to this House, and that we be instructed upon the question of specific designations. The objection of the Senators to our bill was that it carried a lump sum of ten million dollars and over. I said to the Senate conferee who made that objection, "Are you not voting for lump-sum appropriations every day, and in this very conference report is there not another lump-sum appropriation of one million and a half dollars?" It is only because I regard it as in imperious necessity that something should be done now that I on yesterday reluctantly signed the report, and if gentlemen will do me the honor of reading the additional statement made by the chairman of the committee and myself they will see exactly my attitude in regard to the matter.

I want to say one other thing. You will notice there is a provision in the bill which makes it much better than it was as it passed the Senate. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered by the conference report to determine whether some other places are not better than these, and if so to adopt them. My idea was to put it squarely up to them to determine, in the first instance, which were the best, and if these are not the best then to select some others.

That was my insistance. I hope this bill will pass, because there are some places that we can get in the next few weeks. Another thing I regard as helpful in this is the fact that we are taking over several of the camp hospitals which the Government already owns. Some gentleman, not in an unkindly way, has referred to the fact that most of these are located in the South. It is simply because the War Department has said that they were the only ones they could give up now. When the representatives of the War Department and the Treasury Department were before the House committee on this bill it was stated that the War Department at that time had only two, I believe, that they could give up to the Treasury Department for the purpose of the construction of these hospitals. Now they come up and give these and say that as time progresses and as the soldiers are demobilized they hope to be able to yield others.

I felt it due to myself on account of the answer that I made to the question of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that I should state that my attitude has not changed. I believe that we ought to have better faciliies, and I expressed, when the bill was before the House, a very high confidence in the Bureau of Health and, I am sorry to say, that the Bureau of Health has not confirmed that confidence by its action in regard to this matter. We ought to have had full information about these matters before the House committee, and, but for the fact that human lives may be at stake, that men may die for the lack of early treatment that can not now be afforded, I would never have signed this report.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time does the gentleman from Wyoming desire?

Mr. MONDELL. I suggested I would like to have five minutes, but if the gentleman from Illinois desires some time I will yield for him to make a statement.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois want?

Mr. MASON. I would like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in that time, of course, I can not discuss the hospital. The report makes it perfectly apparent that it is right and best for the Government. I rise now to speak in these two minutes for the young man in whose memory some time it is hoped that this hospital may be dedicated. He did not have to go to war. He had all the opportunities in life to keep out. He gave himself a voluntary sacrifice. He fought with your son and mine. The most bitter, cruel, indecent thing that can be done, now that a generous father seeks to give, at the expense of possibly a million dollars, a monument for the benefit of those who are sick and in trouble, and claims only the poor boon of having the name of his son given to it, is the mere suggestion of selfishness in the gift, and it is so absolutely puerile and small and wicked that I rise to protest against it in the name of the brave young man who gave his life for your country and mine. There is not a dollar of corruption. There has been no lobby. He has had an attorney, I am told, to defend his own good name. There have been women here—in a lobby you call it? It was a lobby of the mothers of the city of Chicago, who did not want their boys housed in the cheap fire traps up there that the Government was prepared to build. Their lobby was in the interest of your son and mine who come home crippled and wounded. I never saw them but two or three times, and they had a right to come here. You may call them a lobby if you like, but they came here not to lobby for a building to be dedicated to the memory of this brave young man, Hines, but they came here protesting against the use of the fire traps at Fort Sheridan and elsewhere to be used by our boys who come back sick and crippled. They came here to plead that the Government would have sense enough to turn aside from the scandal mongers and blackmailers who tried to prevent a generous man from being generous, from doing something in the interest of his own city and country and at the same time in honor of his own son, one of the bravest boys who crossed the water under your flag and mine. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak upon this matter at all and do not profess to have any great knowledge of it, but necessarily have some from reading the Chicago papers. Mr. Hines in December talked with me about the proposition which he then had in the War Department. If there is a lobby here I do not know anything about it. No one has been to see me since or lately. This is the situation: Mr. Hines's son was in the Army in Europe. He was taken to a hospital supposed to be very seriously ill. Mr. Hines's applied for permission to go abroad to see him; could not get a passport, and the boy died. Of course, the circumstances were distressing. Mr. Hines was willing to charter a vessel to take him abroad if one could be obtained. His wife and he were deeply affected by this blow. Mr. Hines conceived the idea of aiding the Government by constructing a fireproof hospital to be used as the Government might use a temporary wooden-constructed hospital. The War Department was constructing a good many temporary hospitals, wooden structures, throughout the country; among others, some at Fort Sheridan. Mr. Hines proposed to the War Department that he be permitted to construct a fireproof hospital which the Government might use temporarily, and at the end of the time the Government saw proper to use it that he might have it back on the basis of the wrecking value of a temporary hospital. So that the Government would recover just as much from the hospital as it would recover from the wrecking of a wooden, nonfireproof hospital. That arrangement was approved by the Surgeon General's office in the War Department, and by the Quartermaster's Department, by all officias of the War Department dealing with the matter. Contracts were drawn up. Mr. Hines, before they were drawn, however, was directed to go to Chicago and commence the construction of the hospital, which he did. The War Department officials superintended and supervised its construction. The contracts were prepared, signed, or initialed by all of the War Department officials who would have to deal with this matter. This was with the knowledge of the Secretary of War, as I am led to believe, and was approved by him.

But meanwhile Secretary Baker had gone abroad. The Assistant Secretary of War declined to sign the contract. Mr. Hines came to me at that time and asked me what my advice would be. I advised him to see the Secretary of War and have the matter gone over again and have a commission appointed of the War Department, if he could, or ask for one, to report to the Secretary of War. I do not think it was because of this advice of mine, but the Secretary of War appointed a commission to investigate this hospital, and they, unfortunately, probably, recommended that the Government take the hospital as a permanent one. That probably prevented the original contracts from being signed, because the Secretary of War, while he had the authority to provide for the construction of temporary hospitals for the Army, did not feel that he had the authority to provide for a permanent hospital for the Army. And I think he was right in that respect. The matter was gone into by one of the Senate committees and an investigation was made that was quite thorough, and they are the ones who reported in favor of this item.

Now, I do not profess to know much about what the Army ought to do about the hospitals. I do not know just what the arrangement is now in the War Department to which reference is made here, though I expect it is similar to what I have stated. But if this is accepted, the Government gets what I am led to believe is the most perfectly constructed hospital in the world to-day. No expense was spared in making this a perfect hospital, with all the appointments of such an institution, and of fireproof construction. I know from what Mr. Hines said to me when he called upon me that his ambition was in the end, because of peculiar conditions relating to the death of his son, to get back this hospital at its wrecking value and donating it to the public.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman submit to a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Government is not compelled to turn it back if it does not want to do so.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the arrangement is.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My understanding is that it is not.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the arrangement is. I can not say, as I am not informed. If the Government keeps it, it gets the hospital at a much less cost than it can construct a hospital, I am told by gentlemen on the floor and elsewhere. I am not posted about that. Even if it does not desire to keep the hospital in the end, I doubt very much whether it will unload the hospital now upon a basis which would secure to the Government the best hospital facilities in the world temporarily, with no loss to the Government by the construction of a temporary hospital.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Illinois use all of his time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, when I rose to make inquiry with regard to this item a few minutes ago it was not to cast any reflection upon anyone. I stated at the outset that I knew nothing about the matter. I had gone to some of the members of the committee and they told me they were not satisfied with the hearings they had, and that there were some things about which they wished they knew more. From some of the members of the committee I also learned they had heard the charge of the existence of the lobby. I only rose to see if we could get some information on the subject. I know that Mr. Hines is a man of high character and great business ability. I realize the fact that a great grief has come to him. I do not want to be placed in the position of criticizing him, or preventing any man who has made the sacrifice that he has made to erect a monument to a son that he gave in this great war. My only reason for raising the question was to find out the facts. I now understand before the armistice was signed, while the war was on, Mr. Hines had entered into a contract that was not completed with the Surgeon General for the building of this hospital.

Now, I think there should be no discrimination between a contract of that kind and a contract that was entered into for the production of war materials and that was not completed; that this contract should be validated if it is as these gentlemen explain it, as other contracts are to be validated under a recent act of Congress. And, as I understand from gentlemen, this contract provides that Mr. Hines may, if the Government desires, take the building over at its wrecking value, but if the Government desires to retain it for all time as a Government hospital it has reserved to itself the right to do that. Now, if that is the fact, and if it is also a fact that we are having here constructed a fireproof hospital, one of the most modern in the world, at a cost to the Government less than the cost of a temporary structure, I think the Government has struck a good bargain, and that the Nation owes Mr. Hines an additional debt of gratitude. It would not have been fair either to Mr. Hines or the Government to have allowed this bill to pass without a full explanation of this item. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER], a member of the committee.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker and members of the committee, this is the conference report on the bill on which I had written a minority report opposing its passage and pointed out in that report the objectionable features. The report shows that all of the old bill has been stricken out after the enacting clause and the bill has been rewritten, and in this conference report the objectionable features, the points and features to which we seriously objected and covered in our report, have been eliminated. As I stated on the floor of the House it is most unfortunate that the various departments of the Government while all are under the same administration, yet they do not work in harmony with each other, and as a result the country is put to unnecessary expense and the soldiers for whom we all express such deep affection must suffer correspondingly. At the hearings held by the committee the testimony showed clearly that the War Department had not only a large number of vacant beds in the hospitals, but entire hospitals that they did not need, yet those in charge of the Public Health Service, which takes care of the patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, insisted upon building a large number of new hospitals—14, I think—and did not seem to desire to use the War Department hospital capacity and equipment available. In the report now before us the bill is rewritten and has been changed, and now provides that these surplus hospitals and equipment shall be used, and because of this change it will be noticed that a saving is being effected to the Government running into the millions of dollars. We want plenty of hospital capacity and equipment; but what to my mind, Mr. Speaker, is even more important is that the hospitals shall be managed in such a manner as to give the greatest possible comfort and benefit to our crippled, wounded, and sick soldiers.

Our soldiers should be given better treatment. It will do no good to build hospitals and furnish equipment if the service is not rendered to our soldiers by the management of these hospitals.

My desk is being flooded constantly with complaints against the management of these hospitals.

I had in my office a week ago a captain who was leading his command in the great drive at Chateau-Thierry and was hit by mustard gas and was cut off with two of his lieutenants and a few men for over 24 hours, but was finally brought to a first-aid hospital, who declared to me that he lay for days in a hospital abroad without receiving proper attention, but said he has no complaint to make. He says the doctors and nurses did all they could; the wounded and crippled were brought in by the hundreds, and it was physically impossible for the doctors or nurses to give the treatment required, even though they were working day and night in an effort to do so. He was returned to this country in one of the first ships bringing back wounded soldiers, and he had hoped that when he landed here in the United States hospital he would receive proper attention, but was sadly disappointed. He says that he lay for four days without a doctor even looking at or opening his bandaged leg. One afternoon he called a doctor and pleaded with him to dress his wounds, but the doctor pulled out his watch and said, "It is 4 o'clock, and I am going off duty now." He finally received treatment several days later. Others, wounded and suffering agony every minute, were given no attention for 10 or 11 days. He became so enraged at the lack of attention given his wounded and suffering companions that he, even at the risk of being court-martialed and punished, decided to call and did call up the Surgeon General's department here in Washington and insisted that an investigation of the management of that hospital be made and the treatment given the soldiers should be looked into. An investigation was made, which resulted in somewhat changed conditions, but it also resulted in direct and indirect punishment for the captain. However, the captain said to me, "I was willing to suffer anything so that others who were lying for weeks without care or attention might receive proper medical attention thereafter."

It is not only necessary that we should supply hospitals for the boys; but, gentlemen, we ought to insist upon it that the management of those hospitals be conducted in a humane manner and that the men should receive proper attention. I do not want to take up the time of the House, but if I knew what to do in order to secure more efficiency and more humane treatment for the boys in the hospitals I would be glad to do it. I do not know whether it could be accomplished by a resolution or otherwise. I do not know whether a resolution would have any effect at all. But I want it clearly understood that the treatment of our soldiers in the hospitals as well as the treatment of our soldiers in the cantonments and the treatment of our soldiers overseas now that the war is over, ought to be placed on a more humane basis, because, gentlemen, I take it, that when you and I voted for that bill which authorized the Government of the United States to take the boy out of his home, away from his family, away from his father and mother, and away from his occupation, we voted for that because we felt that the country was in danger and that the soldier should go out and defend our country, and we did not vote to take the boy out to be abused, to be treated as no citizen of the United States, or no human being should be treated. [Applause.]

Something should be done that would convince the military authorities that the private soldier has rights that must be fully respected. While I am fully aware that discipline must be maintained, and have not one word to say against the maintenance of proper discipline, and am glad to say that I know that there are a great many officers in the Army who are doing their full duty, are doing everything they can to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded and everything they can to ameliorate the hardships of the private soldier, yet there are just enough underlings in our armies of a kind calculated to cause endless mischief—men who have subordinate commissions, who never before in their lives had any authority over anything or anybody, but are now in a position where men must obey their orders, unreasonable as they may be. These men delight in showing their authority and have not yet learned that the first duty of an officer is to look after the comfort of the men under their command. Such officers should be drummed out of the Army and court-martialed; we should in some manner be able to reach those men. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the camps and cantonments that we propose to turn over under this bill to the Public Health Service, together with the Battle Mountain Sanatorium General Hospital No. 15, and a splendid hospital at Chicago, nearly finished, there are three new projects in the bill, one the Dawson Springs project, about which the House has had some information, a hospital project at Norfolk, and one in the District of Columbia. As I understand it, those are entirely new projects not yet undertaken or contracted for.

As far as I am informed, the location has not yet been determined upon, or the character of the structure. Will the chairman of the committee be good enough to inform us what the controlling reasons were that led to the determination on the part of the committee to provide for those two hospitals? There is at Hampton, Va., now a hospital connected with the soldiers' home, near Norfolk, that is being utilized for the purposes for which these hospitals are to be used, and I wondered what the situation was that necessitated a new institution of this kind near Norfolk rather than elsewhere in the country.

Mr. GRIFFIN. As to the hospital indicated, it is not at Norfolk, but at Hampton.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there a hospital that is to be taken over? Is that what the proposition is?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No. The project at Norfolk, Va., is an absolutely new one, and that item was injected into the bill in the Senate. The Senate committee held hearings and adopted the recommendations of the Treasury Department, the War

Risk Insurance Bureau, and the Public Health Service—that in view of the fact that Norfolk was a very great port, the second in size as to shipping and business in the entire United States, it was very essential that they should have some facilities there contiguous to the point of debarkation for the accommodation of the returning soldiers, and also for the use of the merchant marine and the other features.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I presume it will be well to have a hospital at Norfolk. What was running through my mind was how it happened that Norfolk was selected among all the various places where hospitals might properly be established—selected as the one place to be specified by the committee.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No, Mr. Speaker; I can not yield further. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what the argument was in favor of the establishment of a new hospital in Washington? We already have a very considerable Army hospital here in the Walter Reed Hospital, and various other hospitals. Washington is not particularly centrally located with regard to the homes of returning soldiers. Why should there be a new hospital under the Public Health Service in Washington? Will the gentleman from Florida, who is chairman of the committee, be good enough to answer my inquiry?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I was asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] to do it because the gentleman from New York really had more to do with the drafting of this bill than anybody else. But if the gentleman wants me to say anything about it, I will say that the Walter Reed Hospital is entirely under the War Department, as the gentleman knows, and they have not any room there that would enable them to take care of these discharged soldiers and sailors who come under the Public Health Service, and the Public Health Service thought they ought to have—and so convinced the Senate—a hospital at the Capital of the Nation to take care of discharged soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MONDELL. I take it for granted that soldiers are generally not discharged from the Army hospitals until cured, if curable, and that after soldiers are discharged from the Army and Navy hospitals who are permanently injured or crippled they will be taken in charge by the Vocational Rehabilitation Service and cared for. Is this Washington hospital to be conducted in connection with the project for the vocational rehabilitation of soldiers, their vocational training, and so forth, or is this a plan of the Public Health Service—a plan they have long had in mind—to secure a large hospital here under their jurisdiction?

Mr. BURNETT. I want to say to the gentleman that I hope the vocational rehabilitation crowd will not get hold of it, because I am afraid it would be absorbed in salaries and not much of it would ever reach the soldiers. Under the pretext of aiding in the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, it was shown last week in the debate that this patriotic board has 344 employees, all receiving good salaries, and only had 157 soldiers in its charge—more than 2 men for every soldier. It was further shown that 1 of these patriot teachers was receiving $10,000 a year, 1, $7,000; 20, $4,000; 28, $3,500; 62, more than $3,000; and 49, from $2,500 to $3,000. May the good Lord deliver us from such cormorants.

Mr. MONDELL. So the gentleman thinks it may be well, if this be a plan of the Public Health Service, to get a central institution here in Washington?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is my idea about it.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, about six months ago a report reached me that the Government was about to take over a certain piece of property known as the Speedway tract in Chicago at a very high price. I thought it was my duty to call the attention of the Secretary of War to that report, and therefore sent him a letter of inquiry as to the truth of the report, and learned that this tract was to be utilized by the Government for hospital purposes, and that a tremendous structure was being built on the property.

When the charges against the frame-constructed hospital at Fort Sheridan were made, I determined to look into those accusations and learn if the conditions as described were true. As a result of an inspection which I made of the structures on the occasion of a visit to Chicago shortly thereafter, I disagree with the gentlemen who have branded them as cheap frame fire traps. True, they are of wooden construction, and therefore can not be classed with the hospital erected on the Speedway tract, but I do not regard them as fire traps or shacks. On the other hand, I found that the Speedway hospital is a tremendous fireproof structure, well constructed and located. I also endeavored to secure the relative cost of the two projects, in view of the charges as to the excessive price, and learned that the fireproof-constructed hospital at the Speedway had been contracted for at a smaller cost to the Government than any other in the United States and for a little more than the frame-constructed hospitals at Fort Sheridan.

Upon returning to Washington I received information from the department that the construction of the Speedway hospital had been approved and sanctioned by one of the bureaus of the department. As the structure was nearing completion, an order was issued by the Assistant Secretary of War to stop further work on the project, and immediately many insinuations were made as to the reasons for such order.

These charges, however, have been thoroughly investigated by a commission of the War Department and also by a Senate committee, which finally recommended unanimously the acquisition of this building for a War Risk Insurance Bureau hospital. Therefore, I feel satisfied that the department, as well as the committee which investigated the matter, came to the conclusion that the price and all conditions were satisfactory and, in view of the false report made to me about this project, I feel that they were made also to others, and that therefore an underlying motive in these charges and accusations were deliberately intended to prevent the acquiring of the property. Lest I forget, I also wish to state that the only reason given me upon my investigation why the work was stopped was that the armistice being signed the War Department would not have any use for this building, but being informed that there was a liability on the part of the Government for work already done I felt that the structure should be utilized not as a temporary hospital, but as a permanent one that could be utilized for reconstruction work and later on as a permanent sanatorium or home for the boys who have so gallantly and bravely fought for our country.

This hospital is located only about 11 or 12 miles from the heart of the city and can be reached within 30 or 40 minutes from the most thickly populated sections of our city and from those localities which gave the largest number of its boys to the Nation. It lies in a westerly direction of Chicago which is populated by Czecho-Slovaks, Polish, Jewish, and Irish peoples who volunteered in greater numbers than in any other section of Chicago. It is for that reason that we in and around Chicago should have such an institution which will enable the Nation to properly take care of those that the Government can aid in case of disability.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when the war-risk insurance act was passed in October, 1917, it contained the provision that discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines should be given hospital attention, and in addition to that be furnished with the necessary appliances, such as artificial limbs, crutches, and other appurtenances necessary in order to rehabilitate them. That is contained in section 300, paragraph 3 of the act. It places upon the War Risk Insurance Bureau the duty of caring for the discharged soldiers and sailors. As the War Risk Insurance Bureau is a part of the Treasury Department, the duty was incumbent upon the Treasury Department to provide the hospital facilities. There was a predicament. There were 190,000 men wounded on the other side, and soldiers sick in camps, soldiers being discharged from day to day, and it became a serious question with the various bureaus of the Government having to do with this matter how they should provide for the care of these soldiers.

The War Department took care of them while they were soldiers, but the moment that they were discharged the War Department had no authority to treat them in its hospitals. Furthermore, the War Department had only four general hospitals. They had encampments with infirmaries primarily intended for the treatment of the soldiers occupying the encampments; but there was no organization, no body with any facilities whatever in the United States to handle this absolutely new proposition. In that predicament the Treasury Department framed a bill, sent it to the Speaker of this House, requesting that the bill be passed, and for what? Primarily to look after the soldiers and sailors. The first bill is entitled "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers and sailors." We amended the bill so as to include Army and Navy nurses, male and female; but, primarily, the purpose of this legislation is to provide accommodations for discharged soldiers and sailors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had difficulty in learning the situation as to the use of these hospitals for discharged soldiers and sailors. I understand that the Army does not discharge a disabled soldier until he is fairly well. If that is the practice, what is the use of these hospitals for discharged soldiers and sailors?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is the understanding, but like many other understandings it is not very well lived up to. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it. The War Department has already discharged 81,000 soldiers who are sick and disabled. They have discharged 24,500 patients suffering from tuberculosis, and under the law these soldiers have the right to appeal to the War Risk Insurance Bureau for relief. On January 22, in answer to my inquiry, Col. Banks said that they had up to that time received applications for hospital treatment from 14,200 discharged soldiers. Is not that an answer to the gentleman's question?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; and for this reason——

Mr. GRIFFIN. They are coming in at the rate of 200 per day. The other day, in conference with the Senate committee, Col. Banks said that they had upward of 20,000 applications from sick and disabled discharged soldiers and sailors.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know there were many men drafted into the service who were rejected for physical ailments, such as tuberculosis, but these were men who were never really in the service. These hospitals are for the benefit of these men who had tuberculosis, but they were not fit to go into the service. The care of such persons should be continued by the States and local municipalities. There is no objection to providing facilities for the treatment of the soldier who received his ailment or his injuries in the service.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I beg the gentleman not to go into a small matter like that. That is such a small fragment of the great body of the soldiers who served in the trenches that it is small and picayune for us to bother with it. Under certain circumstances, it is true, it will become necessary to render aid to a few poor devils rejected by the surgeons after they were dragged into the service by the local boards, but this is too insignificant to be compared with the great body of sick and disabled discharged soldiers who are to be benefited. It strikes me as very small to compare it with the disabilities in the Army of 2,000,000 men who were over on the other side, 700,000 of whom were in the trenches. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. Will this measure provide ample facilities for all the sick and disabled soldiers?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The accommodations that are provided by this bill? The original bill as submitted by the Treasury Department, and which we passed with some changes, provided for fifty-five hundred beds in new construction at a cost of $10,000,000. We passed that in a lump sum, without any question, by a big vote. The bill went over to the Senate and there they strike out all after the enacting clause and write a new bill. They put in this bill the Chicago proposition for $3,000,000; they resurrect the Dawsonsprings proposition and put that in the bill for $1,500,000. The balance of the appropriation two millions and a half for various other projects. The total number of beds provided for in the Senate bill was about 9,341. Six thousand of these, however, were derived from Army camps to be surrendered.

I confess to you gentlemen that our attitude at first was hostile. In the last analysis, however, perhaps their method of handling the proposition was correct from the point of view that it is good policy always to designate the place and purpose of each appropriation. The House conferees' objection to the Senate's designation of places was not against the principle, but rather against the idea of specially naming projects which we had no opportunity to investigate on this side of the Capitol. Therefore, with respect to those projects a limitation proviso was agreed upon which virtually puts the burden of ultimate selection and adoption upon the Treasury Department. We also included the Corpus Christi project in that category. By the addition of the Corpus Christi proposition we gain 252 beds at an approximate cost of $600 per bed. We also provide 1,000 beds for immediate use by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to lease space from existing hospitals and sanatoria. In addition to this, an emergency fund is created to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase buildings and sites suitable for hospitals and sanatoria as the occasion may require, believing that with such a fund at his disposal he will be able, when the emergency arises, to take up at a moment's notice and without haggling suitable buildings at reasonable cost and not be at the mercy of land sharks and speculators. By these modifications the conference bill makes available 8,252 beds within six weeks and over 11,852 beds inside of one year. Thus by the new bill we have doubled the bed capacity and reduced the appropriation contained in the bill as passed by the House by $1,450,000.

RETURN OF THE RAILROADS.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Florida yield a minute to me?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have received the following letter from the Director General of Railroads about returning the railroads to the owners, and I ask that it be read at the desk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Washington, February 28, 1919.

MY DEAR JUDGE SIMS: As you are aware, there has been some inquiry as to whether there might be an immediate or precipitate return of the railroads to private management. The Railroad Administration has indicated, whenever this inquiry has been made, that it would not recommend that any such step be taken.

For your further information, I am glad to say that I have now discussed the matter with the President, and he has authorized me to state that not only will there be no sudden relinquishment of the railroads, but, further, that it is not his purpose to relinquish the railroads until there has been an opportunity to see whether a constructive permanent program of legislation is likely to be considered promptly and adopted within a reasonable time.

Very sincerely, yours,

WALKER D. HINES.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
Chairman House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object to that going into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. GARLAND. But I did not know the contents of the letter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said it would be read without objection, and nobody objected.

Mr. GARLAND. I move to expunge it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recognized for any such purpose.

HOSPITALS FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr Speaker, is there no opportunity for a Member of Congress to object to the reading of a letter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked the question if there was objection to the reading of the letter, and the Chair heard none.

Mr. GARLAND. Nobody knew what was in the letter.

The SPEAKER. Neither did the Chair.

Mr. GARLAND. I did not; but I know now what is in the letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not object now, after consent was given to read it. The question is on the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this conference report may have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made a point that no quorum is present.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, did I not have recognition before the point of order was made?

The SPEAKER. The point of order that no quorum is present is always in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, for the present I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all those who spoke on this conference report may have three legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. There is but one more legislative day in this Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. The request should be for three calendar days.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, is it necessary to indicate the nature of a protest in objecting to the extension of remarks or in extending them in the RECORD? I intend to answer if I may be permitted by inserting remarks in the RECORD the letter which has been inserted by the gentleman from Tennessee, and to present objections to the acceptance of the letter by Congress.

The SPEAKER. The letter was not accepted by Congress.

Mr. GARLAND. It was put into the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that when a letter is read it goes into the RECORD regardless.

Mr. GARLAND. Is it objectionable that I deny the facts?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, time was yielded to me by the gentleman from Florida, and I was in regular order to read it myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill have three calendar days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in connection with that I ask that my colleague, Mr. MCANDREWS, may be accorded that privilege.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman asks that the name of Mr. MCANDREWS be added. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. GARLAND. On the subject of the letter which was read in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m., Monday, March 3, 1919.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague, the late Representative BORLAND, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 3, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 620) providing for the consideration of H. R. 12352, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1166), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on Woman Suffrage, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 440) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1167), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 16216) granting a gratuity to members of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, Army Nurse Corps, Army field clerks, and naval reservists; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 16217) to authorize a lieu selection by the State of South Dakota of 160 acres on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, urging Congress to provide additional pay for soldiers and sailors discharged from the service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: Petition of W. S. Clark and 45 other citizens of Rutland, Vt., and vicinity, favoring Government ownership of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HILLIARD: Petition of G. W. Long and 121 other Denver (Colo.) residents, favoring the withdrawal of the American Army from Russia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUFKIN: Memorial of the General Court of Massachusetts, urging Congress to provide additional pay for soldiers and sailors discharged from the military service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SABATH: Petition of the Virden Commercial Club, of Virden, Macoupin County, Ill., favoring an emergency public-works board, to coordinate with and expedite national improvement; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STINESS: Petition of the Providence (R. I.) Engineering Society, protesting against the repeal of the daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. VARE: Petition of the Archbishop Ryan Assembly of Philadelphia, recommending the continuation of the appropriation for the United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 3, 1919.

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 1, 1919.)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE COAL PROBLEM.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments.

There is no economic problem of more importance to the American people than the production and distribution of bituminous and anthracite coal. Bituminous coal is scattered over a larger area of the earth than anthracite; the former is found in every section of this Republic, and it is, therefore, more difficult to monopolize its production and distribution. But anthracite coal is confined to one very limited spot of the Western Hemisphere, and the monopoly of its production and distribution is complete.

Anthracite coal is found in a small area in the State of Pennsylvania, embracing something like 300,000 acres. It is confined principally to four counties. The Manufactures Committee of the Senate devoted considerable time a year ago to the investigation of bituminous coal and sugar. That was during the unfortunate reign of Mr. Hoover and Dr. Garfield. Mr. Hoover has gone to Europe, happily for the American people, and the end of his interference with and control of the food supply of America will soon be at an end, while Dr. Garfield, bless his dear patriotic soul, has gone into the quiet shades of "innocuous desuetude."

The testimony taken and printed by the Manufactures Committee of the Senate on coal and sugar will be of great use to the Congress in dealing with these two questions, even in time of peace. I regret that the time was so limited that the committee during my chairmanship was unable to go as completely into the subject as the gravity and importance of the question demand. But we have taken volumes of testimony which has been printed, and I trust that the coming session of the new Congress may carry this work on to a successful and complete conclusion. Owing to my inability to have the testimony all printed in time for the individual members of the committee to go over it, I am unable to present a report from the committee, but I have gathered together certain facts which I trust will be of help to the next Congress in dealing with the question. I ask, Mr. President, permission to have the statement published in the RECORD, without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The principal anthracite coal lands known to be developed in North America are found in Pennsylvania. There is anthracite found west of Martinsburg, W. Va., and some near the Arctic Circle, but it is not now for the market, because the West Virginia anthracite is so friable and in such small veins as not to make it profitable, while the Canadian product is so distant from any transportation lines that it could not be marketed. These coal lands are principally in four counties—Schuylkill, Luzerne, Northumberland, and Lackawanna Counties. The original content of anthracite, conservatively estimated, was 26,000,000,000 tons. There has been taken to the surface about 4,000,000,000 tons, and there has been marketed 2,774,000,000 short tons, or about two and one-half billion long tons. The 1,000,000,000 tons of coal brought to the surface and not marketed represented small sizes that were dumped, much of which went into the streams and were washed away, and all triturated or pulverized coal, for which up to the present time there has been practically no market at all. The effort to convert this pulverized coal into briquettes has up to this time been more of an experiment than a success. It is estimated that there remains in the earth about 22,000,000,000 tons of anthracite coal in Pennsylvania. The percentage of coal to be won and marketed in the future depends largely upon improved engineering methods of holding up the surface by other methods than pillars of coal that are now principally depended upon to hold up the mining roofs while coal is taken from the breasts or chambers.

"The aggregate extent of the well-defined coal territory is over 300,000 acres. There are about 25,000 additional acres carrying more or less coal, some of which, because of its friable nature, will not be worked until the harder coal is less abundant.

"The anthracite territory has been principally divided into three fields—the Wyoming, Lehigh, and Schuylkill.

"1. The Wyoming, comprising the northern field, is traversed by the Lackawanna and Susquehanna Rivers.

"2. The Lehigh fields comprise territory found at an average of from 700 to 1,000 feet higher than either the Wyoming or the Schuylkill fields. They are all on what is known as the Broad Mountain, the backbone mountain of eastern Pennsylvania.

"3. The Schuylkill fields are divided by Broad Mountain. The northern Schuylkill field is along the Mahanoy and Shamokin Creeks. The main body of the southern Schuylkill field is drained by streams that flow into and make up the Schuylkill River. The great wealth of unmined coal is in this southern Schuylkill field, bounded on the south by Sharp Mountain and on the north by Broad Mountain.

"All of these fields except the southern of these two Schuylkill fields are under active development. The coal is much more accessible in the northern part of the Wyoming field and in the Lehigh field than in the southern part of the Wyoming field or in either of these two Schuylkill fields, except where the coal outcrops in the several fields.

"The anthracite production in the year 1917 was 89,443,277 tons, and for the year 1918 it was 86,338,136 tons, or a total for the two years of 175,781,413 tons.

"Seventy-two per cent of the production from the anthracite coal territory is controlled by eight transportation companies. Most of this coal land is owned by these transportation companies or their subsidiaries in fee. Notwithstanding the fact that the constitution of Pennsylvania prohibits a transportation company from engaging in mining, these transportation companies are in this business of not only transporting this coal but of mining it. The transportation companies rank in the following order, according to their holdings and production:

"The Reading (which is the holding company of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. and the Jersey Central, which in turn owns all of the stock of the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Co.);

"The Lehigh Valley;

"The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western;

"The Delaware & Hudson;

"The Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. (which owns and controls the Lehigh & New England);

"The Erie; and

"The New York, Ontario & Western.

"Among the things proved at the hearing was the fact that the Susquehanna Collieries Co., which produced 5¼ per cent of all of the coal mined, has taken over all the coal companies that heretofore were known as Pennsylvania companies; that is, companies that were formerly in the control of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"The Lehigh Valley, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, Delaware & Hudson, Jersey Central, Erie, Pennsylvania, and the New York, Ontario & Western Railroads transport the coal from the Wyoming field; the Lehigh Valley, the Jersey Central, and the Pennsylvania, from the Lehigh field. The coal from the northern Schuylkill field is carried by the Lehigh Valley, the Reading, and the Pennsylvania, and from the southern field by the Philadelphia & Reading, the Jersey Central, the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. (or the Lehigh & New England), and the Pennsylvania.

"The Reading owns and controls 51 per cent of all the unmined coal—that is, the coal in place—45 per cent through its subsidiary, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., and 6 per cent through its subsidiary, the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre. The total acreage owned and controlled by the Reading is 113,188, of which 96,687 acres are held in fee and 16,501 under lease. Of this holding, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. owns and controls 97,868 acres, of which 84,932 it holds in fee and 12,936 operated under lease. And the other subsidiary, the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre, owns and controls 14,320 acres, of which 11,755 are held in fee and 3,565 operated under lease.

"The Lehigh Valley owns and controls 42,000 acres of coal land, of which 25,000 acres are held in fee and 17,000 acres under lease.

"The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western owns and controls 13,922 acres of coal land, of which 10,500 acres are held in fee and 3,342 acres under lease.

"The Delaware & Hudson owns and controls 24,000 acres of coal land.

"The Lehigh & Navigation (the Lehigh & New England Railroad Co.) owns and controls 13,863 acres of coal land.

"The Erie owns and controls 18,600 acres.

"The New York, Ontario & Western owns and controls 7,000 acres in coal.

"The Susquehanna Collieries Co. owns and controls in coal 21,880 acres.

"The Girard estate owns in fee 12,780 acres, of which there are 4,880 in coal.

"The Locust Mountain Coal Co. paid to the Girard estate in royalties in the year 1918, $658,000; in the year 1917, $517,000; paying in the year 1918 on the average of $1.04 a ton royalty and in 1917, 83 cents a ton royalty. The total royalty received by the Girard estate for the year 1918 was $2,482,930.70. That was the amount of royalty paid to the Girard estate on a total of a little over 4,000 acres, the Locust Mountain Coal Co. paying $658,000 on a shipment of 629,742 tons. The total acreage under lease by the Locust Mountain Coal Co. is 390 acres; that is, the Locust Mountain Coal Co. is paying over $1,600 an acre annually on the lands they hold under lease. If the Locust Mountain Coal Co.'s shipment of 1919 equals that of 1918, it will receive an amount in excess of $1,600 an acre. The contracts with the Girard estate provide for a percentage of the selling price of the year previous; that is, the prevailing figure that they will receive for the coal mined from their property in 1919 will be based upon the high prices of coal in 1918. The first cost of the coal being so great in royalty means a correspondingly high price of coal to the consumer, as it is a well-established economic fact that nothing contributes so much in the final cost of any product as the initial cost.

"While the domination and control of the anthracite product, and the fact that 72 per cent of all the anthracite is produced and marketed by transportation companies, accounts largely for the present high price of coal, that is not the full story. These companies not only control 72 per cent of the production, but make it impossible for independent operators to compete with them on any fair basis. They produce coal in such quantities that they can control what is known as the 'cargo market,' the coal that is put in boats at tidewater. The customer wants a size of coal that is best adapted to his needs, whether it be steamboat, broken, stove, chestnut, pea, buckwheat, or rice. There being so many different sizes, the independent operator is not in a position to furnish the cargo sizes in sufficient quantity, unless either at the place of production or the point of delivery he accumulates cars of coal of that particular size. But when such cars are held beyond a certain day, the independent operator is charged demurrage, and that demurrage to the independent operator is a loss. But demurrage is no loss to the transportation companies, which only take the money out of one pocket and put it in the other. For instance, the Hudson Coal Co. operates lands owned and controlled by the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Co., but the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Co. owns and controls the Hudson Coal Co., so that demurrage charged against the Hudson Coal Co. is simply paid to its own owner and controller, the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Co. The result is that the independent operator is in no position to compete for the market where the coal is taken from tidal points by boats.

"Another handicap of the independent operator is that he is not in a position to accumulate large quantities of coal of various sizes in storage yards or bins. There was a time when the Lehigh Valley maintained and permitted the independent operator to use large storage bins at tidal points until such time as he had accumulated cargo lots. But there is no longer any such provision as that to put the independent operator on a competitive basis with the operating transportation companies.

"During the years 1917 and 1918, independent coal operators could have greatly increased their output had they been permitted to mine coal in close proximity to their workings. Their efforts to get this coal to mine for the market availed them nothing. It was coal that the transportation companies had no facilities themselves to mine.

"The pernicious evil of these transportation companies leasing and not developing is shown in the case of the lease of a 360-acre tract between Pottsville and Minersville. The Lehigh Valley has had that tract under lease since 1890, paying a minimum royalty of $21,000 a year. That company has paid on that lease in royalty and taxes about $600,000 and has not mined or shipped a pound of coal from that property or permitted anyone else to mine and ship from it.

"The nearest operating mine to tide, by the present all-rail route, is about 95 miles. The anthracite mine or mines farthest from tide can be reached by about 180 miles.

"Another evil is the 'dog-in-the-manger' attitude of these corporations. Not only do they have an advantage in holding their large percentage of the anthracite unmined coal in fee and under lease, so that individual operators can not get this land and mine it, but, with much of their own property undeveloped, they pursue a policy of reaching out and become the most aggressive competitors in getting control of lands, other than what they own or hold in fee, by leasing them. For instance, the Reading, which owns and controls more than 50 per cent of all the unmined anthracite, paid out $693,536 in 1918 in royalties on leases, although less than half of its own property was under development at the time.

"Millions of tons of coal could have been won to relieve the coal shortage of 1917 had the Fuel Administration used the despotic power given the President to compel the transportation companies to reclaim the culm banks. They have great banks carrying many of the small sizes of coal, commonly known as "dumps" or culm banks. No skilled labor is required to reclaim this coal from the bank and put it on board cars. One man can produce for the market three times as much coal from a culm bank as he could win of fresh from the mine. Many enterprising people were keen and anxious to reclaim this coal from the banks and put it on board cars, even offering excessive royalties. Yet, in spite of all the suffering growing out of the coal shortage, these appeals fell upon deaf ears. Not only were new enterprises denied the right to reclaim these culm banks, but in some cases operators actually dismantled their plants for want of material to keep them going, because transportation companies would not permit these culm banks to be reclaimed. This disregard of the public interest is due to two causes—the greed and cupidity of the mine owners and the inefficiency of the Fuel Administration.

"Other than transportation companies, the largest owner of unmined coal is what is known as the Girard estate. The Girard estate owns over 4,000 acres of coal-bearing land. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. has 13,000 acres in the southern anthracite field alone, and notwithstanding the fact that it is operating less than 1,000 of its own 13,000 acres in the southern anthracite field it is paying excessive royalties to control and operate nearly one-half of the Girard estate under lease.

"The Reading also is a tenant of the Girard estate, notwithstanding the fact that it has about 40,000 acres of its own undeveloped, practically virgin territory.

"The Girard estate receives annually in royalties an average of over $600 an acre on its 4,000 acres. Although the will of Stephen Girard intended to establish a great charity for orphan boys, the present management and operation of the Girard estate makes it one of the greatest curses to the householder. By reason of its commanding position in the coal business, the royalties received by the Girard estate fix the standard for high royalties. While the average cost of royalties on bituminous coal in Pennsylvania is only 10 cents a ton, the average cost of the royalties paid to the Girard estate is more than ten times that amount for anthracite coal mined for domestic purposes, thus causing this domestic necessity, which ought to go to the poor people at the lowest possible price, to be almost a luxury.

"The sale price of coal is controlled by what is sent out through a publication or folder called 'the circular.' These prices are known to the trade as 'circular prices.' The circular prices are published each month in the coal trade publications. They are the law of the business. 'The circular' is issued by the Reading Co.

"The Reading holds its large percentage of coal by reason of foreclosures of former holding companies of large interests. The financial interest under which these foreclosure proceedings were directed was Morgan & Co., of New York, affiliated with the banking house of Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia, and practically the same directors control all the different corporations involved.

"All facts set forth in the above report are based upon testimony and geological data bearing upon the anthracite coal situation.
